In the critical biblical literature of the century few books have been so unqualifiedly endorsed as

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Commentary

On the Old and New Testaments. It has been tried, tested and proven, during one of the most active periods ever known in biblical research. That it has not been found wanting is evident in the still unabated demand. At considerable outlay we have issued a new edition of this valuable work in clear type, attractively bound, and at a price much lower than any complete commentary ever before issued.

In Extra Fine English Cloth, sprinkled edge, the full set, (4 vols.).....$ 8.00
In Half Morocco, the full set, (4 vols.)..... 10 00

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments, by Jamieson, Fausset & Brown. It contains notes of the choicest and richest character on all parts of the Holy Bible. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness."—Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., in "Aids to Bible Study."

The leading clergymen and college professors of the country unite with Dr. Vincent in placing this commentary in the first rank of all biblical aids.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a y one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it n a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

The Inter Ocean

PUBLISHED DAILY. THE LEADING REPUBLICAN PAPER OF THE NORTHWEST.

Price, by mail, postpaid.....$8.00 per year.

It also publishes a Semi-Weekly and Weekly Edition.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY INTER OCEAN

Is published on MONDAYS and THURSDAYS, and beside the news condensed from the Daily, it contains many special features of great value to those so situated that they can not secure the Daily every day.

THE WEEKLY INTER OCEAN

Has the LARGEST CIRCULATION of any weekly paper west of New York. This edition is edited with great care, the endeavor being to make it both as to its NEWS AND LITERARY FEATURES,

A MODEL FAMILY NEWSPAPER,

Sound and wholesome in every respect. It contains each week a very carefully prepared summary of the NEWS OF THE WORLD, and the VERY BEST LITERARY MATTER that MONEY CAN BUY. Among its special departments THE FARM AND HOME, WOMAN'S KINGDOM, and THE CURIOSITY SHOP are superior to any such departments in any other American publication.

The popularity of THE WEEKLY INTER OCEAN is shown by the fact that it has subscribers in EVERY STATE AND TERRITORY IN THE UNION, AND MANY IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES. It has achieved this great success by a conscientious endeavor to faithfully serve its readers. It aims to become the friend of every member of the family, and at the same time act the part of instructor and entertainer for the home circle. How well it has filled these parts hundreds of thousands of readers can testify, and many of them do testify in beautiful and grateful letters to the Editor.

THE MARKET REPORTS OF ALL EDITIONS OF THE INTER OCEAN ARE RELIABLE AND COMPLETE.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE AND THE INTER OCEAN.

For the benefit of subscribers to THE INTER OCEAN special arrangements have been made with the publishers of SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE, by which we can furnish that popular and elegant publication with THE WEEKLY INTER OCEAN, both for one year, for THREE DOLLARS ($3.00). The Magazine is illustrated in the highest style of art, and is one of the best published in America.

The American Agriculturist and The Inter Ocean.

We have also made arrangements with the publisher of THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST, by which that periodical is furnished with THE WEEKLY INTER OCEAN, both for one year, for ONE DOLLAR AND SIXTY CENTS ($1.60). THE AGRICULTURIST has maintained its position at the head of American farm journals for OVER THIRTY YEARS, and is now better than ever before.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY in any of these COMBINATIONS is $1.50 MORE than THE WEEKLY.

Do not forget that IN 1888 A PRESIDENT WILL BE ELECTED, and events of great importance are portending in Europe. At such times every family should have a thoroughly reliable newspaper. The fathers and mothers need it as well as the children. Send for sample copy of THE INTER OCEAN.

Remittances may be made at our risk, either by draft, express, postoffice order, express orders, postal notes, or registered letter. Address

FARM NOTES.

WHAT WILL BURST A GUN.

In bravado a young man placed the muzzle of his fowling piece under the water and fired the charge. The result was the bursting of the barrel near the breech, and the mutilation of his hand. Another placed and held the muzzle of his gun square against a piece of plate window glass, and fired the charge—powder and bullet. The glass was shattered, so was the gun barrel. Another instance was that of an experimenter who had heard that a candle could be fired from the barrel of a gun through an inch board. He drove a candle into the muzzle of the gun, fired, and the explosion split the barrel almost its entire length, and did not even drive the candle from the muzzle.

TO CUT GLASS IN ANY SHAPE.—Mark out on the glass the line which is to be cut, so that it may be easily followed. Then heat the end of a slender glass rod, or of a rat-tail file, to redness in the flame of a gas lamp, and bring the hot end in contact with the glass, a little in advance of the crack, exerting a little pressure. The sudden expansion of the glass by the heat communicated to it will cause the crack to jump to the rod; advance the rod a little, and the crack will follow. In this way, by moving the hot point little by little, the crack can be made to follow it to the line which it is desired to traverse; and then by following this line the desired result can be attained without much difficulty. When it is found that the crack does not follow promptly, the rod must be held a few minutes in the flame and again applied. Care must be taken not to advance the hot point too far at each step. With a little practice and the exercise of patience, a crack may be induced to travel anywhere over a glass surface by this simple method, which is in common use in the laboratory for trimming and utilizing broken beakers and other glassware which would otherwise be useless.

TREATMENT OF NEW FILES.—A new file should be used with a light pressure until the very thin sharp edges are worn off, after which a heavier pressure may be used with much less danger of the teeth crumbling at the top or breaking off at the base. Every filer should keep a partially worn file to use first on chilled surfaces or gritty skin of castings, or on a weld where borax or similar fluxes have been employed, or on the glazed surface of saws after gumming.

STOVE POLISH.—The fine polish given stoves by those skilled in the art, is produced as follows: Have a thin mixture of black varnish and turpentine; apply this with a paint or varnish brush to a portion of the stove; then with a cloth dust this over with pulverized British lustre or stove polish: then rub with a dry brush. The stove must be perfectly cold. The stove dealers buy the pulverized stove polish, which is carburet of iron, in 25 lb. packages. The process conducted in this manner is quite brief, but gives beautiful results.

TO PREVENT IRON OR STEEL FROM RUST.—A method of preventing iron or steel from rusting is to heat it to a temperature of boiling water and cover it with a good coat of copal varnish. Let it stand at this temperature for half an hour or so, and then rub off the varnish while hot with a soft rag. The varnish fills the pores of the iron, thus sheltering them so as to be impervious to moisture. Another method is to heat the metal so as to melt beeswax when rubbed upon it, letting it remain, after being well rubbed, until it is about to harden, and then rub off with a coarse woolen cloth.

LITTLE THINGS WORTH KNOWING.—Many workingmen meet with little casualties, sprains being very common. Hot water is the best thing that can be used to heal a sprain or bruise. The wounded part should be placed in water as hot as can be borne for fifteen or twenty minutes, and in all ordinary cases the pain will gradually disappear. Hot water applied by means of cloths is a sovereign remedy for neuralgia and pleurisy pains. For burns or scalds apply cloths well saturated with cool alum water, keeping the injured parts covered from the air.

WRITING ON METALS.—Take half a pound of nitric acid and one ounce muriatic acid. Mix and shake well together, and then it is ready for use. Cover the place you wish to mark with melted beeswax; when cold, write your inscription plainly in the wax, clear to the metal, with a sharp instrument. Then apply the mixed acids with a feather, carefully filling each letter. Let it remain from one to ten hours, according to the appearance desired; then wash and remove the wax.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The President sent to the Senate Thursday the nomination of Edward S. Bragg, of Wisconsin, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Mexico.

In the House Mr. Blount, of Georgia, from the Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads, reported a bill relating to permissible marks, printing or writing upon second, third and fourth-class matter.

The contested seat which will attract the most attention in the present House is that of Smalls against Elliott from the Seventh District of South Carolina. According to the census of 1880 this district contained 6,304 white voters and 31,203 colored voters. It is the product of the gerrymanders of the Democratic Legislature of 1880, when the State was cut up in such a shameful manner in order to return six Democratic Congressmen out of a possible seven. In order to get a large share of the Negro population in the Seventh District counties and townships connected only by strips of sand visible at low tide were added together. It is from this district that Elliott holds a seat in the present Congress on a vote as returned of 6,493 Democratic to 5,961 Republican. His seat is contested by ex-Congressman Smalls, an educated Negro, who holds large property interests in the district.

THE STORM.

Railroad men agree that the storm of Jan. 12 was quite the worst ever known in the Northwest for their business. It extended from the Rocky Mountains to Lake Michigan, but its worst effects are felt in Dakota and Minnesota.

Reports from Huron, of Jan. 12 stated that in all the seven years of the settlement of this portion of Dakota there has been no storm approaching the severity of the one now pelting us. The wind has been a mile a minute. It has been impossible to see across the street, or even half way. No one goes out. They have just settled down to wait the storm's end. Several children narrowly escaped death at noon when schools were dismissed for the day. About ten of the children were bewildred and lost before they had gone a hundred yards. A general alarm was sounded, and many persons turned out to find them. They went in squads of a dozen, each man holding on to a long rope and marching by the front. In this way each squad covered about a hundred feet, and marching back and forth, all but one were found. This one is believed to be perishing to-night, within a quarter of a mile of a hundred houses. Friends are prosecuting the search, hoping to find her.

From Faulkton, D. T., Jan. 13, came the report: The most terrific storm ever witnessed in this latitude has been upon us for the last forty-eight hours. It reached its worst yesterday, and from 10 o'clock until dark there was not ten minutes that buildings on the opposite side of the street could be seen. The mercury gradually dropped to 16 below. The teachers and most of the school of the two lower departments of our schools were compelled to remain in one of the school rooms all night, provisions being carried to them. Ropes were stretched from the corner of Main Street to the school house to enable those carrying provisions to go and come with safety. It was impossible to reach the railroad station after 4 o'clock, and the agent and several others were compelled to remain over night without dinner or supper. No definite reports of loss of life have been received, though it is believed some must have perished.

Northern and Western Iowa suffered from one of the worst snow blockades it has known for years. About 4 o'clock the morning of the 13th an arctic hurricane swept over that section. In Dubuque it amounted almost to a cyclone. Shutters and gates were torn from their hinges and hurled hither and thither. The gale finally subsided somewhat, and was followed by a cold wave which sent the mercury down to 20 degrees below zero. As a result there is a complete embargo upon railroad traffic all over Northwestern Iowa.

The snowfall Thursday was so heavy at Superior, Wis., that some of the inhabitants had to tunnel out of their dwellings.

At Winnipeg, Manitoba, the night of the 10th was the coldest of the season, the thermometer going down below 50. A man named McDonald, a carpenter, was found frozen to death in his bed the next morning.

Several casualties are reported from Omaha of people being lost in the storm and perishing in the cold.

Three children of John Denlinger, of Garrison, Neb., were lost on their way home from school Thursday. One was frozen to death, but the others may recover.

Emil Gilbertson, formerly of Chicago, was frozen to death two miles west of Hitchcock, Dakota, Thursday night, while on his way to his claim.

LATER.—Reports up to Monday night swell the horrors of the storm. A list of 140 dead had been reported at that time, and as reports continue to come in and many are yet missing, it is feared the list will be sadly lengthened.

COUNTRY.

Of the population of Dakota 208,000 are in North Dakota and 360,000 are in South Dakota.

The Black Hills country is just recovering from a siege of weather, said to be the coldest experienced in that country by white men.

The South Carolina Legislature has passed a bill pensioning all disabled soldiers in that State who fought in the army or navy of the Confederacy. It will cost $50,000 annually.

Resolutions approving the nomination of Mr. Lamar for the Supreme Bench, and inviting Jefferson Davis and his family to visit Jackson during the session, were passed Thursday by the Mississippi Legislature.

All the printers on the Louisville Courier Journal office but three struck Thursday night because a man formerly employed on the New York Tribune was brought to instruct them in the use of the type-setting machines. The management was prepared, and filled their strikers' places with new men.

The thirteen gas companies of Boston are being organized into a trust. The property of the syndicate is valued at $14,000,000.

Earthquake shocks were felt Thursday morning at Columbia, Charleston, Charlotte, and Summerville, S. C. Loud detonations accompanied the vibrations at Columbia, and people rushed wildly into the street.

The Florida Sub-tropical Exposition was opened at Jacksonville, Fla., Thursday, Jan. 12, with the most impressive ceremonies and demonstration ever witnessed in the State. The procession, which formed in the park and marched through the splendidly decorated streets to the exposition grounds, was more than a mile in length, and consisted of large bodies of infantry and artillery, headed by bands of music, the Governor and ex-Governor of the State, Generals Spinner and Schofield, the judges of the State and Federal Courts, the mayors of a number of Southern cities, and a large number of other distinguished citizens in carriages. The pageant was witnessed by fully 30,000 people.

An engine on the Union Pacific, drawing a train of ore down the mountain toward St. Elmo, Col., Wednesday afternoon, became unmanageable, the air brakes were useless, and the train dashed down the slope for six miles at a sixty-mile rate, jumping from the track at St. Elmo, instantly killing the engineer and fireman in the wreck.

Two persons wounded in the railway accident near Haverhill, Mass., died Thursday, making twelve victims. Two other sufferers are not expected to recover.

The Fourteenth Regiment Armory at Columbus, Ohio, in which was being held the exposition of the Poultry, Kennel and Pet Stock Association, was burned Thursday morning. Rifles, uniforms, and 1,000 rounds of ammunition were destroyed, the flying bullets making dangerous work for the firemen. A number of valuable dogs, chickens, and pigeons were cremated. Sir Charles, the finest St. Bernard in America, owned by H. L. Goodman, of Chicago, perished in the flames.

At Lima, Ohio, Thursday morning George Knox was burned to death, his clothing igniting while he was building a fire.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000.000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.
The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.
TERMS: $2.00 per year; strictly in advance, $1.50. Special terms to clubs. Send for sample copy.

Father S. Maguire, formerly an eminent Catholic priest of Chicago, has renounced Catholicism and all orthodox faiths, and together with Dr. O. H. Harris, of Newman, Ill., will establish a new church, to be known as "Progressive Christians." Father Maguire is over seventy years of age, and for fifty years served in important departments of the Prussian government, but he should be more economical. In Freemasonry he can find all that his soul desires now that he has renounced all religion that has Christ in it.

Within a few days fires have broken out in two of the great public school buildings of Chicago, and in each case the thousand or more children were marched out safely and in general good order, securing even their wraps. The wonderful control of the lady teachers in such an emergency deserves all praise, and shows a steadiness of nerve as admirable as the devotion of the Dakota teachers who perished in the late storm endeaving to protect their charge. It shows also the capabilities of our children under a proper discipline. But from these schools the Word of God is shut away by an infamous local regulation dictated by Catholics and German infidel politicians. With the Bible restored to its place as the text book of morals and faith, what heroic spirits might not such children become!

The series of county farmer's institutes begun in Illinois by the State Board of Agriculture, are an improvement upon the county fair which every intelligent farmer will be quick to improve. The latter has too generally come into the hands of sharpers and jockeys, and men on the catch-penny principle, and in many parts falling into decay. These intitutes, held in a leisure season, call out the best ideas of practical men whose exchange of experiences must be of great value. Had the grange followed such worthy ends instead of exhausting the patience and shocking the moral sense of mankind on its frivolous secrecy and pagan ceremony it might have continued a power for good among our agriculturists.

The German Crown Prince William, whose throat has being giving more vexation to the world of daily-press readers than to its owner, is living quietly by the sea at San Remo, Italy. The London Illustrated News has lately published a number of fine engravings which picture for us his quiet, homelike life. It is said of him that, having been through three wars, the Danish, Austrian and French, he has become imbued with a veritable horror for the battle field. Should he live to succeed his aged father, the Emperor, the stern military autocracy of Bismarck would be broken, and the government would not engage in another such contest with the representatives of the people for the extension of the military rule. The whole world has an interest in suppressing war and its preparations. Let us therefore pray for the recovery of the Crown Prince.

Last Wednesday the attention of Mayor Roche, of this city, being called to some of the more shameless of the vile theatrical bills posted about Chicago, an ordinance of 1884 prohibiting such indecencies was hunted up, and the license of the bill-posting company taken away. It was restored again in a day or two on the good promises of the bill-stickers, and hereafter all such bills must be submitted to police inspection. The Central W. C. T. U., over which Mrs. Carse, the temperance temple builder presides, sent the mayor a hearty vote of thanks: "for this movement in behalf of decency and purity. As Christian mothers we thank you for thus removing the temptation, that assails through the eye, from our boys. Be assured, that in this and in all your other efforts for the enforcement of law, and to make our city a safer place for children to grow up in, you have our heartfelt sympathy, co-operation, and prayers." While they had the ear of Mr. Roche, they called his attention to the non-enforcement of the law against selling tobacco to minors. His honor is also respectfully requested to note the pictures in most of the cigar stores which are more vile and lewd if possible than the theater bills. Can not these nuisances be suppressed?

The Reading strike seems to be far from settlement. The company have resumed work in several of their mines and have no trouble to move the coal. President Austin Corbin has in times past, it is said, been favorable toward the labor societies, but he seems now convinced that the Knights of Labor cannot profitably run a railroad which they do not own. The priests and the local tradesmen are reported as opposing the strikers; and the latter claim in defense that the coal rings are fighting to kill their lodge, which is perhaps true, since the lodge began the black-flag war. This whole strike business must appear most unreasonable to thoughtful workingmen. Last year 884 strikes were reported, involving 340,000 men and costing them millions of money. But four out of six of these strikers gained their demand, often at heavy cost. The old-fashioned, ready-witted Yankee would never continue such a losing business; and if as much thought were given toward devising a fair means of settlement as is now squandered on a secret order, the relations of employe and employed would be more happy.

General Beauregard has for years been advertised as superintending, along with General Early, the Louisiana State Lottery at New Orleans. A confederate veteran lately wrote, enclosing a dollar for a lottery ticket, saying that he had fought under the General for four years, and he wanted him to select a ticket that would draw a prize in the lottery. It is said that Beauregard sent back the ticket as requested, but wrote: "My Dear Old Comrade: If you will stick to the Louisiana Lottery you will be as poor as you were at the close of the cruel war, and you will not have enough left to load a popgun." How many are ready to condemn Beauregard for his inconsistency, who practice the same deception as reputed members of the lodge. Beauregard knows the lottery, which the reputation of his name is used to advertise, is a fraud, and unlawful in every State of the Union, with one exception; many, who are esteemed as good men in the church and in society, believe the lodge to be a lie and a fraud, yet allow their names to give it repute and character among men. O friends, you whom the fear of man keeps from openly renouncing so great an iniquity, how shall you answer to God for the souls of our precious young men who are stumbling over your example into hell!

MORAL HEROES.

BY REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.

The patriot and soldier whose heart does not quail
In the fierce battle-line where thousands must bleed,
But rushes to meet the thick, murderous hail,
Is honored and crowned as a hero indeed.

But is he not braver who follows the Right,
And follows it singly wherever 'tis shown?
Who combats the Wrong with courage and might,
Whether joined by the crowd, or fighting alone?

Aye, bravest are they, who, loyal of soul,
Advance to the fray as conscience commands,
And press with their might right on to the goal,
Whatever the Right and its banner withstands.

Misjudged are they oft, derided and slain;
But gentle as bold, and fearless as meek,
They calmly endure all scorning and pain;
Most joyful in tears, most mighty when weak.

The warrior in battle with daring is fired,
By numbers who rush 'mid the noise to the fray:
The hero of conscience by Duty inspired,
Will fight, though alone, till his life's latest day.

No trumpet, no cannon, no death-laden air
Is needed to fire the languishing soul
Of the martyr for truth, and his spirit to stir
For the conflicts which lie in his path to the goal.

Ah, few are the fields where Righteousness pleads
With weapons of steel for conscience and right;
And few are the heroes on fierce neighing steeds,
Who, emboldened by love, rush on to the fight.

The weapons of Truth are burnished with light,
And tempered with grace in the armory above;
The heroes who wield them are heralds of peace,
And the conquests they win are triumphs of love.

FREEMASONRY UNSCRIPTURAL AND ANTI-CHRISTIAN.

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

Undoubtedly the public have right to examine into the teachings of Freemasonry, and to observe the character and conduct of its members. Those whose eyes have been opened to the real nature and tendency of this institution, should not hesitate to raise their voices against it. Especially do we need to keep it continually before the minds of the people that the lodge is contrary to, and subversive of, the Christian religion. This proposition can hardly be denied by any one who has given the subject careful thought. In order to clearly exhibit the teachings of the Bible on the subject, and show its antagonism to the lodge, I offer the following arguments:

ARGUMENT I.—The Bible represents Jesus Christ alone as the foundation and source of salvation, and condemns every humanly devised system of religion which proposes to save men on other terms than those laid down in the Gospel. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." (Acts 16: 31.) "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4: 12.) Paul says: "If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." (Gal. 1: 9.)

That Masonry is a religion has often been shown from the testimony of her leading men. General B. F. Butler, a Mason of 33 degrees, in a public speech at Lynn, Mass., Nov. 3, 1878, said: "Masonry is a religion of the highest and noblest type." Mackey says: "Masonry is undoubtedly a religious institution." (Masonic Jurisprudence, page 95.) Again he says: "The religion of Masonry is pure theism." (Lexicon, page 404.) Webb, the father of American Masonry, declares: "So broad is the religion of Masonry, and so carefully are all sectarian tenets excluded from the system, that the Christian, the Jew, the Mohammedan, in all their numberless sects and divisions, may and do harmoniously combine, in its moral and intellectual work, with the Parsee, the Confucian, and the worshiper of Deity in every form." (Webb's Monitor, page 285.)

A belief in God constitutes the Masonic creed. (Mackey's Ritualist, page 44.) Paine and Voltaire believed in a Deity, but were bitter enemies to Christianity and the Bible. So Masonry acknowledges God, but rejects his Son. Christ says: "He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him." (John 5: 23.) Masonry teaches salvation by the common gavel and good works, without Christ. Proof: "The common gavel is an instrument made use of by operative Masons to break off the corners of rough stones, the better to fit them for the builder's use; but we, as Free and Accepted Masons, are taught to use it for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting our minds as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." (Sickel's Monitor, pages 31–5) Quotations might be multiplied; but these are sufficient to show that Masonry is a religion, proposing itself as a panacea for all human ills, and promising salvation without Christ. Thrown into a syllogism the argument stands thus:

1. The Bible condemns any other religion than the Gospel of Christ.

2. Masonry is another religion, according to its own declarations.

3. Therefore, the Bible condemns the religion of Masonry.

ARGUMENT II.—According to the Bible, it is the duty of the Christian to "keep himself unspotted from the world." (James 1: 27.) That is to say, he must not allow himself to be contaminated by the evil that is in the world. Now, when he joins a Masonic lodge he enters an institution composed of all kinds of worldly and wicked men. Among them may be found infidels, Jews, Turks, pagans, Mohammedans, persons of every grade of religion and irreligion, morality and immorality; including, it may be, drunkards, gamblers, rakes, libertines, etc. And no Christian man can habitually associate with such characters without having his moral sensibilities impaired. He will necessarily receive spots from the world. Hence, he should keep out of the lodge. Notice:

1. The Bible requires that we, as Christians, should keep ourselves unspotted from the world.

2. In the associations of the lodge we cannot but receive spots from the world.

3. Therefore, the Bible requires that we should have nothing to do with the lodge.

ARGUMENT III.—Paul says: "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." (Eph. 5: 11.) I need not use many words in showing that Masonry is an unfruitful work of darkness. It is unfruitful, because it has not been productive of good. It has made no great discoveries in science and nature. It has produced none of the great inventions of modern times. It has never made the proud humble, the disobedient dutiful, the drunkard sober, the dishonest just, the profligate prudent, the revengeful forgiving, nor the miserable happy. And its charitable and benevolent work could have been done just as well without secrecy, oaths, curses, threats, penalties, etc. Masonry is a work of darkness because its inside teachings are hidden under the veil of secrecy. It has its midnight conclaves, secret grips, mysterious passwords, etc. If its objects and principles are pure and noble, why should they be kept in darkness and secrecy? "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." (John 3: 19.) Let it be observed:

1. We are commanded in the Scriptures to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

2. Masonry is an unfruitful work of darkness.

3. Therefore, we are commanded to have no fellowship with Masonry.

ARGUMENT IV.—It is written in the Scriptures, "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks unto God and the Father by him." (Col. 3: 17.) This requires that all our words and acts of worship be in the name of Christ. It is well known that the name of Christ is carefully excluded from Masonic prayers; and in passages of Scripture used in Masonic ceremonies, where the name of Christ occurs it is stricken out. How, then, can a Christian engage in such worship?

1. The Scriptures condemn all worship not in the name of Christ.

2. The worship of the lodge is not in the name of Christ.

3. Therefore, the Scriptures condemn the worship of the lodge.

ARGUMENT V.—Our Lord Jesus Christ said: "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing." (John 18: 20.) This is plain and explicit. He who desires to follow the Saviour in all things can surely find no difficulty in judging wherein safety appears. The argument from this passage, stated in syllogistic form is:

1. Secret methods, plans, conclaves, abjurations, etc., are contrary to the example and precepts of Christ.

2. Masonry is characterized by secret methods, plans, conclaves, abjurations, etc.

3. Therefore, Masonry is contrary to the example and precepts of Christ.

Weatherford, Texas.

CHURCH UNITY.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The motto of the Christian Conference of the American Evangelical Alliance was: "Unum corpus sumus in Christo." (We are one body in Christ.) This suggests the idea of living unity. It is not such a unity as the frost produces when it binds up into a dead, congealed, heterogeneous mass stones and straw, pearls and pepples, gold and silver, iron and clay—substances that have nothing in common. It is not the unity of the church of Rome—a perfect organization, but wanting in life. It is not simply an agreement to differ, the lying down of the lion and the lamb, each unchanged in nature. It is the unity of life. It has its seat in the heart. It has first "one mind," then "one mouth." "I will give them one heart and one way," is the promise by the prophet. "That they may be one as we are" was the Saviour's prayer. "Of one heart and one soul" is the apostle's ideal. To realize this it is necessary:

1. That there be agreement as to the great doctrines of revelation. There are two classes of revealed truths, fundamental and circumstantial. In the latter a forced uniformity is neither possible nor desirable. It will be remembered that Charles V., after a long and troublous reign, in which he tried to quench the light of the reformation and make all think alike, resigned his crown and retired to a Spanish cloister. Here he tried to make two time-pieces go alike. Failing, he exclaimed, "What a fool I was to attempt to make men think alike, when I cannot make two clocks go alike." No two heads of wheat are alike; no two leaves, no two men, and no two Christians. Unity in variety is a law in nature and grace. In the first there must be perfect concord. "To the law and to the testimony."

At first the church's creed was brief and simple, embracing a few of the leading fundamental doctrines of the Bible. But in process of time false doctrines were promulgated, and the Scriptures were misinterpreted to make them countenance these doctrines; and hence it became necessary for the church to enlarge her creed from time to time, and declare distinctly and explicitly the teaching of Scriptures. The church's creed arose out of controversy. It was not for the Bible, but for her understanding of the Bible that the church contended. In the fourth century the Arian heresy arose. Arius taught that Christ was only a created being. Accordingly, the first ecumenical council was called at Nice 325 A.D. This council decided that "Christ is very God of very God." That is the corner-stone in the church's foundation. Then the Apollinarian heresy arose—the denial of Christ's perfect humanity. The second ecumenical council was called at Constantinople 381 A. D. This council decided that the Scriptures teach that "Christ had a true body and a reasonable soul"—"very man of very man." Then the Nestorian heresy arose—the separation of the two natures of Christ into two persons. And the third ecumenical council was called at Ephesus 431 A. D. This council defended the unity of Christ's person. Then the Monophysite heresy arose—the denial of the two distinct natures of Christ—and the fourth ecumenical council was called at Chalcedon 451 A. D. This council decided that Christ has "two distinct natures but one person forever." It also gave a deliverance respecting the person and office of the Holy Spirit. This council represents the high-tide mark of the church's attainments in the early centuries.

These decisions are granite blocks in the church's foundation. On the 31st of October, 1517, when Martin Luther nailed his ninety-five theses to the door of Wittemburg Cathedral, a large addition was made. Great contributions were made in the Christian Institutes of John Calvin, the Heidelberg Catechism and the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England. The Augsburg Confession represents the attainments of the church in the First Reformation. The Westminster Assembly was called by the Long Parliament, and convened in the chapel of Henry VII., July 1, 1643. It consisted of one hundred and twenty-one clergymen and thirty laymen, ten of whom were lords and twenty commoners, together with four clerical and two lay commissioners from the Church of Scotland. The assembly is described as learned, faithful and pious. Their first act was to swear the Solemn League and Covenant. They continued their sessions until 1649. They submitted the Directory of Public Worship to Parliament in 1644; the Confession of Faith in 1646; the Shorter Catechism in 1647; and the Larger Catechism in 1648. They did not aim at originality, but fidelity. It was not their purpose to draw out these doctrines from their own minds as the spider draws her web from her own bowels, but only to gather up and state in systematic order the doctrines of their predecessors. The doctrines that were so ably defended by Luther and Knox and so powerfully stated by Calvin were the doctrines of Augustine, Athanasius, Huss and Jerome. And the doctrines of this assembly were those of the former divines. So that the Westminster Assembly represents the attainments of the church up to that time. * * * *

2. There must be harmony as to the manner of worship.

The finite mind is not competent to determine what worship will be acceptable to an infinite God. Divinely appointed forms are to be observed. Moses was to make all things according to the pattern shown to him in the mount. The New Testament church is to observe "all the forms and all the ordinances of the house." Martin Luther came out of the church of Rome on this principle, "We must have nothing in the worship of God except what he has commanded." The Westminster Assembly decided that "the sins forbidden in the Second Commandment are the worshiping of God by images or any other way not appointed in his Word."

All are agreed that worship consists in the reading and preaching of the Word, the sacraments, baptism and the Lord's supper, prayer and praise. With reference to these there is general agreement among the Reformed churches, barring the matter and manner of praise. * * * * * *

3. There must be co-operation in the church's work.

The Bible makes no provision for a divided church. These divisions originated in sin and have been productive of much harm. And the time is coming when "for the divisions of Reuben there will be great searchings of heart," when the watchmen on Zion's wall shall see eye to eye and sing together with one voice. The church as one phalanx should go forward against the common foe. The keynote of the Christian Conference was, "The enemy is massing his forces; the church must unite her forces to meet him."

4. There must be one spirit of life. "Ye are the body of Christ." "We have all been baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles," and "have all been made to drink of that selfsame Spirit." The Spirit was poured out on Pentecost and "the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul." Let the Spirit be poured out again in like manner, and all believers will continue steadfast "in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and prayers." This is the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

THE SIN OF THE NATION.

BY P. F. THURBER.

Taking an oath or pledge to do anything, either good or bad, not knowing what it is, is sin: and it must be confessed as sin. See Lev. 5:1, 5.

Not long ago I was talking with a man who had taken an oath of allegiance to support the Constitution of the United States and of the State of Iowa. I asked him if he did not think that the obligation which he had taken in joining a secret society was unconstitutional. To my surprise he answered, "I don't know what the Constitution is." If we should ask the same question to the millions of foreign-born citizens who have taken the oath to support the Constitution, how many would answer, "I knew nothing about the Constitution when I took the oath to support it?" Is not this the reason why so many of our foreign-born population are so lawless?

Here is the sin, folly and danger of this nation. No one should be allowed citizenship and a vote who does not know the Constitution and is not loyal to it, or who will not stand up for his neighbor's rights as well as his own. Here is work for all who are loyal to God or their country. Preach the Constitution and the duty of understanding it before they are sworn to support it.

No loyal citizen can join a mob to punish a criminal, because the Constitution declares that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. Nor can he join a secret society because the Constitution declares that the freedom of speech and of the press shall be abridged in no manner. Every obligation taken in a secret society which hinders you or any one else from speaking and publishing your honest sentiments, is unconstitutional and not binding. Any person who has belonged to a secret order and believes it is a humbug, a swindle,a waste of time and money, or anti-republican or anti-Christian, has a perfect right to say so and every loyal citizen will support him.

What we want then is a public sentiment and law which will require a man to understand the Constitution before pledging himself to support it, and a law to prohibit and punish the crime of giving or taking an obligation abridging the freedom of speech, or an obligation, the nature and extent of which is not known to the one receiving it before it was taken.

THE LEGAL STATUS OF THE BOYCOTT.

As the United States Supreme court has in consideration whether the boycott shall be considered a common conspiracy, the following opinion of Judge Brown, of New York, as quoted in the Independent some time since, will be read with interest. The Independent says:

Judge Brown, of the District Court of the United States for the Southern district of New York, has recently made a very clear statement in regard to the unlawfulness of boycotting. The case before him was a motion to vacate the arrest of John McKenna, James E. Quinn and others styling themselves the "Executive Board of the Ocean Association of the Longshoremen's Union." These parties had been arrested in an action brought against them by the "Old Dominion Steamship Company," to recover $20,000 damages, as the result of a boycott which they had established to the injury of the company engaged in the business of a common carrier.

The complaint of the plaintiff on which the arrest was made, as stated by Judge Brown, sets forth the following facts, as the cause of the action against the defendants:

"The plaintiff was engaged in the legal calling of common carrier, owning vessels, lighters, and other craft used in its business, in the employment of which numerous workmen were necessary, who, as the complaint avers, were employed 'upon terms as to wages which were just and satisfactory.'

"The defendants, not being in plaintiff's employ, and without any legal justification, so far as appears—a mere dispute about wages, the merits of which are not stated, not being any legal justification—procured plaintiff's workmen in this city and in Southern ports to quit work in a body for the purpose of inflicting injury and damage upon the plaintiff until it should accede to the defendants' demands, which the plaintiff was under no obligation to grant, and that such procurement of workmen to quit work, designed to inflict injury on the plaintiff and not being justified, constituted in law a malicious and illegal interference with the plaintiff's business which is actionable.

"After the plaintiff's workmen, through the defendants' procurement, had quit work, the defendants, for the further unlawful purpose of compelling the plaintiff to pay such a rate of wages as they might demand, declared a boycott of the plaintiff's business, and attempted to prevent the plaintiff from carrying on any business as common carriers, or from using or employing its vessels, lighters, etc., in that business, and endeavored to stop all dealings of other persons with the plaintiff by sending threatening notices or messages to its various customers and patrons, and to the agents of various steamship lines, and to wharfingers and warehousemen usually dealing with the plaintiff, designed to intimidate them from having any dealings with it through threats of loss and expense in case they dealt with plaintiff by receiving, sharing, or transmitting its goods or otherwise; and that various persons were deterred from dealing with the plaintiff in consequence of such intimidations and refused to perform existing contracts, and withheld their former customary business, greatly to the plaintiff's damage."

Judge Brown, having thus stated the cause of action as presented in the complaint of the plaintiff, proceeds to state as follows the law on this subject:

"Associations have no more right to inflict injury upon others than individuals have; all combinations and associations designed to coerce workmen to become members or to interfere with, obstruct, vex or annoy them in working or in obtaining work because they are not members, or in order to induce them to become members, or designed to prevent employers from making a just discrimination paid to the skillful and unskillful, to the diligent and the lazy, to the efficient and the inefficient; and all associations designed to interfere with the perfect freedom of employers in the proper management and control of their lawful business, or to dictate in any particular the terms upon which their business shall be conducted, by means of threats of injury or loss, by interference with their property or traffic, or with their lawful employment of other persons, or designed to abridge any of these rights, are illegal combinations or associations, and all acts done in furtherance of such intentions by such means and accompanied by damage are actionable."

This is a very clear statement of the various specific purposes for which a boycott is established; and, as Judge Brown holds all combinations or associations having these purposes in view, are in themselves ipso facto "illegal," and all acts done in furtherence of "such intentions by such means and accompanied by damage are actionable." On this ground he refused to discharge the defendants from arrest.

In his deliverance on the subject, the Judge said that the acts specified in the complaint, "were not only illegal, rendering the defendants liable in damages, but also misdemeanors at common law as well as by section 168 of the Penal Code of this State." The section of the Code referred to, provides that if two or more persons shall conspire together "to prevent another from exercising a lawful trade or calling, or doing any other lawful act, by force, threats or intimidation, or by interfering or threatening to interfere with tools, implements or property belonging to or used by another, or with the use or employment thereof," then each of such persons shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. This is one of the definitions of a punishable misdemeanor.

The Supreme Court of Connecticut has recently decided a case, in which it expressed views similar to those of Judge Brown. It would be well for boycotters to bear in mind that they are criminals and liable to punishment, as well as answerable in actions for the damages which they may inflict on others.

STRIKES AND LOCKOUTS.

The Evening Post, of New York, gives the substance of a detailed statement made by the Philadelphia Ledger, in reference to the results of strikes and lockouts in Philadelphia during the period of nine months, beginning with July 1st, 1886, and ending February 1st, 1887.

It appears from this statement, that there were in all 108 strikes; that in seventeen instances the employes were discharged in consequence of strikes, or of wage or shop difficulties; that nineteen of these strikes were successful in gaining the end sought; that six of them were satisfactorily settled; that twenty-one of them were compromised; and that sixty of them were total failures. Forty of them were for higher wages, and some twenty of them were against a reduction of wages. Twenty-five of them were by organized workingmen against others whose discharge they demanded. The whole number of persons thrown out of employment by these strikes was 18,123, and their loss in wages, that would otherwise have been earned and received, is set down at $1,221,750. In twenty-two of the strikes none of the strikers recovered their old places; and in about fifty of the strikes only a portion of the strikers were taken back by their former employers.

There were also eleven lockouts by employers during the same period, of which four were successful, either in obtaining new hands, or compelling the old hands to accept employment upon their terms, while five were compromised, and two are still pending.

The lesson taught by these figures, especially in relation to the strikes which have occurred in Philadelphia during the period in question, is simply the average lesson taught by all the strikes in this country for a number of years. While the strikers in a comparatively small number of cases have succeeded in forcing compliance with their demands, at no inconsiderable sacrifice to themselves, the general rule is that they have made a total failure to secure their ends, with huge losses in the way of wages. Millions upon millions of dollars have thus been lost within the last twelve months. The wonder is that workingmen have not long since seen the folly of submitting their liberty to the arbitrary dictation of walking delegates and labor "bosses," who, under the disguise of being friends, are really their worst enemies. The less they have to do with such friends the better it will be for themselves.

Prohibition sentiment is growing in Great Britain. The London correspondent of the New York Evening Post, understood to be a member of Parliament, referring to a Prohibition party meeting held in London on the 18th ult., which met with little favor, the general preference in England being for the local option method, says: "The prohibition people will vote only for candidates pledged to their views, and hope to form a small party in Parliament and imitate Mr. Parnell's tactics." He adds: "They may have serious influence on the politics of the future." With the troublesome Irish question adjusted there is no doubt that the liquor issue will speedily come to the front in British politics.

THE BENEFITS OF THE FRATERNITIES.

One of the claims made for the secret orders is the benefit to be derived from them in the way of aid or protection or relief. But this claim is not well founded.

If there is some advantage gained by a member, it must be at the expense of some one else, because the organization is not founded on the principle of barter, where both may receive benefit from the exchange. Then what is one man's gain is another man's loss. This gain may be from a member or members of the order, in which case the loss is yielded voluntarily, or it may be from them that are outside, when it is yielded involuntarily. In the first instance it is their own business and we do not begrudge them; in the other case, the advantage is gained by unfair means, by fraud, and this fraud is possible only under the cloak of secrecy.

The secrecy is entirely unnecessary in carrying on their work of relief. The paying in of dues and handing out of relief does not need the protection of a tyler, or the guard of an oath of secrecy. In fact this part of the work would be more efficiently and economically performed, if it was all open to inspection, as any other public enterprise. The appointing of committees to wait upon the sick, etc., needs no secrecy.

There is a great disadvantage in keeping all these matters covered up, for there is more of a temptation to extravagance and waste. The feasts and suppers and parades and regalia and other unnecessary expenses are encouraged because the veil of secrecy is thrown over them. If they were exposed to the scrutiny and criticism of a cold and unfriendly world, these expenses would not grow so luxuriantly.

It is however in getting the advantage of the outsiders that the benefit of secrecy is found. It is a mild form of piracy, a respectable association of cheats and defrauders. When we remember that the weak and sickly, the aged and young, women and the helpless are excluded, we see how preposterous the idea that they need to protect themselves from the rest of the community.

Their ritual and secret work is babyish and silly, but the excuse that they need their secrecy to protect themselves is still more babyish and silly. They people the world with witches and hobgoblins and in their frenzy of fear mistake honest, sincere people for these,and attack,deceive and defraud them.

Our efforts are not directed at their benevolence or relief. They may aid a brother, or sit up at night with a comrade, and no one will object. They may glory in this work as though they emulated the friendship of Damon and Pythias, and we will only smile at them. But when they use the cloak of secrecy as a means of defrauding the rest of us of our rights, or to get the advantage of us politically or socially or in any other way, then we are perfectly justified in attacking that secrecy, in tearing the veil of deception from the "ancient hand-maid," and exposing her to the jeers and mockery of the public. —Birmingham Free Press.

One of the legal devices hitherto employed by the liquor men in Kansas and Iowa to evade and thwart the prohibitory law has been to take appeals from the State courts to the United States District Court. The late decision of the United States Supreme Court will put an end to such dilatory appeals. A Dubuque, Iowa, telegram of the 14th ult. says: "Judge Shiras, of the United States District Court, remanded to-day all the brewery and saloon cases before him to the State courts. This was done at the request of Judge Brewer, of Kansas. Fourteen cases in all were remanded." The telegram adds: "This cuts off all hope on the part of the liquor man and brewers of evading the final issue by delays and appeals. It is a victory for the Prohibitionists, and will result in putting to a speedy test the virtue of the Clark law." Judge Brewer has evidently heard from Washington, and the other brewers, and their law-defying allies, are now likely to come to grief.

The Eastern insurance companies have given notice to the brewers of Dubuque, Iowa, that they can no longer take risks upon their property.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In the Homiletic Review for Dec., 1887, there is an article on "The Connection between Church and State," by Prof. Philip Schaff, D. D. Three connecting links are mentioned: monogamy in marriage, the weekly day of rest, and the public schools.

1. Marriage is a civil contract and a religious bond, recognized and sanctioned by both church and state in this land.

2. The Sabbath is both a civil and a religious institution. In the second sense it belongs to the church. The church tells us how to keep the Sabbath. But in the first sense it belongs to the State. The State must prohibit public Sabbath desecration. Says Dr. Schaff: "Sabbath laws are not positive and coercive, but negative, defensive and protective. The State has no right to command the religious observance of the Sabbath, and to punish anybody for not going to church, as was done in some countries of Europe. But the State is in duty bound to protect the religious community in their right to enjoy the rest of that day, and should forbid such public desecration as interferes with this right."

3. The public schools are the creature of the State. But the State cannot educate without teaching morality and religion. The Bible in the public schools is the tie between the church and State. Many are willing to let the Bible go out at the dictation of its enemies. But says the Dr. "It is better to hold on to the time-honored custom of holding up before the rising generation day by day, a short and suitable lesson from the Book of books: Some of the Psalms are at the same time the sublimest lyrical poetry; the Lord's prayer is the best of all prayers; the Sermon on the Mount is more popular and beautiful than any moral essay; and the thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians is the most effective sermon on charity." He would have a competent and judicious committee select the passages most suitable to be read, as Dr. Morris of Lane Theological Seminary has done. The State may not teach the church's creeds. But the church might, he thinks, very properly occupy the school buildings certain hours for that purpose. The State may teach a few branches without touching upon religion, but in history and moral science it is impossible. Says Dr. Schaff: "The difficulty begins in history, and the moral sciences which deal with character touch upon religious ground and enjoin the eternal principles of duty. A history which would ignore God, Christ, the Bible, the church, the Reformation, the faith of the first settlers of this country, would be nothing but a ghastly skeleton of dry bones. An education which ignores the greatest characters and events, and the most sacred interests in human life, must breed religious indifference, infidelity and immorality. But the people will not allow this as long as they remain religious and Christian."

Last Sabbath evening I preached in the Greene Ave. M. E. church, Rev. M. McNickle, pastor. The house was filled. The closest attention was given. I have heard from several quarters that they were greatly interested in our reform. Bro. McNickle is an Irishman by birth. He has a Presbyterian mind and a Methodist heart. His work is very successful. Rev. Mason, of the Baptist church, was in the pulpit. Bro. McNickle said, "I have here on my right a Baptist brother, one of the straightest sect; on my left is a Reformed Presbyterian, a Covenanter, as we called them in the old country; and I am a Methodist, dyed in the wool. But we are all one. The Protestant churches are more nearly united than the church of Rome to-day. The tendency to exalt vital and fundamental truth and minimize the circumstantials of our faith will soon make us all one body in Christ." After service, Rev. Mason invited me to attend their Baptist preachers' meeting, Monday at 11 A. M., at No. 9 Murray street, New York city. Accordingly I went and was introduced and invited to address them on National Reform.

At a conference of a few of the friends of the cause last Monday night it was resolved to hold a State Convention in New York city, the 24th of April. Committees were appointed with a view to working up a grand meeting. It is proposed there to organize a New York State Association, auxiliary to the National Reform Association.

A second meeting of the Brooklyn ministers and elders was held this afternoon in the Y. M. C. A. hall, with a view to organizing a "Brooklyn Evangelical Alliance." A constitution and by-laws have been adopted, and Board of Managers chosen. The objects of the alliance are "to manifest and strengthen Christian unity, to promote Christian fellowship and co-operation, to study social problems, and to apply to their solution the principles of the Gospel, and especially to reach with Christian influence the entire community without interfering with the methods or polity of any of the denominations." The Reformed churches were generally represented.

The blizzard in the north-west and the Reading railroad strike, costing millions of dollars, directly or indirectly, show that God is thus manifesting his displeasure with this nation on account of its rebellion. "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Be wise now therefore, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of the earth: serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." J. M. FOSTER.

OUR MEMPHIS LETTER.

A visit to Nashville and Rager Williams University.—The new institution founded by Peter Howe.—Its great success.—An old antagonist becomes a friend.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just made a flying trip to Nashville, Tenn., a distance of nearly 300 miles from Memphis. It is the first trip I have taken any distance alone since the ever-to-be-remembered mob of 1885. God was with me, and I appeared unto many of the leading society men. I spent my time while there in the Roger Williams University, the Baptist school of the Mississippi Valley. They had an excellent meeting in progress, and I preached two sermons and made two exhortations, each of which seemed to be productive. The interest manifested was very marked.

There are in this school nearly 200 students, young men and ladies, from over 100 different localities. I learned that only two of these young men adhere to the lodge. One of them is a member of the Marion, Ark., church, eighteen miles from this city, of whose stand against the lodge I wrote you some time since. This young man, I was informed, took a Masonic scarf-pin away from a fellow student, and informed him it was contrary to the Masonic constitution for him to wear it, the young man mutely gave up the pin. I gave them several private talks on the subjects and promised to ask you to send them a few of Ronayne's "Masonry at a Glance," that they may have a clandestine lodge in the University, and thus put in a wedge that will protect them from being swindled when they come out of school.

We have an excellent beginning of an anti-secret society school in Memphis. There are thirty-three ministers in attendance.

Bro. Woodsall who has had many years of experience, says that he has never had a finer class to begin with. Many of the brethren came from fifty to a hundred miles. One of the brethren remarked after the first lesson, "Preparation for the coming of Christ," that it was worth coming a hundred miles to get one such lesson as that. All are delighted with school. Many more have sent word that they will be in soon.

I have just received a significant letter, the author being the man who championed the cause of the Mason the night I made my public debate; and though he professed to be a Methodist divine, he did honor to the cause he represented, which was that of lies. It is a private letter, but it is too good in my estimation to be hid under a bushel. I want it published with a "glory to God," and loud shout of "Hallelujah to the Lamb, whose blood cleanses from all sin":

You were so busy with your own troubles when I was in Memphis that you had not time to take note of mine. Suffice it to say that my persecutors made it so warm for me that I was compelled to leave in order to get sustenance for my family, of wife and three little ones. You will remember the argument we had at the church, corner DeSoto and Vance. Well, many sorrowful moments have I spent since then; and my persecutors, strange to say, were those I defended that night. I suppose I deserved punishment for some sin, real or imaginary. The world would expect (from what is said of secret orders) that my persecution would come from some other source. Long since I have known that you are right, and I, too, am now praying that the church of Christ, and not secret orders, may unite man in one brotherhood. I shall ever feel grateful to you as being the only friend besides Prof. Sampson who gave me substantial aid at the time of my sore distress. D. E. JOHNSON.

I consider this a famous victory for God. Bro. Johnson is an eloquent man, and he who may chance to meet him in debate has a foeman worthy of his steel. I pray God he may have the courage to press his convictions and "Dare to be a Daniel."

I am yet trying to do yeoman service; and, God helping me, I never expect to let go until he shall say, "Well done!"

The entire country for miles around is elated over Bro. Peter Howe's generosity in aid of our anti-secret society school, and we expect that the colored people will aid us to the extent of several thousands of dollars in the work of building. Two colored men have already subscribed $1,500 for the work, and with such a school in Memphis, secret societies will have their backbone unjointed in the Mississippi Valley.

Yours at work, R. N. COUNTEE.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

"Forti et fideli nihil difficile." Such is the well-deserved motto which Rev. Dr. Fulton might inscribe upon the standard of his new crusade against the enemy of American institutions—"To the brave and faithful there is nothing difficult." His suppressed book, like Luther's theses, will be given to the world. It will be read. Since the publication of the Rand-Avery Co.'s frank and open letter in the daily newspapers defining the cause of their refusing to print "Why Priests should Wed," and their subsequent consent, or rather compulsion, to adhere to their contract, the public has anxiously waited for the appearance of the unread yet celebrated volume. To the disappointment of many, however, it cannot be bought, because it cannot be sold. But like Bishop McNamara's excommunication of the Pope it will be read. It will be given away!

In the capacious hall of the Mechanics' Building, Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, New West End, in this city, Dr. Fulton will begin his crusade around the world for the redemption of Catholics from Romanism. Two mass meetings will be held on the evenings of the 23d and 24th inst. Tickets of admission will cost $1.00, but each purchaser will be gratuitously presented with a copy of "Why Priests should Wed." A syndicate has contracted for about 200,000 volumes, which will be disposed of in the manner above mentioned. Beginning with Boston two mass meetings will be held by Dr. Fulton in all the principal cities of the Union and Europe.

The method adopted for the disposal of the book will tend to prevent the circulation of spurious copies, and retard the efforts of the Jesuits to destroy the genuine. It will also place the book largely in the hands of Protestants, who need to have their drowsy eyes opened almost as much as the deluded victims of the Great Red Dragon. The book is written more for Protestants than Catholics.

Mechanics' Hall will hold, seated and standing, about 15,000 persons. Among so large a number, it cannot be doubted that many Romanists will be found. The public school agitation has disturbed the slumbers of this class more than is suspected. But can this man draw to this hall so large a number of citizens? Within a raidius of five miles or thirty minutes travel by vehicle, at most, there dwell over half a million of souls. Rev. William W. Downs several times in succession drew this great number to this very place. Dr. Fulton proposes, indeed, to raze the hierarchy of Romanism, and raise in its place pure Christianity. He proposes to dethrone a fallible man and enthrone an infallible Christ. His ultimatum simply is, "the truth as it is in Christ Jesus for the whole world." God bless him, Amen. D. P. MATHEWS.

—The Freewill Baptist Year Book for 1888 shows a membership of 82,686; net decrease for the year, 2,119. This denomination was founded by Antimasons and built up under a constitution making lodgism a disciplinary offence. Of late years it has surrendered to the lodge and disintegration is rapidly going on. Let the United Brethren church take notice.

REFORM NEWS.

MIDWINTER IN TEXAS.

ROCKDALE, Texas, Jan. 16, 1888.

No State in the Union is so large, or has so great a variety of climate and productions as Texas. Nowhere are the variations of temperature more sudden and severe. Here in the latitude of Austin the winters are so mild that people raise large herds of cattle without winter feeding, and yet are liable to lose most of them by a fierce "norther" which brings suddenly a Dakota winter.

Such a time we are having at present. The 12th, 13th and 14th were warm as May. The sun shone brightly and the outdoor air was a luxury. On the evening of the 14th, the air suddenly became dark as though full of smoke. A fierce north wind brought down the thermometer nearly to zero. Soon the air was full of a fine, blinding snow. All night and all the next day the cold and snow continued, though the wind was not so fierce; and now, on the 16th, the mercury is but little above zero, with several inches of snow. It is probable that at least half of the cattle will die. There is much suffering among the poor people, for all houses are constructed to secure ventilation rather than warmth. Where there is Spanish moss the cattle will subsist; but there is nothing else for them for several days at least. The Texan people, as well as their cattle, suffer more during their brief, fierce winter than people of the North. No religious services on yesterday (because of the cold) were held in the churches.

This is a pleasant town of 1,500 inhabitants, 68 miles east of Austin, on the International R. R. It is in Milam county, and two years ago voted "dry," on local option. In the amendment campaign the county went "wet," by 600 majority, made up almost entirely of the German and Bohemian vote. The colored people here were largely for the amendment.

On Friday, at 7:30 P. M. I met a good congregation at the chapel of the Hearne Academy, in Hearne. The meeting was opened by prayer by Rev. M. L. Jordan, and I spoke for nearly an hour with excellent attention. Most of those present were members of some secret order, and a number of them expressed themselves convinced by the arguments. Elder Jordan added his convincing testimony, and it is hoped and believed that there will be a great change in the immediate future.

It was said, during the last year of the rebellion, that the Confederacy was but a hollow shell, and that it was only needful to penetrate it and it would collapse. Gen. Sherman did penetrate it, and the collapse was sudden and complete. What we need in our reform is a plan of campaign as bold and earnest as Sherman's, and we shall see the whole lodge system crumbling around us. I find here a spmpathetic reception from Rev. I. Toliver, pastor of the colored Baptist church. He is one of the leading colored pastors in the State and has had experience in the lodge but has given it up for Christ's sake. Because of the inclemency of the weather, I could not address the people, but the way is open when any lecturer shall come.

One of the reasons given for the reaction on the prohibition question here was the non-enforcement of the local option law. It was said that there was but little difference between the amount of drinking under local option and license. But there was another fact back of that. The officers elected to enforce local option were party politicians and drinking men. The present city marshal carries a flask of whisky in his pocket. On meeting me, as a stranger, he urged me to drink with him. There never will be effective prohibition in Texas or elsewhere until men who regard their oath of office to be paramount to either the demands of appetite or fealty to party are placed in power. I expect, D. V., to go back to Hearne, and thence to Houston and eastward.

H. H. HINMAN.

THE IOWA CHAMPION OF LODGERY SHOWN TO BE A DECEIVER.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Richland I came to Oskaloosa. The train I was on barely succeeded in plowing through the snow drifts. The violence of the storm and the condition of the roads detained me a little in Oskaloosa, and then I went to New Sharon in Mahaska county, where a revival meeting was in progress in the Friends church. I gave a talk in the afternoon meeting and preached in the evening by invitation of the evangelist who was holding the series of meetings. I also preached Sabbath evening in the M. E. church by request of the pastor.

On Monday I went to Taintor and visited several friends of the reform. Some gave subscriptions to the Iowa State association and some subscribed for the Cynosure. The repeated storms and blows made it difficult to travel on account of some roads being blockaded with snow drifts.

Wednesday I returned to New Sharon. The Odd-fellows' lodge installed their officers that night. It was to be a public installation, and Rev. Frank Evans, of Morning Sun fame, was to be the orator of the evening. As Mr. Evans is the champion of lodgery for Iowa, and I am anxious to know the truth in regard to the lodge system, and about Odd-fellowship in particular, I determined to return to New Sharon and hear all the good that could be said of Odd-fellowship by this veteran defender of the lodge. I have regarded Odd-fellowship as a part of a great Satanic conspiracy to supplant Christ and subvert Christianity. I have denounced it as an infidel conspiracy against Christ, and against our holy Christianity.

With great care I listened to Mr. Evans, assured that he would say the best things that could be said of Odd-fellowship. Though a minister in the M. E. church, he was there as an Odd fellow, wearing the regalia of the order. He offered prayer. I listened attentively for some recognition of Christ Jesus, as the one mediator between God and men; but he prayed as an Odd-fellow and not as a Christian. No one could have gathered from his prayer that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh, or that his is the only name given under heaven or among men whereby we can be saved. I knew Mr. Evans was not a Jew. I said, can it be possible that Odd-fellowship has made him a deist?

The installation ceremony followed. I had not come to see that, and hence was glad when it was over, and the "Noble Grand" pronounced an eulogy upon Mr. Evans, and announced that he would now address us. Mr. Evans labored with all the ingenuity and sophistry he is capable of, to defend Odd-fellowship from the attacks the N. C. A. and its auxiliaries have made upon it. He complained that the Cynosure had charged Odd-fellowship with being an infidel order, and then labored to prove that Odd-fellowship is not organized atheism. They required candidates to confess a belief in God. They worshiped God, he said. The Cynosure says that Odd-fellowship worships a false god, he complained again. And then he quoted from the ritual, to prove that it is the God of Job, and of David, that Odd-fellowship worships.

I did not need to be told by Mr. Evans that Odd-fellowship, as well as Freemasonry, quotes from the Bible to impress its members with the idea that they are, as Odd-fellows, worshiping the true God. Mr. Evans cannot have grown as grey as he is, in the ministry of the M. E. church, without coming to the knowledge of the fact that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ can only be approached by those who confess Jesus Christ as their Lord and Saviour. He knows that Odd-fellowship studiously ignores Jesus Christ as the one mediator between God and men. He knows that grace to truly repent towards God, and the grace that brings salvation, can only come through Jesus Christ; that no man can come to God but by Jesus Christ; and that if any man has not the Son, that man has not the Father. Why, then, does he not accept the conclusion that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is not the God of Odd-fellowship. If the individual, who has not the Son, has not the Father, then the Father is not the god of Odd-fellowship, seeing that Odd-fellowship studiously ignores the Son.

Mr. Evans, as an Odd-fellow, ignored Christ himself, when he prayed. And he was not dishonest enough to claim that Odd-fellowship recognized Christ as the Redeemer and Mediator. He only claimed that Odd-fellowship confessed faith in God, worshiped God, taught love to God and man. In other words he only argued against the idea that Odd-fellowship is organized atheism. But by his prayer and by his lecture he confirmed the charge that Odd-fellowship is organized deism. He seemed to be oblivious of the fact that there is such a thing as deistical infidelity: and yet he knows that deism is just as really infidelity as atheism is. I hazard nothing in saying that Mr. Evans knows that Odd-fellowship is organized deism: and therefore organized deistical infidelity. He knows that the worship of Odd-fellowship is a fraud; that mercy cannot be obtained, nor the regenerating spirit received, by those who worship according to the deistical ritual of Odd-fellowship. Mr. Evans knows that Odd-fellowship is powerless to beget the love of God in the hearts of its votaries; that there is nothing in its ceremonies, nothing in its precepts or teachings to generate divine love in the hearts of its members. He knows that salvation is not by ceremonies; that it is not by works of righteousness that we can do; that it is by the mercy of God, obtained in humble penitence, through faith in Christ Jesus. He knows that those who worship according to the ritual of Odd-fellowship cannot come to God for mercy; and that, therefore, the worship of Odd-fellowship is a counterfeit worship, deceptive, false, Satanic, and offensive to God, as was the idolatry of the ancients.

Mr. Evans has not to search his Bible very carefully to learn that the false worshipers of the prophetic times worshiped devils. A little further scriptural research will convince him that the false worshipers of the apostolic times worshiped devils. With these scriptural facts in his mind, the conclusion will be irresistible, that the false worshipers of our times worship devils. Mr. Evans will not claim that devils are the true God: and hence, to be consistent, he will have to cease to criticise the Cynosure for affirming that Odd-fellowship worships false gods.

Mr. Evans, doubtless, is aware that Satan is the inspiration of all false worship: and when he prayed as an Odd-fellow that "we (Odd-fellows) might put the love of God and man in our hearts," he knew that we naturally have a carnal mind that is enmity against God; and that we do not love God, and that we can not love God until we repent towards him, and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and receive redemption through his blood, and adoption as children of God, and God sends the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, and the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us. Why, then, does he lend himself to Satan to deceive the people into assuming that Odd-fellowship is love to God and man, when he knows that love to God can only come of believing in Jesus, who is utterly ignored in the ritual of Odd-fellowship. Why did he have the hardihood to affirm that if a man is a good Odd-fellow all the angels of God cannot keep him out of heaven, when he knows that Odd-fellowship is not Christianity; that it is organized deistical infidelity; that Odd-fellowship, therefore, cannot make men Christians: that it can only make them deists and Pharisees? And yet, with cunning craftiness, Mr. Evans sought to deceive the people by calling their attention to the fact that the end sought to be reached in Christianity is love to God and our fellow men. Odd-fellowship, he said, teaches love to God and our fellow men. And so, with the subtilty of the serpent, he led his Odd-fellow hearers to the conclusion that Odd-fellowship, by its processes, secures the same results that are realized by those who pass through the processes of salvation in the Gospel of Christ: and hence, if a man is a good Odd-fellow, all the angels of God cannot keep him out of heaven. Could we expect an apostle of Satan to be guilty of more deceptive teaching?

Mr. Evans knows that teaching men to love God, while training them in a deistical ritual of worship, is just as deceptive and cruel as it would be to teach them to eat and drink regularly that they might be strong and long-lived, while leading them into a desert where they must inevitably faint and perish with hunger and thirst.

What is the matter with Mr. Evans? Is he wilfully playing the role of an apostle of deception? or has he gone so far in the false worships of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship that he has, himself, come so fully under the mesmeric power of Satan that a lie seems like the truth to him?

Bro. Evans, has the light that was in you, as a Christian, become darkness; and has the darkness become so great that you cannot distinguish between the love of God that the Holy Ghost sheds abroad in the heart of the true penitent believer in Christ Jesus our Lord, and the Satanic counterfeit of that divine love that Odd-fellowship produces? You could distinguish the difference between a real fire, and a picture of a fire: why, then, can you not distinguish between the love of God in the hearts of those who are living branches of Christ, the true vine, and a word painting of that divine love, as found in Odd-fellowship?

If the light that is in you becomes darkness "how great is that darkness."

A COLD DAY BUT A WARM WELCOME.

ROCKDALE, Texas, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As I was preparing to write you last week, an elderly man called for Elder Jordan. On turning, he said, "I am Hinman." You cannot imagine how glad I was. I only write to speak of his stay in Hearne. On Friday night he lectured in the chapel of the Hearne Academy, to a very good audience. The lecture far surpassed all expectations, even of those who favored his work. One of my deacons said during the day, "He can't talk to me. I'll not be there!" Yet he came out. After the meeting this same deacon said, with tears in his eyes, "I said I would not hear him, but my conscience lashed me for it. I came and am convicted and converted." He is treasurer of one of the S. S. of C. lodges, a kind of insurance society. I venture to say half of the colored Baptists of Texas, or more, have been initiated into it. A great many of those who were there asked that I get Bro. Hinman to stay and preach for them. They pressed on him to stay and give this truth again.

It was sad to hear from a school teacher, and a prominent man, next day that some other man said, if he had two other men to go with him he would hang Bro. Hinman and tie me to a tree and whip me, and leave me until next morning for my friends to let loose. Mr. E. I. Saddler, editor of one of our papers, heard him telling it and said, "Yes, I should like to be standing near with a good shotgun." Thus, you see, friends were made for our cause. We came to this place from Hearne to be with and strengthen Bro. Toliver, but it is so cold we can't get out. In fact it is the coldest day we have had. Bro. H. goes on his way for New Orleans via Houston, Orange and New Iberia. I shall follow on in time to be at the meeting in February.

Yours in Jesus, L. G. JORDAN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A LOUISIANA STATE CONVENTION CALLED FOR.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 15th, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Rev. John G. Nelson, a Scandinavian pastor, with Bro. John Asals, another white brother, promise to attend the National Convention. St. John Divine and Shiloh Baptist churches promise to send two delegates with their pastors. I lectured in both these churches in the interest of the convention last week. I suggest that it would be well to try and organize a Christian Association in Louisiana. Let the N. C. A. urge this at the New Orleans Convention. If I could get into the country I would try to enthuse the minds of the people to secure that end. Rev. G. W. Bothwell for president, Rev. B. Gunner for secretary, and Rev. B. Dorsey as treasurer, would be a competent staff for a Christian Association of this State. I think Bro. Stoddard will do well to come down here a week or two before the convention.

I preached at a church last night. After service egg-nogg, wine and cake were served to the congregation. We need missionaries here as well as in India and Africa. I have written to Bros. Hubbs and Dorsey about the National Convention. Politics are warm here just now, the ring candidate being defeated for renomination for governor. So let us keep the reform rolling on. F. J. DAVIDSON.

SELFISHNESS AND THE LODGE

LINCOLN, Kans.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In a recent editorial in the Christian Statesman, entitled "The Battle with Anarchy," the writer concludes with these words: "The root principle of anarchy is atheism. Every atheist is logically an anarchist. In so far as any government by its practices, its education, its drift and tendency fosters atheism, it fosters anarchy. Any education which rules out all religious ideas is necessarily atheistic. Here is a loud call to reflection on the part of the American people."

Let us bring this qustion of anarchy nearer home so that this evil which threatens our life as a nation may be more quickly remedied. The root principle of anarchy is selfishness; and this vice, which is so thoroughly developed under the false name of secret societies, has so many followers and so strong a grasp on our national life that it is becoming a vital question whether or not the whole tree has become so corrupt, so unfruitful that it is doomed.

It is grand to be loyal to our country and its institutions. But it is far grander to be loyal to our God and to ourselves. This would result in an improvement on our institutions and divine blessing on our country. Such loyalty tolerates no selfish indulgences, no bending from the path of duty, no following after false gods, no going "after the way of our own heart." Says Chancellor John Hall, in an article on "The Tares Indebted to the Wheat": "The tares are not bad doctrines but bad people, and they are allowed to remain because of their nearness to the good. Had there been a dozen righteous in Sodom the people of Sodom would have been spared and probably not bated one whit their contempt for the righteous. Here, then, is one among several reasons for God's endurance of evil men. It is not that the enemy is stronger than he. It is not that evil is in the ascendant against him. In conscious almighty power, in considerate regard for the children of his love, in clear view of the time when his angels will make a final separation, and his government will be cleared of all suspicion, he lets the wicked alone because of their closeness to the righteous."

A minster of the M. E. church, who joined the Odd-fellows, admitted there was nothing in the Scriptures that sanctioned such action as joining a secret society; that he thought the church should and would provide all the benefits claimed by the lodge; that he did not know as a man could have any other motive than a purely selfish one in joining. When asked if he would not write an article for the Cynosure either for or against secret societies, he said if he did it would be against them, and he did not feel that he could consistently do that. But he considered the views of the editor somewhat narrow on the lodge question. Are views narrow which if practiced would absolutely stop anarchy and its evils? that would undoubtedly bring "peace on earth and good will to men?" that would lead a man to live more Christlike? If these are narrow views we are certainly becoming too liberal-minded.

Would that the churches were a unit under such principles as those of the National Christian Association, and thus be stronger against wrong.

PITH AND POINT.

THE "CYNOSURE" PORTRAITS.

[Our readers will understand that such references to the senior editor as those below are printed without his knowledge. The associate editor in the office inserts them because they are hearty commendations which it is not the nature of reformers to suppress; and there is mutual good cheer all around at such commendations of work which we have been at some pains to have meritorious.]

I wish to send not alone New Year's gratulations, but many thanks for that splendid surprise to which you have treated the readers of the Cynosure in the most magnificent head and life-like likeness of President Blanchard. As a work of art it is faultless; and as a likeness most perfect and expressive. I think it cannot fail to give great pleasure and satisfaction to all the readers of the Cynosure and lovers of the cause to which it and its noble editors and publishers are devoted. May you all have a prosperous and happy New Year, is the wish and prayer of your brother in Christ,—GEO. W. CLARK.

I think all readers and friends of the Cynosure must be greatly pleased with the likeness which has just appeared of its senior editor. The man who has dared most bravely, and risked more than any other, to step into the deadliest breach that Satan and his hosts have made in the Christian church so far this century, is one whose features both friends and foes will want to look upon. As a likeness of Jonathan Blanchard, I have never seen anything more satisfactory, unless it was his ambrotype of many years ago. Because of this "most lion-like looking man" many friends will retain the first issue of the Cynosure of this year as one of their most valued souvenirs for 1888. The portrait should be nicely lithographed or engraved. When shall we have the long-promised portrait and biographical sketch of Rev. John Rankin in the Cynosure?—E. P. CHAMBERS.

THE BEST OF NEWS FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE.

When I was approached for my subscription to the salary of our new minister, I subscribed on condition that the man does not belong to any secret order; and I am happy to know that he is strongly opposed to all—and no member of his church belongs to any secret organization. It is certain that the secret societies are extremely unpopular in this section of the State.—B. M. MASON, Moultonboro, N. H.

A MASONIC ADVERTISEMENT.

If speculative Masonry was founded in 1717, what is the explanation of the meeting and date given in the enclosed advertisement taken from the N. Y. Tribune?

"FREE TO F. A. M.—Fine Colored Engravings of Ancient York, England, where the first G. Lodge of Masons was held A. D. 926. Also large illustrated Catalogue of Masonic Books and Goods with bottom prices. Agents wanted. Pay very liberal. Beware of spurious books. REDDING & Co., Masonic Publishers and Manufacturers, 731 Broadway, New York."—F.

Redding & Co., like many Masonic orators, have something to make out of their order, and, therefore, put in the date of the meeting of the old cathedral builders, working Masons, who were associated during the Dark Ages in guilds, and kept somewhat secret the methods of their art. Speculative Masonry with its present degrees, rites, oaths and initiation began its course in 1717.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VI.—Feb. 5.—The Transfiguration.—Matt. 17:1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son: hear him.—Luke 9: 35.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

"Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother.... apart:" from the other nine disciples, who were left at the base of the mountain, as we see by the events of the following morning (vers. 14-16). In the evening Jesus took these three choice ones with him to spend the night in prayer upon the mountain heights (Luke 9: 28). They were Christ's only companions in Gethsemane (Mark 14: 32-42). They alone witnessed the resurrection of Jairu's daughter (Mark 5: 37; Luke 8: 51).—Abbott.

These three were a sufficient number of witnesses to attest the facts to the world. By having so small a number it would be more easy to keep, till after the resurrection, these views of Christ from the multitude who would at this time be almost certain to make a bad use of them, by being led either to disbelief, or to looking too much at outward glories, and hence to trying to make Jesus an earthly king.

Luke (9: 28) tells us that Jesus went up into the mountain to pray; and the Transfiguration took place while he prayed. So it was at his baptism; as he prayed the heavens were opened and the Holy Spirit descended upon him as a dove (Luke 3: 21, 22). Not long before, at the feeding of the 5,000, he had spent the night hours in a mountain alone praying.

Lange thinks it probable, that, in consequence of the announcement of his approaching sufferings, deep depression had taken possession of the hearts of the twelve. They had spent these six days, respecting which the sacred records preserve unbroken silence, in a gloomy stupor. Jesus was anxious to rouse them out of this feeling; and, in order to do this, he had recourse to prayer. The glorification of Jesus was an answer to prayer, and the means employed by God to bring about the desired result. The connection between the prayer of Jesus and his Transfiguration is expressed in Luke by the preposition en (in, by means of, his praying), which denotes more than simultaneousness (whilst he prayed), and makes his prayer the cause of this mysterious event.—Godet.

"And was transfigured before them:" i. e., in their presence, while they were awake, as Luke specially notes in 9: 32. The original word for transfigured is elsewhere in the New Testament (except in the parallel, Mark 9:2) rendered "transformed" (as Rom. 12: 2; 2 Cor. 3: 18), and is used of a spiritual change. It is a change not of substance, but of quality and appearance. The fashion of his countenance was altered (Luke), by being lighted with radiance, both from without and from within.—Alford. The infinite fullness of the Spirit was poured out over his whole being: the heavenly glory of his nature, which was still concealed under his earthly appearance, now broke forth.—Lange's Leben Jesu.

"And his face did shine as the sun." As Christ took on him human nature and condition for converse with man, so here, it appears to me, he is represented as taking on the form and condition of the spirits, for the purpose of communion with the spiritual world.—Abbott.

"And, behold, there appeared unto them [i. e., the disciples] Moses and Elias." Moses and Elijah were the appropriate representatives of the Law and the Prophets. And as all the distinguishing peculiarities of the Law and the Prophets pointed, as with out-stretched fingers, to the Messiah, and waited for their accomplishment in his person and in his work, it is not to be wondered at that they talked together, as we learn from Luke (9: 31), "of the decease he should accomplish at Jerusalem. The decease that was the keystone of the arch of glory.—Morison.

The subject of their conversation, his decease (exodus, departure; i. e., by his death on the cross, Luke 9: 31), would enable the disciples to see the importance and necessity of that which they most dreaded, and which was to them the greatest mystery. The atonement on the cross was the great event of the world's history; this was the real founding of the kingdom of God; this was the culmination of the salvation brought by the Messiah; this was the great act to which all the sacrifices appointed by Moses looked forward, and which gave them meaning and value. It was the beginning and source of the world-wide development of the kingdom of God, and of those glorious times which the prophets had foretold.

"Lord it is good for us to be here." So far Peter spoke the simple fact. The experience was good, and would make him a stronger, better, more useful man all his life long.

That experience which was good for Peter is good for us. We all need the highest and sweetest experiences of the love of Christ, to see him in his beauty and glory, to glance through the gates ajar, to feel the breath of heaven and hear the voice of God. 1. It widens the outlook, giving earthly things their truer place in life. 2. It gives a clearer view of the end to which we are working, of the state to which God would bring all men. 3. It helps us bear our burdens, overcome our temptations, do our Christian work. We are amid sin, but we have seen the glory of the Master able to conquer it; we dwell amid sorrows, but we know him who has power to transform them; we see the work to be done, but here is new inspiration and hope. Light, victory, glory, heaven, shine henceforth on all the dark earth.

"His disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?" They knew that the scribes, in their capacity as interpreters of prophecy, were wont to say that Elijah must first come before their nation's Messiah could appear. They said this on the strength of Mal. 3: 1 and 4: 5.—Cowles.

"Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them." That the scribes did not recognize and accept John the Baptist as Elijah was no proof that Elijah had not come; neither would it any more be proof that Jesus was not the Messiah because the scribes set him at naught.

HEROIC SCHOOL TEACHERS.—There isn't much to say about the heroic school teachers who are stifled by the breath of the Dakota blizzard, as they seek to pilot their little ones to a haven of safety, but the memory of such faithful women will be green even after man has discovered means to avert the blizzard itself. Mary Connell, a school teacher near Cavour, started home with two of her pupils, a boy and girl. The boy left them and perished. Miss Connell put her dress folds about the little girl and made her walk all night, sheltering her charge with her body. They were found next morning alive, but terribly frozen. Another teacher, Miss Jacobson, near Stolof, started home with a little girl and both perished. When found, Miss Jacobson was crouched in a little hollow in the ground, with her arms about the little girl and her dress skirt was wrapped about her. Her own bonnet was off her head and her hand clutched her dress at her throat, but there was a smile on her face. In most of the school districts of Yankton county teachers kept the children in all night, and thus saved many lives. In school district No. 24, the fuel at the school house ran out, and the teacher left the school house, went three-quarters of a mile to Mr. Walsh's house, secured a team and sleigh and returned. She loaded the scholars into the sleigh and took them to Mr. Walsh's house for safe keeping. All this occurred after dark.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE TWENTIETH YEAR.

As we turn over the leaf for another year the Cynosure would again write at the top of the new page: "Christ always; Christ only." It will more than ever be the purpose of all connected with the paper to make it a power for the coming kingdom of our Lord, before which all the systems of secret worship, mystery and iniquity of the great Babylon must fall. We would be on the CONQUEROR'S side in that day—we will stand for him now in the days of testimony and of tribulation.

THE CYNOSURE during 1888 will give the most earnest attention to the South. The National Convention at New Orleans, Feb. 17th, and the effort, which promises so much success, to put of the paper into the hands of colored pastors gives a direction to our interests. We also hope that the National Christian Association will be able to put other workers into the Southern field.

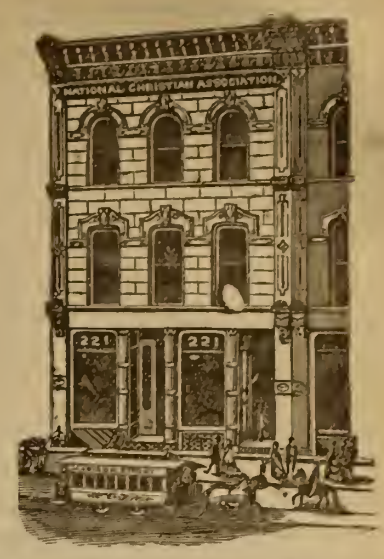
The Minor Secret Orders, so-called, will have more respect given to their insinuating and benumbing influence. If Masonry and Odd-fellowship have felt severely the attacks upon their strongholds, they are making good all losses by training up an army of young men whose convictions are paralyzed in respect to secretism by the swarms of orders which cover their modicum of lodgery with a bait of temperance, insurance, patriotism, good fellowship, business aid, etc., etc. The Cynosure will endeavor to rouse our careless churches to see that this evil is likely to be worse than the first.

We have nearly completed arrangements for special Correspondence from the metropolitan cities in different parts of the country. Our readers may expect letters once a month, or oftener, from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles. These letters will give graphic pictures of the earnest American life which throbs in our great cities, with especial reference to the news of the lodges in each.

The very popular Biographical Work of the Cynosure during the three years past will be continued with some features which will be especially attractive. During the last year there have appeared portraits of George B. Cheever, William H. Seward, Daniel Webster, John Brown, Charles Sumner, Charles Francis Adams, Enoch Honeywell, Bishop Hamline, Charles G. Finney, Howard Crosby, Dr. C. F. W. Walther, and Alexander Hamilton. These portraits have been accompanied with sketches which have presented facts of profoundest interest to our discussion, collated after diligent and often exhaustive search.

Letters from foreign lands we expect to be more frequent and valuable in 1888 than ever. Correspondents in England, Germany, Greece, Turkey, India, West and South Africa, China and Mexico will through our columns be in personal connection with our readers.



The Sabbath School department will contain the notes of Miss E. E. Flagg as last year. Sabbath-school workers are to be congratulated in the continuance of this arrangement. For readers of the Cynosure there are no more helpful and suggestive notes published than these, in the whole range of S. S. literature.

Best of all is the noble company of contributors and correspondents in our own land. We hardly need mention them. To keep in their company a season were —"worth ten years of common life."

We invite all friends of the past to honor themselves by remaining in this company. The Cynosure gives you a noble fellowship. You can hardly afford to forsake it. Let your name then be found on the list. Do your neighbor a good turn and get his subscription also.

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 26, 1888.

"AT ONCE," WRITES PROF. WOODSMALL.—The donations for the fund for sending the Cynosure to Southern ministers is reported on the 16th page. It is significant to note that a New Orleans brother is represented this week, and we rejoice that the sum grows steadily. Read and read again Elder Callender's grand letter below. Prof. Woodsmall has just sent in the names of 159 Southern Baptist ministers, who, he says, "OUGHT TO HAVE THE CYNOSURE AT ONCE!" Who will be God's agent to answer this call?

OUR COLORED MINISTERS' FUND.

DEAR EDITORS OF THE CYNOSURE:—So deeply impressed am I with the great importance of sending the Cynosure to the colored ministers of the South, that I am intensely anxious to see the sum reached. It must be raised. An excellent sister, in whose heart the fire of reform is glowing, but whose funds are small, handed me a half dollar to which I now add $1.50, and forward with our prayers that God may move his stewards to do their duty in this heaven-born enterprise. I see no other place in the vast field of Christian endeavor where so much good is likely to result from the prayerful use of $1,500. If the thousands of the time-serving preachers of East, North and West neglect to do their duty, let the noble sons of the South set the example for our white brethren. Then may God send them back as missionaries to us, to help turn our churches, clergy and religious press from the powers of darkness, "the mystery of iniquity," to serve the true God.

Cannot our self-sacrificing Bro. Hinman enlist some colored brother or brethren recently emancipated from that worst form of slavery, the lodge, to come North to preach the Gospel to the preachers and churches in bondage to "the sum of all villainies," oath-bound secrecy? We send out the Macedonian cry to our white brother Woodsmall, "COME OVER AND HELP US!"

That such a reflex influence may come back to us, as the result of our efforts to emancipate our brethren of the South from lodge thralldom, needs not a prophet's eye to see. Had I the money to use for that end, as many have, this week should not end before $1,500 should go to send the Christian Cynosure to one thousand of the preachers of the South.

At this point in this article I kneel and pray that God will incline your hearts, who can as well as not, to send out your tens and twenties, more or less, as God has prospered you. Many have already done nobly and the sum is more than a third in.

There is no issue before the people paramount to the anti-lodge issue—not even the anti-saloon movement. God is in both. The N. C. A. and the W. C. T. U. ought to work in perfect harmony. God grant they may. The Christian Cynosure is to-day the most important paper on this continent. As was the Liberator at one period, on the slavery question, so has stood the brave Star of anti-lodge reform, against great odds, till other equally brave sheets like the elegant little American chime in to help lodgery on to its doom, a Masonic funeral.

Have you dollars in your purse that belong to this ministers' fund? God will collect it somehow. If you withhold it, it will tend to poverty. Are you, my dear brother in Christ, wasting money on luxuries; or on narcotics; or on the "necessaries" (?) of life? When a silver-tongued statesman pronounces tobacco a necessity, not a luxury merely, then we must bow to such authority, and fill our pipes or mouths with poisons and puff it into the faces of ladies and gentlemen who abhor the sinful waste of vitality, health and property. Think of $600,000,000 consumed annually in the use of this "necessity" alone! Do you use this defiling weed, O my precious brother? Are you a good steward? What is your answer? Every dollar is needed in God's cause. "Men of Israel, help" us emancipate souls from lodge bondage—soul bondage. Credit Mrs. Juliette Wrighter with 50 cents and me with $1.50. When God gives me more, I will send it.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION FEBRUARY 17 TO 20, 1888.

The religion that offends nobody, does nobody good.

SENATOR HENRY WILSON, of Iowa, just re-elected, warns his (Republican) party that a prohibition plank must be put in its platform to save its existence. That will not save it. If it loses the liquor vote or the Prohibition vote, it dies; and it cannot keep both.

GOV. LARABEE of Iowa, who was elected as opposed to prohibition, now gives a glowing testimony to its benefits to the State. The poorer people who used to support saloons, now support wives and children; jails are empty; court expenses are diminished, etc.; and he recommends a committee from the Legislature to examine drug-store saloons and to report on the execution of the laws.

GENERAL CLINTON B. FISK, as we have before said, though once a member of them, disapproves of secret temperance lodges. The temperance voters, North and South, are fixing their eyes on him for their next Presidential candidate. The sole argument used for secret temperance lodges, is that "more money can be raised by secret than by open societies." That is true; but more money can be raised by the saloon than by either.

THE N. C. A. BOARD at its late meeting voted in favor of the permanent engagement of Miss Flagg, and as the news of her accident came suddenly upon them, and other business was pressing, no measures were taken to show a more substantial sympathy than a vote of condolence. The Board may not meet again for weeks, and a friend of Miss Flagg's, who is able to judge somewhat of her needs, suggests that it is no more than a just appreciation of her labors that our readers make up a purse quickly to help her in this present emergency. The Cynosure editors will start the list with $5. Let us have a quick and generous response. All sums sent to the treasurer will be acknowledged. Miss Flagg will probably object to this arrangement as soon as she can, but let us be beforehand in the matter.

HARRISON, FARRINGTON & CO., wholesale grocers in Minneapolis, Minn., a few weeks since, issued a circular to their 2,000 customers promising cash prizes for subscribers obtained for the Voice, the Prohibition organ of New York. Their house is estimated at $200,000 by business men. Their subscribers are men drawn to them by business and their sentiments average with those of business men concerning the sale of liquor, while the mass of them are presumed to be Republicans or Democrats, both of which are license parties. Mr. Hugh Harrison, who is of a family reputed wealthy, being interviewed, says, ministers who are censured for silence on Prohibition for fear of losing salary and place, have a right to say: "Put yourselves in our place before you blame us for not risking the bread of our families by attacking saloons, distilleries and breweries." He therefore puts himself in their place by risking the whole future of his business, capital, judgment and all. We congratulate Mr. Harrison on his candor, and the Voice on its success. The whole American press is stirred by it.

THE PROHIBITION SUCCESS is promised by every sign of the times; and it will be worth all it costs. So was the fall of slavery worth all it cost; though we paid for it in treasure and in blood. But the abolition of slavery left still the liquor curse, the lodge, Mormonism, Sabbath-breaking, and the Bible cast out of schools in prominent cities and towns. If the saloon should perish in 1892 and leave us a godless nation, with godless schools, and several millions of our best young men riding swift to perdition over godless rail-roads, it may be questionable how much we have gained. But if in addition to all this secret lodges have defiled our churches by Christless worships, and our courts by godless oaths, we shall be left on a down grade toward the graveyard of nations, just as truly as the same causes produce similar effects. But if Americans vote as our fathers did for "A Christian Commonwealth" we shall not hinder but help prohibition. The liquor-men will not feel themselves singled out and branded as the only sinners against the nation's life. The noble testimony of Covenanters, Quakers and some others against national sins was ineffectual because denominational. But the tendency of all sects is now to unite. And if the sects of Christendom would to-day "vote as they pray" the redemption of the world would at once "draw nigh."

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

This party put in nomination a candidate before it was named. It nominated Charles Francis Adams at Oberlin, in 1872; and the name "American" was adopted after full discussion, in Shakespeare Hall, Syracuse, two years later, in 1874. And though the Cynosure, its then sole organ, was but four years old when it nominated Mr. Adams, a life-long Anti-mason, and Anti-masonic writer, as was his father before him, yet the lodge deemed the movement of sufficient importance to invent and circulate the falsehood that we had nominated a Royal Arch Mason, giving the lodge and date where and when the degree was conferred. Masons are secret conspirators, and as they could not possibly have feared the vote of the infant party, the motive of this characteristic falsehood may have been to induce Mr. Adams to anger the lodge by publishing that he was not now, and never was, a Mason.

That nomination was made at the instance of Mr. Philo Carpenter, as young Van Buren said of the nomination of his father, by the Free-Soilers, "As a naked operation of principle," to draw public attention to the fact that Freemasons, in theory and in fact, owned another allegiance than that to the United States.

When this organization was launched, it confronted all the Prohibition party now opposes, and other evils, compared with which the influence, wealth, and desperation of the liquor-curse are but trifles. Into the political arena we pushed the Bible, the Sabbath and the false worships of the world. If any of us expected we were to go right on and "Organize," "Organize!" the people of the United States into town, county and State clubs, and auxiliaries; and, finally, into one great national party, we wholly failed to comprehend the forces we had challenged. Our sole rational hope of ultimate success, after long toil and sacrifice, lay in this:—to form a phalanx of voters who would vote on principle and "by faith," like the seraph Abdiel, until one of the old parties, or a new one formed out of both, would recognize the Sabbath, the Bible as a National book in schools, as well as in courts; and the prohibition of liquor. In the geography we are a Christian nation. Our laws recognize the Sabbath. Our courts swear witnesses on the Bible. And liquor-selling is unlawful without license. There are at least three States whose laws, unrepealed, but obsolete because unexecuted, forbid and punish the oaths which make Masons; and we believe no argument has ever been made in a legislature, or put into print squarely defending the cursed system. But when its abominations, fraud, imposition and swindling demon-worship have been exposed, the answers have been either direct denials of proved truths, or indirect evasions, and complaints of persecution.

Thus the whole American platform is already proved to be American by the sanction of the American people. And as ten consistent men would have saved Sodom, a stern, though small minority, planting itself on acknowledged American principles, will rescue the United States from the ruin which has wrecked the old nations, from a system which bandages a man's eyes and swears him to pay fealty to the devil. The reason why an American party, though in a small minority, must and will conquer in the end, is that "Truth is mighty and will prevail." Ten righteous men, armed with truth and standing by and voting for it, are stronger than millions of Sodomites with bandages on their eyes, whose religion is spiritual and actual "whoredom," the name by which the Bible designates idolatry and false worship.

The reason why religion and morals in the United States backslide every four years is because God, the Sabbath and the Bible are eliminated from political platforms during each Presidential canvass. When the Abolitionists appealed to these, slavery tottered; and when Lincoln called on the United States to recognize God by prayer and fasting, it fell. Let us practice in peace the religion which Bull Run defeats drove us to in war.

But some excellent men tell us that the American party is dead! They are mistaken. It cannot die, so long as there are ten men who vote for its principles.

> "How far that little candle throws its beams,
> So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

Of the five or six millions of voters in the United States at least one in three have sworn or pledged to secrecy, not the privacy which prudence practices and reason justifies, but to conceal till death certain actions of men of all sorts, and that on religious grounds. We started in with one little fortnightly paper against such odds! Our progress has been amazing, as any one can see by glancing at any one of many papers now. The prohibition success is ours. That flag floated from our spars as soon as our mast-head rose above the waters; and, to-day, if the case were fairly stated to them, a clear majority of the Prohibition party would vote down secret temperance lodges. Their great leaders, all are with us. The great convention which nominated St. John and Daniel at Pittsburgh, July, 1884, gave our principles, as stated by Pres. C. A. Blanchard, rounds of applause; and, though one of the secrecy Prohibition leaders, now no more, objected to the doctrine that "Men bound by secret pledges to part of a community are not fit to govern the whole," the clamor which endorsed him was raised by but a handful. The great body of the convention, Mr. Daniel among them, were in favor of the proposition which Mr. Finch objected to. And in that they coincide with Dr. Jewett, Gough, St. John, Gen. Neal Dow, Gen. Fiske and others, who have declared themselves against one part of a party practising secret and others open measures.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND AND THE POPE.

It was reported last week from Rome that the Americans in that city were heartily ashamed of President Cleveland's messenger to the Pope, and were diligently trying to cover up the scandal of his remissness. But on Saturday afternoon the Pope was waited upon by the American Catholic delegation headed by Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia and composed of three bishops, a half dozen priests and O'Connell, the messenger selected by Cardinal Gibbons for Mr. Cleveland. O'Connell, it is said, was shunned by the American delegation in Rome who would have nothing to do either with him or his mission. It were well if the whole American people could feel a due measure of like indignation toward a President who can demean himself and the high office with which he has been intrusted to follow after European royalty in flattering the Romish hierarch. There is much to be considered in this gift of a copy of our Constitution. That document is the most notable result of the reformation against Romish despotism in Europe. Does Leo XIII. now receive this document as an evidence that his church has finally triumphed? Or may we take the brighter view that it is given as an evidence of the security of religious liberty, and an invitation to the head of the Catholic church to study it and be made wiser and better. It would be a satisfaction to know that President Cleveland had any designs of good in this affair.

—The latest news from Miss Flagg is hopeful of her recovery, which may God grant to be permanent and rapid. She would have been able to confer with Secretary Stoddard, had he gone East last week to attempt the re-establishment of a New England agency. Our readers will miss her excellent application of the weekly Bible lesson to Christian reforms for a few weeks.

—Rev. A. J. McFarland, of St. Clairsville, O., is engaged in an interesting discussion with the G. A. R. in the columns of the Christian Instructor. The only reply which has been made to his condemnation of the order has been from a United Presbyterian elder. We hope the Instructor will continue the discussion of this order which has made such inroads upon its membership. The lodges only have reason to fear the light.

—Elder Nathan Callender, one of the most devoted of pastors and faithful of reformers, wishes to remove to the South for the benefit of his health, and more perhaps to help bear a noble part in the revolution going on among the Baptist churches against secretism. He has written Bro. Hinman about a location after April 1. He may be addressed by any churches wishing his faithful services, at Brown Hollow, Pa.

—Elder A. Sims, of Tilsonburg, Ontario, has organized for the glory of God and the salvation of souls, the Soul Winners' Band. Its efforts are intended to reach every part of the habitable globe, and to give abundant scope for usefulness to every Christian, irrespective of his denomination, circumstances, or place of abode. A circular, giving full particulars of the operations of the Band, nature of work, condition of membership, etc., will be sent free on application to Bro. Sims.

—Our readers will mark with wonder and delight the progress in Japan given in the extract from Dr. Stevens' report on our 10th page. These swift steps toward civilization thrill us, and should arouse the churches of Christ to the utmost effort to keep pace with this movement. If they are not awake to the importance of this crisis, the devil is. There were last year 85,000 English and 110,000 Americans poured into Japan last year, and a lamentably large proportion of this importation consisted of skeptical and agnostic writings, against whose poisonous influences our missionaries have to contend. Japan cannot be won for Christ twenty-five years from now, when these bad seeds have had time to germinate!

REFORM FOR THE PRESS.—Last fall the superintendent of the department of the press for the National W. C. T. U. circulated widely the following petition to the editors of our newspaper press. There is a great reform needed in the conduct of many of our local papers which instead of being conservators of public morals are their destroyers. The petition reads:

GENTLEMEN:—While we perceive the general beneficent intention of your great work, and appreciate to some extent the difficulties and contradictions attending every step toward the ideal in Journalism, as in everything, we cannot, as guardians of the home and of innocent childhood and untaught youth, longer forbear to plead with you by these sacred interests to remember, with a special sense of your own responsibility, that the daily paper should enter the home as a "Mirror of Civilization," and to ask most earnestly that you minify the records of debauchery and crime, that you may gain space to magnify the world's good news; to reduce the records of pugilism that those of philanthropy may be extended, and that by these means the daily press may become the wise counsellor and ally of the home in its work of renewing the life blood of the State from sources of purity, and patriotism. The daily press is the peoples' university, and we urge that it so teach the lesson of to-day as to make the world better to-morrow.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. A. W. Parry, agent of the Evansville Seminary, Wisconsin, and member of the Illinois State Executive Committee, is expecting to attend the New Orleans convention.

—Secretary Stoddard and wife fled from blizzards and ice last Thursday evening for New Orleans, where we hear they have arrived safely. Rev. A. J. Chittenden was in their company.

—Mrs. Mary B. Willard, so long associated with her sister-in-law in journalistic and temperance work, returned from Germany, reaching New York last week. Mrs. Willard was the first editor of the Union Signal.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley, Iowa lecturer, announces that his postoffice address will hereafter be at Wheaton, Ill. Mrs. Hawley is kept constantly advised of his movements, and will promptly forward all mail to him.

—Joseph Cook and Miss Frances E. Willard will soon begin the publication of a new monthly called Our Day, which will be a record and review of current reform, independent of political or denominational control, but giving special attention to prohibition.

A CARD FROM MISS FLAGG.

WELLESLEY, Mass., Jan. 21st, 1888.

DEAR EDITOR OF THE CYNOSURE:—I wish to thank all the dear friends of the reform who have written me so many kind, sympathetic letters since my injury. I shall not be able to answer them for some time, but I have felt their prayers and believe they are being answered. My physician thinks I am doing remarkably well. I believe this affliction, through the grace of God, will result in my spiritual good, and be indirectly a source of good to others. I have seen the silver lining of the cloud.

Your sister in Christ, MISS E. E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20, 1888.

There has been much anxiety manifested in the House of Representatives over the illness of Speaker Carlisle, who was suddenly stricken with a congestive chill a few evenings since. The Speaker is very highly esteemed, personally, by both parties in the House, and it was thougbt at first that his illness was of such a serious nature that he would not rally. The blind Chaplain of the House, Mr. Milburn, made the Speaker the subject of his opening invocation on Monday morning, praying that his doctor might be inspired with wisdom and sound discretion, and that the medicines used might be blessed. The Chaplain has a very direct, original, earnest and striking way of supplicating the Throne of Grace. Last winter, as you may remember, he created something of a sensation by his unusual prayers.

The week's doings in the United States Senate embrace some notable confirmations. Among the most important were, first, Mr. Lamar, to be a justice of the Supreme Court; his successor, Mr. Vilas, to be Secretary of the Interior; Mr. Dickinson, of Michigan, to be Postmaster General, and ex-Congressman General Bragg, to be Minister to Mexico.

The Senate, in secret session, discussed Mr. Lamar's case for three hours before a vote was reached, the debate involving the official and political record of Mr. Lamar, the soundness of his Constitutional views, his age, business habits and legal qualifications. The Republican Senators who voted with the solid Democratic minority for the confirmation of the ex-Secretary were Senators Stewart, Stanford and Riddleberger.

The fact that these three Senators, to whom it is said Mr. Lamar's success is due, were not coerced into voting against confirmation shows how the caucus system has lost its grip on our law-makers of late. A few years ago it would have been quite in order for the caucus machinery to be brought into play, partly for the purpose of securing a rejection, and partly to give those Senators who wanted to cast adverse votes a convenient excuse for doing so in case they should be called to account by their constituents.

By his defense of Jefferson Davis on the floor of the Senate, and his many approving references to the position of the Southern States in the civil contest, Mr. Lamar had made himself a shining mark for the shafts of his opponents. The fact that his was the first case of the nomination of a participant in secession to the Court of Last Appeal, whose members are called upon to settle the gravest questions of Constitutional law, caused many Senators to put their disapproval on record, as it were, although they had no expectation of procuring his defeat.

Mr. Dickinson, who was sworn in and assumed his official duties on Monday last, is the 34th Postmaster General of the United States. He has never before sought or held public office. He was an ardent supporter of Greely in 1872, and was so indignant with the failure of his party to give full support to the candidate that he wrote a letter to the chairman of the Democratic State Committee renouncing his connection with the party. He was an admirer of Tilden, however, and in 1876 renewed his interest in politics. He has taken a prominent part in the litigation against the Bell telephone patent, and it was he who made the argument before the Supreme Court in behalf of the Drawbaugh claimants. *

NOTICES

THE N. C. A. NATIONAL CONVENTION.

OFFICIAL CALL.

The Seventeenth Convention of the National Christian Association is hereby called to meet in the Central Congregationalist church in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, at 7:30 P. M., February 17th, 1888. An interesting programme has been arranged, able speakers have been secured, and three sessions will be held daily, closing with the evening of Feb. 20th. Seats are free and the public are most cordially invited to attend.

REV. J. S MCCULLOCH, D.D., Pres.
REV. LEWIS JOHNSTON, Sec'y.

LATEST AND BEST RATE TO NEW ORLEANS.—Round trip tickets will be on sale at $25 from Feb. 6th to 12th next, good to return until March 1st next. This will make the fare less than 1½ cent per mile from Chicago to New Orleans via Illinois Central Railroad. This reduction from the usual rate will probably be general throughout the country at that date, but we are not able to speak positively at present. Look for further notice hereafter, or make inquiries of railway agents.

REFORMERS OF IOWA.

The N. C. A. Convention at New Orleans is to be held next month. The Iowa Christian Association at its last annual meeting appointed Rev. Wm. Johnson of College Springs, Page county, Iowa, the president of the Association, its delegate to the Convention at New Orleans. Special contributions are needed to defray his expenses. Let all who can respond immediately. Send your contributions direct to Dr. Johnson, as the time is short. Don't fail to promptly send the means for our president to represent us at the New Orleans meeting. C. F. HAWLEY,

State Agent of I. C. A.

THE HOME.

THE NORTHERN LIGHTS.

Along the clear and lofty arch,
With glimmering banners lifted high,
In brilliant robes they form and march,
Auroral armies of the sky.

Some, pale and spectral as they shine,
Like spirits wandering near us seem,
While vaster columns throng the line,
And crimson splendors o'er them stream.

The white and red o'erlap the blue,
Where flash the gems of starry light;
A heavenly host breaks forth to view,
And scales the sapphire dome of night.

Are these reflections from the sea
That wraps and warms the distant pole,
Whose gleaming waves from winter free,
Wait the adventurer's daring stroll?

Ah, whence this mingled grand array,
That half the concave fills and sweeps?
Glintings of some pure sphere are they,
In the far space of upper deeps?

Come these celestial bannered hosts
Within our dim horizon's bound,
To lure us to sublimer coasts,
Where hope's ideal realm is found?

Are they but shadows of the world
Where sainted spirits dwell and sing,—
The twilight of those skies unfurled

Oh! what must be the splendors rare,
The hues that zone that high abode,
The radiant glories streaming there,
Lit by the throne and smile of God!

THE JAPANESE REVOLUTION.

Bishop Abel Stevens, D. D., L.L. D., who has recently visited Japan, in a letter to the Christian Advocate admirably summarizes the wonderful revolution which that nation has experienced:

Look at the late history of the country, and you will acknowledge that never has the historical student, the statesman, or the churchman had to deal with a more extraordinary chapter of events. Our own Government opened Japan to the world, and began the unexampled revolution now going on here by Commodore Perry's squadron in 1854. Though it seemed an hostile interference, the Japanese have found it to be the most auspicious event in their history; and they have taken advantage of it to reorganize their national life. They have:

1. Abolished their own dual sovereignty, and dethroning their Shogun, or Tycoon, have restored to power their Mikado, the representative of the legitimate dynasty—the most ancient on the globe, compared with which the royal families of Europe are but parvenus. The Japanese dynasty is more than 2,500 years old. The Shogun usurpers have been displaced after controlling the country for more than 700 years. The last of them still lives, but in retirement, an example of clemency, the conscious security, and civilized policy of the actual government.

2. They have thrown off the strongest system of feudalism that history records, after it had existed, with its daimios and local armies and revenues, longer than the Shoguns. What it took two reigns in France under Richelieu and Louis XIII. and Louis XIV. to initiate, and the Revolution alone could complete, has been effected in Japan in about a quarter of a century.

3. They have transformed a vast and dangerous military noblesse, (the Samurai,) more than two millions strong, into common citizens. They were the "two-sworded men;" one of the swords being for the famous hara-kiri, or suicide from a point of honor, a more tenacious point of honor than the duel in the West. The government, by adroitly granting the right of wearing two swords to all citizens, virtually extinguished this symbol of caste or noblesse, and with it has ceased the Samurai and the barbarous hara-kiri.

4. They have established a single national army, a navy, and a general police after the Western models. All these are clothed in European costume, and drilled in European manner. The police is pronounced the best in the world; it consists mostly of the old Samurai and their sons. They are the best clothed men in Japan, excepting the high nobility, arrayed in spotless white, including the white caps and gloves, and save their bronze faces they look like European gentlemen.

5. They have organized a remarkable system of national education, which Gen. Grant pronounced, when here, the best he had seen in his circuit of the globe. It was devised by an American—David Murray, LL.D., then of Rutgers College. It comprises primary or common schools, normal and polytechnic academies, and an Imperial University on the model of the German University.

6. They have established a mail system, and have entered into the "Postal Union"—planned and inaugurated by an American. After the example of England, their postal department includes the savings-bank system, and the deposits (mostly by the poorer classes) for the last year amounted to $12,500,000, nearly double the amount of the preceding year—showing the rapid growth of this sign of civilization.

7. They have established a scientific medical Faculty with native physicians educated in Europe, and all the European improvements in place of their old medical jugglery. They now have good medical professorships in their learned institutions.

8. They had no knowledge of the public journal before the arrival of Perry; they now have the public press, including no less than 500 periodicals—dailies, weeklies, monthlies; political, literary, scientific, and even humoristic.

9. They have introduced the steam-boat, the telegraph, the telephone, etc., now made by native hands. Native companies navigate the river and neighboring seas with excellent steamers, quite satisfactory to foreign travelers.

10. They have adopted the European costume, not only in the army, navy and police, but in the court, and increasingly among the people.

11. They are proposing to introduce the Roman alphabet in place of their old and difficult literary characters; and have a society and a journal for the promotion of this change.

12. They are to have in 1890 a constitutional government—the first native example of it in Asia.

13. They have outsped any State of Europe in "Disestablishment" (except in the provincial or local case of the English church in Ireland), for they have separated Shintoism and Buddhism from the government, and abolished their Administrative Bureau of Religion. A prince of the royal blood used to be at the head of Buddhism, but the old religions are now left to stand or fall by themselves. Universal toleration prevails. The ancient faiths are considered barbaric and incompatible with the new career of the empire. The Government acknowledges itself to be without a religion, and is considering what form of Western cultus it may best adopt.

14. They have legally recognized the Christian Sabbath, and it is observed as a day of rest by all government offices, the public schools, banks, etc. This was an unopposed concession to the many Europeans and Americans formerly in its service, but will be a momentous guaranteed preliminary for the future of Christianity in the country.

These are only some (not all) of the remarkable improvements already made. Though alluded to in my former letter, they may, I repeat, be well enough recalled here; for they are the logical foreground of our calculations respecting the coming Christianization of the nation, and, therefore, of the problem that we are hereafter to discuss. Such an example of national self-regeneration is assuredly without precedent in recorded history, and it has gone already too far for any serious retrogression. Nearly all of these incredible innovations have taken place within about twenty years.

Second. These advancements have prepared the nation for Christianity. With them has spread over the land the modern scientific thought of Europe, and this, with the teachings of the missionaries, has rendered the old religions virtually effete, not to say ridiculous, to the growing intelligence of the country. I have mentioned that "all" the journals are favorable to the project of Christianization—that the leading one (the London Times of Japan), once hostile to Christianity as an unpatriotic innovation, now urges its universal adoption as a necessity of the new civilization, and of the full recognition of Japan in the comity of the Western powers. I have quoted from an educated Japanese writer, who declares that he and his countrymen generally, heretofore opposed to it, have undergone a profound change, and that the whole country is "now ready and willing to be Christianized."

Third. But now, in presence of these startling facts, I must emphasize that it is not so much from any personal or moral sympathy with Christianity as from motives of national ambition and policy that the nation is so favorable to it. It knows it must have a religion of some kind; it cannot keep its old faiths; it cannot adopt any other religious system of Asia; it is convinced that to become Europeanized it must be Christianized. Its one great ambition is to become Europeanized, and to take an honorable position among the great civilized powers. It wishes a religion which recognizes the one true God, which has a good moral code, and is favorable to modern progress. It is enlightened enough to see that Christianity alone has these conditions; and it is determined, therefore, to have Christianity, and will have it, in some form or other, in a very few years. Every thing that tends to this consummation is encouraged by the nation.

THINKING OURSELVES OVER.

"What is self-examination?" asked little Alice. "Mr. Clifford said something about it in his sermon this morning, and he told us all to spend a little while every Sabbath practicing it—practicing what, mamma?"

"Self-examination is thinking ourselves over," answered Mrs. Langton. "You know how apt we are to forget ourselves—what we did and thought yesterday and the day before and the day before that. Now, it is by calling to mind our past conduct that we can truly see it as it is and improve upon it?"

"How must I do, mamma?" asked Alice; "tell me how to begin."

"You may first think over your conduct to your parents. Have they had reason to find fault with you during the week? if so, what for? Have you disobeyed them or been sullen toward them? Have you made them glad by your kindness and your faithful and ready compliance with their wishes?

"Then think of your duty to your brothers and sisters. Ask yourself how many you have made unhappy. Have you spoken cross words to them? Have you been angry or ill-natured? Have you deceived them? What hard thoughts have you cherished in your heart toward them?"

"Oh, mamma, it would take me a great while to think that over, and I'm afraid it would not always please me. What next must I think of, mamma?"

"Faithfulness in your business."

"Business?" said Alice, smiling, "Papa has business; little girls haven't any business."

"Oh, yes," said Mrs. Langton; "any work which you have to do is your business. Your studies at school are your employment, in which you ought to be diligent and faithful. Have you been so? Do you never play in school? Do you thoroughly learn your lessons? Do you mind what the teacher says? Carefully think over whether your conduct is in all respects what a Christian child's should be."

"I know a verse about business," said Alice. "The Bible tells us not to be slothful in business, 'fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.' That means we must mind God in it, doesn't it? What more is there to think over, mamma?"

"Secret faults," answered Mrs. Langton. "Have you cherished any wrong feelings in your heart? Have you had secret thoughts which you would be sorry to have exposed?—any envy of others, any pride? Have you harbored unkindness? Have you been selfish? Have you neglected to praise Him, to pray to Him? Go over all this ground thoroughly and confess your faults, and ask the Saviour to make your heart clean and help you to love only what is lovely."

"But Aunt Jane says there's no need of children thinking," said Alice.

"Without thinking," said Mrs. Langton, "there can be no improvement. Thoughtlessness is the besetting fault of youth. It is this which makes young people giddy, foolish, and vain, and blinds them to their own defects."

Alice sat still for some time looking out of the window; then she came, and putting her arm around her mother's neck gently said, "Dear mother, I will try to be one of God's good children."—Christian Instructor.

THE DAILY NEWSPAPER.

If you don't read the morning paper yourself you've certainly seen it. There it is, eight pages, closely printed in column after column. It is bought for four cents, read or glanced through, and then made into bobtails for kites, put on the shelves under the jars, or, perhaps, thrown away. Did you ever stop to think of the money and labor bestowed upon a single issue of a morning paper?

Let us take a well-regulated office. Connected with this newspaper office we find first a counting-room wherein the business is done. This department is presided over by the business manager. Under him are the advertising and subscription clerks, the bookkeepers and cashiers; and here is transacted all the business in any way connected with the paper. Then come the editorial rooms. In the metropolitan newspaper office these rooms are divided under two heads, the "Editorial Rooms" and the "City Department." In the former is the managing editor with his assistants, and in the latter the city editor, having the reporters in charge. In the city department is gathered all the local news, and in the other, matters of interest from outside cities far and near—from the very jumping-off places of the telegraph. Over both of these departments is the editor-in-chief—and if you think he has an easy time of it you haven't begun to think the truth.

But we mustn't stop too long here, although we haven't spoken about the night editor, who "makes up" the paper with articles approved by the editor-in-chief, the telegraphic editor, the night city editor (through whose hands all the reporters' copy goes for correction and cutting down, if necessary), and other routine work of the editorial rooms, for there are the composing rooms to visit. Here we find an army of men in their shirt sleeves setting type just as fast as they can. The copy sent up from the editorial rooms is given to a foreman, and he cuts it up and gives it around to the compositors, so each can have a share of the work. All the type-cases are numbered, and each compositor puts his number at the head of the matter he is setting. When he finishes he takes a proof of his work on a small press, and sends his copy together with what he has set to the proof-room. In this room the men work in pairs. One reads the copy and the other corrects the printer's proof. The type-setter must then make the changes indicated by the proof-reader.

Then the paper is "made up," a page at a time, in an iron form. As each page is filled it is sent down stairs to the stereotype room. Here we find a very interesting process and one which you must see if ever you have the opportunity. The stereotypers have sheets of pulpy paper which they lay over the type; then with a mallet they pound this pulp as hard as they can into the face of the type. When this has been thoroughly done they put the form into a steam chest, and all the moisture in the pulp is dried out, leaving the surface hard as wood. When the form comes out of the steam chest they lift the sheet of dried pulp off the face of the type, and a very funny-looking piece of work it is too, for everything is reversed. Where there was a hole in the face of the type (as in an o or an a), in the pulp there is a protuberance. So it is with the space between the words and between the lines. In fact, if a paper were printed from this sheet of pulp every part that should be white would be black and the black places white, which wouldn't do at all. But they don't print from this hardened sheet. They put it into a thin cylindrical iron form, and shut a concave cover down upon it. The face of the hardened sheet is toward the cover. Between this cover and the sheet there is a small space—perhaps the third of an inch—and into this space they pour melted type-metal. If, when the pulp were pounded into the type the indentations of surface were reversed, so when the hot metal is run into the mold and cooled, the plate comes out with the type faces all right again, for the protuberances in the sheet become holes in the plate. These plates are made in cylindrical form, to fit on cylinders in the press.

Within a few years the newspaper press has been greatly improved. Some of these presses print on both sides of the paper at once, and deliver six complete copies at a time!

The paper comes in immense rolls. When the plates from the stereotype room are brought to the press room they are screwed to the cylinders of the press. There are two of these cylinders, each capable of holding on its surface eight plates the size of the newspaper page (twice the necessary number, to double the production). When the plates are in place a roll of paper is fastened to a crane and swung in position over the press.

The edge of the paper is then drawn down between cylinders, and the press is started. The large roll revolves and the paper is carried over the first great type cylinder, and along on tapes to the second one, after which it winds itself about a roller until six copies are rolled, when a knife cuts them apart, and the papers fall to a platform where they lie till a great pile has accumulated, when men come and shoulder them and take them to the folding and mailing rooms.

Of course there is much about these wonderful presses that we can not well explain here. There is the inking process, for instance. Every type surface has to be inked each time it comes in contact with the paper, and as the presses will print at the rate of fifteen thousand impressions an hour, you can see that the ink-rollers have to work with all their might to keep up.

But, to appreciate these wonderful machines, you must see them for yourselves.

The presses not only do all this, but instead of dropping the paper on the platform for the men to take away, even fold them ready for mailing! By and by they will be making machines into the hopper of which the editors can put their copy, and the machine will set the type, correct proof, stereotype the forms, print the papers and shoot out small boys to sell them.

In the folding rooms the papers are carried to men who count them into piles of fifties. By this time it is about four o'clock in the morning. The papers going out of town by the fast mail trains have been sent to the railroad stations by great express wagons, and the dealers and newsboys about the city come rushing in for their papers, after having purchased tickets of the man in the counting room. If a newsboy wants twenty papers, he pays in the counting-room and receives a ticket with 20 upon it. This he gives to the head "counter" and is off like a shot, for perhaps his route is away up-town. A newsboy averages about one cent profit on every paper he sells.

If you want to see a busy place, go to Printing House Square, New York, about four o'clock in the morning. Wagons, big and little, are rattling here and there, while men and boys are rushing from one office to another with ever increasing piles of papers upon their shoulders, until it seems a wonder how they can stand up under the loads.

Now perhaps you can see a little of the trouble and expense to which a newspaper publisher goes to give you a morning paper, yet we have not told all. There are the foreign correspondents, and those looking after the paper's interests in all the principal cities at home as well as abroad. Of the number of these we cannot form an estimate, but in the departments through which we have gone our hasty glances have shown us something like a total of one hundred and seventy persons employed in what might be called the "home office" of a well organized city newspaper.—The Christian Union.

AN EXPLANATION.

When you see the baby walk
Step by step, and stumble;
Just remember, now he's here,
Both his wings are gone—Oh, dear!
Catch him, or he'll tumble!

When you hear the baby talk,
Bit by bit, all broken,
Only think how he forgets
All his angel-words, and lets
Wonders go unspoken!

TEMPERANCE.

KANSAS DRUGGISTS.

On the 6th inst. Judge Guthrie decided at Topeka, a case of great interest, inasmuch as the point raised is a new one growing out of the enforcement of the prohibition law, and has never before been passed upon. Michael Trehey alleges that on June 4, 1887, being afflicted with a disease of the kidneys, he applied to a physician for a prescription, and the physician prescribed gin for the plaintiff, to be used by him for his sickness. Trehey being then and there greatly prostrated and sick with said disease, he presented the prescription to F. E. Holliday, a druggist, and requested him to fill it, being then and there ready to take the oath and make the affidavit provided by law for all persons who apply for intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes. Holliday refused to fill the prescription on the ground that the physician who gave the prescription to plaintiff was not a customer and never was in the habit of dealing at the drug store. Holliday's defense was that he refused to sell to Trehey because he knew him to be an habitual drinking man, and he believed his claim of kidney disease was only an excuse. Trehey brought suit asking for $500 damages. The case is decided to-day in favor of the druggist. The Judge says the provisions of the statute make it the duty of the druggist to exercise the highest degree of diligence and care in the sale of intoxicating liquors to those making application to purchase the same. If the law has imposed the duty on the druggist not to sell intoxicating liquors to any person whom he believes desires them to be used as a beverage, or where he has reason to believe the liquor is not for the ailment desired, in the affidavit made by the applicant, then it follows logically that the judgment or determination of a druggist, though he may be mistaken, must be final. It would seem that where a druggist is charged with this duty he should resolve every doubt in favor of the law and against the applicant. Where the question arises whether a druggist shall accommodate an applicant with a sale of intoxicating liquor or risk the commission of an offense against the laws of the State, his path of duty is peculiar and unmistakable, and it would make no difference that the druggist gave to the applicant an illogical or unsatisfactory reason for refusing to sell the intoxicating liquor. The first duty the druggist owes is to the State. Whether the law is wise or unwise the druggist must not consider. He must follow the law and execute it with fidelity. If he does not do so and makes a sale forbidden by the law, neither his permit from the Probate judge nor the applicant's affidavit, nor both, will protect him from the penalties of the law.

THE RESULT OF THE BALLOT.

The use of the ballot as an expression of public opinion is the most effective agency to bring about this moral revolution, and this is sure to come; the signs of the times are full of encouragement. The ballot must be recognized as the reaper and mower by which we are to secure this grand harvest for God and humanity. And the fiat of the people will soon be that "the saloon must go." Will the church and its ministers be found leading the people in this great moral war? There's a bright to-mororw ahead of us, and the church should realize its opportunity to lead the people in this grand movement for the prohibition of this terrible curse. The clergy of this country are, therefore,under a special obligation to combine their influence and use their opportunities to enforce on the minds of their people the necessity for immediate effort; they should inspire them with enthusiasm and an active faith in a grand, moral, heroic effort to banish the sale of this poison from the community by the only possible means by which this can be accomplished, that is, through a political combination of the people, in which case the whole business of rum-selling could be annihilated in a comparatively short time.

But we must have no half-way measures, and no compromises with the enemy. On the part of the church this combination should be aggressively prompt to be effective. As there are now not less than 16,000,000 church members in this country,and more than one-fourth of these are voters, how quickly could they crush this enemy of religion, this monster of vice and immorality, if the ministers of the Christian church would impress on their people their political duty on this issue, with all their active intelligence and Christian zeal! What a glorious work for the Christian church! And what a hallelujah of praise and thanksgiving would go up all over the land for the deliverance of the people from this terrible incubus on their Christian civilization. And this can be brought about just as soon as ministers realize and do their duty on this momentous question.

To those who stand on the walls of Zion, "Watchmen, tell us of the night." May we not look for the watchmen who tell of the dawn? The records of eternity alone will reveal how well we have fulfilled our part in bringing about the grand revolution that seems so sure to come in the near future. But "How long,O Lord; how long?—Demorest's Monthly.

The Queen Regent of Spain has signed a decree regulating the manufacture and importation of intoxicating liquors, and prohibiting the sale of impure alcohols throughout her dominions.

Dr. Torel, an eminent physician of Switzerland and President of the late international Congress held at Zurich, has organized a temperance club among the medical students of his city.

Arrangements are being made by the Central W. C. T. U. for a series of gospel temperance meetings to be held in this city in the near future, conducted by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, National Evangelist.

The Rev. A. A. Taylor, a talented colored man, who represented Texas at the National Prohibition Conference, has been secured by the National Committee as a lecturer among his people. He will take the field at once.

There is a temperance organization in the Roman Catholic Church called the Confraternity of the Sacred Thirst. At the solicitation of Cardinal Gibbons the Pope has granted indulgences to those of the members of the Confraternity who recite the prescribed prayers. The following is one of the prayers:

"O Lord Jesus Christ, we beseech thee, through thy burning thirst and agony, and through the dolors of thy dear Mother at the foot of the cross, to protect us from the demon of intemperance and the allurements of intoxicating drinks. Oh, what a subject of deep sorrow to Thy Sacred Heart to know the many souls that are eternally lost by the deadly sin of intemperance, who pass their days in sensual pleasures and in drunkenness. They are the enemies of the cross of Christ, whose end is destruction."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. M. S. McCord, of the United Presbyterian church, Providence, R. I., received eleven new members, Jan. 8th. The past year has been a very prosperous one, forty members have been received and $3,500 has been raised for all purposes. Mr. McCord has been fourteen years in Providence and has won and held the confidence and love of his people.

—C. H. Yatman, of Newark, N. J., has labored with success in Joliet and Evanston, Ill., St. Louis and Independence, Mo., and in the Moody church in this city. In these places there have been one thousand conversions. At St. Louis he inaugurated a noon-day prayer-meeting for business men, and this has now become a permanent institution.

—The Foreign Sunday-school Association has in twenty-five years aided in the establishment of 3,000 Sunday-schools in Germany, with 300,000 scholars. It has also introduced the institution into other European countries.

—A revival in Sandusky, O., conducted by Messrs. Potter and Miller, has resulted in the accession of 108 persons to the Congregational, Presbyterian and Methodist churches.

—Miss Nannie Jones, a gra duate of the class of '86 of Fisk University, is to start for Africa as a missionary. She goes under the auspices of the A. B. C. F. M. (the American Board) to the southeastern part of Africa,about six hundred miles from Natal. She is the first single colored woman who has been sent out by the American Board. She has been adopted by the Ladies' Board of the Interior, whose headquarters are at Chicago.

—Monday prayer-meetings for business men are now held in the Board of Trade rooms, Philadelphia. Thus far they are a success despite the attention which a very vigorous telephone in the room constantly needs.

—Mr. Sankey is to make a tour of the Southern States. He has made arrangements with Church of England people to return to Great Britain next May and hold a series of meetings in England, Scotland and Ireland.

—When a few prominent New York Presbyterians met in the house of Elliott F. Shepard for Christian consultation they did more than talk and pray. Before separating they subscribed $60,000 toward forwarding Christian work among the poor of the city, and propose to make it $200,000.

—The Bishop of London reports that the average attendance at Sunday morning service of the Established Church in that city is 200,890; and the evening attendance 205,496. The population of London is about four millions.

—"Denominationalism has had its day," says J. B. Wasson in the North American, "and the era of its decadence has begun. In the past it drew men into the church, and in the future it will drive them out of the church."

—A Chinese missionary, now in California,tells a Los Angeles paper that the superstition of the natives, if nothing else, will keep railroads out of China for years to come, as their religion prohibits the removal of bodies from, or interference with, graves of persons properly buried, and on every side are to be found such mounds, the country being one vast graveyard.

—Francis Murphy, the temperance lecturer, intends to enter the ministry if the conference of the Methodist church will accept him. He already has a license as a local preacher, which was granted him by the Erie (Pa.) Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church before he went to Europe.

—Considerable surprise is expressed in English ecclesiastical circles, at the announcement that the youngest grandchild of the Queen was lately baptized with Presbyterian rites by a Presbyterian minister.

—Mr. Spurgeon, speaking at a recent prayer-meeting, stated that at the close of 1887 he would have preached his two thousandth sermon, and if he were spared, he hoped to commence the year 1888 by preaching his two thousand and first.

—There are 122 Protestant churches and places of worship in Paris, with ninety-two ministers. Of these, eighteen churches with fifteen ministers belong to the Reformed church of France, and sixteen churches with nineteen ministers, to the Lutheran church.

—Few of the Protestant ministers in France receive more than $360 a year from the State, to which a very small sum is added by the congregations. Even in the large cities $800 is considered a liberal salary.

—The Congregational Club of Minnesota lately passed resolutions protesting against the admission by Congress of the Territory of Utah into the Union "until the Mormon theocracy controlling that Territory shall give credible evidence of a genuine abandonment of the 'twin relic of barbarism,' and of a willingness to obey the present laws of Congress respecting that abomination, believing as we do that her present proffered constitution is an attempt through transparent trickery and fraud to entrench polygamy behind the bulwarks of Statehood."

—Earnest efforts are being made to Christianize the Indians of Alaska. The Congregationalists have sent up a number of their men to engage in this work. Dr. Wright of Oberlin, Ohio, recently visited that country and gives an interesting report: "A few years ago the United States Army was entirely withdrawn; and the natives are now left to the tender mercies of white men, often of low morals and dissolute lives. Nearly six hundred miners pass the eight months' long winter at Fort Wrangel, and do much to corrupt the Indians. Many of the latter sell their daughters to the white traders to lead lives of shame. It is against these terrible vices of drunkenness and immorality, for which the wicked white men are responsible, that the missionaries have to contend. Because Dr. Jackson, one of these Gospel workers, was getting the Indian girls into his school and so out from under control of their wicked fathers, the licentious whites persecuted and even imprisoned him, and nearly broke up his school. From 185 they succeeded in reducing it to 35. But these whites, including a wicked judge,have been removed and now Dr. Jackson's school is rapidly building up again. Mrs. McFarland established a school for Indian girls at Fort Wrangel, which has since been removed to Sitka. An industrial school, with 68 pupils, is also in operation; and the Rev. Mr. Austin is teaching quite a company of happy studious Indian boys. Southern Alaska is now the home of several hundreds of the Metlakahtla Indians, whom their indefatigable pastor, Mr. Duncan, has raised from wild cannibals up into a civilized and God-fearing community. All this is good; but more ought to be done for these poor Indians, the wards of our government, whom we ought to civilize, educate and Christianize.

—The Evangelicals of Hungary, both Lutheran and Reformed,have united in the project of revising their translation of the Bible. The British Bible Society has consented to bear the expenses of the revision. Revision is a thing that has a beginning but no end.

—Russian congregations are noted for their attentiveness. They often crowd around the lectern and look over the priest's book while the lessons are being read. The lessons are now read in modern Russian, instead of ancient Slavonic, as formerly. Says a correspondent: "All are equal in a Russian church. Even the Emperor would have no right to stand before any other of the congregation if he were not a deacon, an office held by laymen in Russia. I have seen the Grand Duke Constantine, brother of the late Emperor, come into church a minute or two after the service had begun. A few near the door who recognized him made room for him,but he stood among the crowd in the middle the rest of the time, in close proximity to two Syrian Christians with their fezzes slipped into their girdles."

THE DAY OF PRAYER AND CHRISTIAN WORK FOR COLLEGES.

This last Thursday of January is generally observed as the day of prayer for our American Colleges. We give herewith a brief statement of the College Young Men's Christian Association's work, which is proving, in many institutions where religious influence languishes, to be of the greatest blessing.

The largest and most widely organized college society to-day is the College Young Men's Christian Association. It exists in nearly three hundred institutions in the United States, Canada, Japan, China, India, Ceylon, Syria and Turkey. Over eleven thousand Christian students are connected with these organizations.

Each Association has a two-fold purpose, the strengthening of Christians and the salvation of the unconverted. The chief agencies employed are:—

First—Bible Study. Small groups of men meet regularly to consider the cases of their unconverted fellows and study how to meet their difficulties and excuses with the word of God. In one college as many as twenty such Bible training classes have been carried on at the same time, with six or seven men in each.

Second—Personal private conversations with men.

Third—Public meetings, in which the need and plan of salvation are earnestly presented to the unconverted men.

Fourth—Meetings for prayer, to which all students are invited.

Fifth—Missionary meetings.

Sixth—Some work is done in the neighborhood of the college, but this is considered of secondary importance to direct effort among the students themselves.

Seventh—These Associations co-operate with one another by a system of intercollegiate work consisting of conventions, correspondence, publications and visitation. The conventions are held regularly, and have been attended each by from twenty to four hundred students. Ordinarily they last for two or three days. Not less than thirty thousand students have represented three hundred institutions in such conventions since the work began ten years ago.

LITERATURE.

The January Cosmopolitan opens with one of the most graphic pictures of a battle between Indian tribes, which it was ever the lot of a white man to write. It shows likewise what changes have been made in Nebraska within twenty years. Joel Benton's contribution on "The Book Auction," Edward King's "Clubs and Club Life in Paris," and Viola Roseboro's "The Italians of New York," are each interesting descriptions of peculiar phases of business and modes of life in our cities. Prof. R. A. Proctor has a philosophical and suggestive article on the mental sensations produced upon persons separated by long distances by the death of friends, or accidents productive of strong emotions.

Nearly all the wise and witty sayings about books have been collected in the Book lovers' Rosary. The famous authors of all times, from Socrates to John G. Saxe, have contributed to make it a charming book to snatch up for an odd moment. It is published in the Irving Library, paper cover, for five cents, by John B. Alden, New York.

Miss V. M. Skinner, of St. James Square, Bath, England, has added another to her excellent series of "Friendly Letters." This one is addressed to Lamp-lighters and Light-house Keepers, and derives from their peculiar occupation such wise and pious lessons as are good reading for everybody, and especially for those addressed.

Rev. James A. O'Connor, the converted priest, continues to publish at 60 Bible House, New York, the Converted Catholic magazine, which month by month contains some of the most profitable comments on the measures and movements of Romanism which are to be found in our periodical literature.

Vick's Magazine opens upon another year with the brightness and joy which the flowers, of which it specially treats, are ever reminding weary men. The last number is interesting and instructive.

Rev. J. M. Foster, our valued correspondent and contributor, reviewed last week the article on pre-natal murder by Dr. Wheatly in the Methodist Review. Some time since Rev. J. L. Buchwalter, of Iowa, sent to this office a remarkable pamphlet by J. T. Cook, M. D., of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in which the author writes with just severity upon the enormity of this crime among American women. We would be glad to see it very widely circulated and read. It is sold for 25 cents by Dr. Cook.

Congress, a monthly journal devoted to the arts of civilization, is a new literary venture just begun in Washington in handsome form and print. The initial number discusses such topics as our shipping, the Indians, pensions, ballooning, astronomy, the labor party, labor and capital. The remarks of the editor on the latter are very able and sound in their analysis of the secret organizations among working men.

THE TERROR OF SALOONKEEPERS.

The town of Fife Lake, Michigan, has a most curious freak of humanity, who in part makes local option unnecessary. No one knows him, and he has been in town but a week, but almost every day he makes the rounds with a club, compelling every saloon to close before dark on pain of a broken head. Monday night he mashed one man over the head and arm with an iron poker, and Saturday night he ended up by throwing a beer keg through the window of Goff's restaurant because it was open. Mr. Goff will swear out a warrant for his arrest. Trouble is anticipated, however, as there is not an official in the township who dares to face the man when he is under the influence of liquor, a condition from which he suffers nearly all the time.

Professor Stewart, of Siberia, estimates that for every missionary that goes to Africa, 70,000 gallons of liquor are sent to that country.

The petition to be presented to the Queen by the women of England in favor of Sunday closing has obtained about 1,250,000 signatures.

Combination and organization is the most essential requisite for a successful war on the liquor traffic.

Advices from the frontier report further arrivals of Russian troops. One infantry division has arrived at Doubno, another at Rovno. The work of fortifying Doubno goes on without cessation. The condition of the Russian troops on the Galician frontier is growing worse. Typhus fever is raging, especially at camp Czeutoschan. The shelter is so miserable that there have been many deaths from frost and general privation.

A body of prisoners recently en route to the Caucasus from South Russia, under military guard, became mutinous during the journey and were with great difficulty prevented from escaping en masse. The convicts fought desperately, and before they could be brought under subjection eight soldiers and two gendarmes were killed, while thirty-one of the prisoners were shot dead. Twenty-one prisoners made good their escape.

A dispatch has just reached the rooms of the American Board of Foreign Missions from Murdin, in East Turkey, stating that 10,000 people are starving there, and calling for immediate relief. It is also reported that the famine at Adana, in Central Turkey, still continues, and the number who are suffering increases daily. Money sent to Langdon S. Ward, 1 Somerset street, Boston, Mass., for this purpose will put bread into the hands of these sufferers within forty-eight hours from the time of its receipt.

The Moscow Gazette indicates the pacific policy of Russia. It is declared that peace is assured unless provoked by aggressive acts of the neighboring countries. It is protested that the Russian armaments are purely defensive. The Svet says that Germany can concentrate 1,000,000 men on the Polish frontier in ten days, while Russia's large area of territory renders mobilization difficult. The postponement of war is attributed to the irresolution of the Austrian government.

The Irish policy of the English government is meeting with marked disfavor. The excitement consequent upon the Russian war scare has abated somewhat. Mr. Gladstone, in replying to a eulogistic address at Florence, said he hoped soon to witness the termination of the mighty controversies agitating Great Britain.

A secret tribunal has condemned to death the nihilist Tschernoff and seven other prisoners charged with an attempt on the Czar's life during his journey to the Don Cossack country.

Two express trains on the Dutch State Railroad collided near Meppel. Twenty six persons were killed and many others injured.

LODGE NOTES.

The Supreme Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias announces that the next meeting of the Grand Lodge will be held in Cincinnati.

A Masonic school of instruction is being held in Carthage, Ill., conducted by Grand Master J. C. Smith of Chicago, assisted by other notable members of the Masonic fraternity in the State.

The order of B'nai B'rith, with a delegation of Masons, laid the corner-stone of the Jewish Orphan Asylum at Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 18. Prominent Israelites from various parts of the United States were present and the ceremonies were imposing. Governor Gordon made an address.

John L. Lee, chairman of the Philadelphia and Reading employes' executive board, Knights of Labor, has issued an appeal, "to organized labor wherever found." It recapitulates the circumstances of the railroaders' and miners' strikes from the beginning, and severely criticises the Reading Company for the course it has pursued towards its employes; charges conspiracy on the part of the Reading Company and the Lehigh operators to break up the Knights of Labor, and concludes with an appeal to workingmen everywhere to assist the strikers by every means in their power; by liberal contributions, and by calling meetings and passing resolutions of sympathy and support.

A communication has reached all the grand lodges of Illinois from Stephen Berry, Templar correspondent of Maine, inviting members of the order to join the correspondents at noon to-morrow, eastern standard of time (equivalent to 5 P. M. Greenwich), to drink a libation pledging to Grand Master Charles Roome. The sentiment will be, "To our Grand Master." The Grand Master sends the following response: "To all regular Masons of whatever legitimate obedience throughout the world." The Grand Master of the Grand Council of Select Masters has divided this State into nine arches, of which Cook county forms the first, in charge of W. K. Forsyth, Grand Captain of the guard. The second arch, comprising thirteen of the northern counties, is in charge of George M. Moulton, Deputy Illustrious Grand Master. This customary greeting is universally observed throughout the world.

John Hofgesang, a saloon keeper of Patterson, N. J., died January 13 of enlargement of the heart. His Masonic initiation about seven weeks before was a remote cause of his death. The master of the lodge was making the ceremony particularly impressive for Mr. Hofgesang, both on account of his being a man of superior intelligence, and because he had prepared a collation for the members of the lodge after the closing. At the end of the first part of the ceremony of the third degree Mr. Hofgesang retired to the ante-room in company with his guides, and was prepared for the last part of the ceremonial. He appeared to be much agitated. He said that he felt very sick, and asked how much longer the ceremony would last. He was assured it was almost through, and was encouraged not to get excited, as all the others had passed through the same ordeal without harm. It was apparent that he was sick, but he stood the ordeal with fortitude, and soon he was raised to the degree of Master Mason. At the end of the ceremony he was so prostrated that he was unable to accompany the brethren to the supper he had ordered, and while the others were having a good time at his expense he was in his bed, and he failed from that hour until death.

NOTICE.

Labor Troubles,

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

FARM NOTES.

FARMERS' DAUGHTERS.

As an encouragement to farmers'daughters to devote themselves to the study of the sciences relating to agriculture might be mentioned the fact that a lady—Miss Ormerod—has for some years past held the important and highly honorable office of Consulting Entomologist to the Royal Agricultural Society of England. This lady has made entomology a study for many years, and the fund of useful information she gathered in those years soon attracted the attention of leading English agriculturists, who perceived how important to their interests this information might be made. Miss Ormerod has just completed her tenth annual report upon damages to crops by insects, in which she shows that a prevalent disease to which the oat crop is subject is caused by a parasitic insect in the root, and she hints strongly that clover sickness is due to a similar cause. If this suggestion should turn out to be well founded it knocks out completely the clover maniacs, who try to make us believe that clover creates fertility, leaving the soil richer than it was before the seed was sown,and laboring under this creative effort becomes fatally sick and perishes of exhaustion.

It may be that Miss Ormerod is right, for there are several analogous facts which go to support her belief. Club root in cabbage, finger and toe in turnip, the onion bulb disease, and other injuries caused by parasitic insects in the roots and other parts of plants have long been attributed to exhaustion of the soil or something in the soil which enfeebled the plants, until the true cause was discovered. It may be that she is wrong, and that clover sickness is due to the exhaustion of the peculiar plant food necsessary for the growth of it; but this can hardly be, for if the clover crop leaves the soil more fertile than it was before the seed was sown, we know the fertility of the soil is not the cause of it; and, again, other crops we know will grow year after year for forty years, as they have done at Rothampstead under the experimental culture of Sir J. B. Lawes. Logically, then, clover sickness is more likely to be due to some other cause than exhaustion of the soil, and the discovery of Miss Ormerod may have added a most interesting contribution to our store of agricultural knowledge.

Farmers' daughters have the very best opportunities for studying the natural sciences relating to agriculture, as botany, entomology, minerology, etc., and for observing the nature of abnormal appearances in plant growth. There are many useful and lucrative positions in agricultural schools, colleges, and experiment stations which they may fill with complete propriety and success. Indeed, success makes propriety, and a woman who succeeds in any honorable or useful enterprise makes its pursuit appropriate for her sex. We might go further and fare worse than to place some competent lady at the head of an agricultural college or experiment station, and we happen to know of one such estimable lady, at least, who would fill such a position most acceptably; and, indeed, she now has a large part in the most successful management of what we have said, in our belief, is the most useful agricultural station in the United States, and is truly a helpmeet for her husband, who controls the enterprise which is commonly known as "the Rural Experiment Farm." Such an experiment should be an encouraging incentive to farmers' daughters to make a life study of some branch of agricultural science, and by excelling in it do a most useful service to the world, and secure honor and profit to themselves. The way is open and invites those who may to go in.—N. Y. Times.

OIL FOR WOODWORK.—A wagon-maker reports in Farm and Home that after three years' trial he has found cottonseed oil preferable to petroleum or linseed for woodwork. He oils all stock with it and it keeps away worms absolutely. It also preserves the wood and brings out the grain. Singletrees, spokes, and hubs are particularly benefited. Mailcarts, villagecarts, and wagons made in natural colors are much handsomer if the wood receives two coats of cottonseed oil. The oil is absorbed rapidly by the pores of the wood and does not gum, and in hot weather doesn't sweat out. He uses the summer yellow oil, and has recommended it to many friends, who like it now as much as he does.

Works by Dr. Geikie.

"The appearance of these books has marked an epoch in the study of the Bible. An amount of light and information which is as wonderful as it is gratifying."—Central Baptist, St. Louis.

THE HOLY LAND—Illustrated.

The Holy Land and the Bible. A Book of Scripture Illustrations gathered in Palestine. Beautifully printed from Small Pica type, with numerous fine illustrations and a map. In 2 vols., small quarto, elegantly bound in half Morocco, price $2.00; postage, 30c.; the same bound in one volume, cloth, $1.25; postage, 22c. In press, ready soon; specimen pages and illustrations now ready, sent free.

In this fascinating work the author brings vividly before the reader, in graphic language, the prominent places in the Holy Land that are associated with Bible History. The work is of intense interest from beginning to end, and is crowded with information of the highest importance for the understanding of the Holy Scriptures of both the Old and the New Testament.

"I visited Palestine with the intention of gathering illustrations of the sacred writings from its hills and valleys, its rivers and lakes, its plains and uplands, its plants and animals, its skies, its soil, and, above all, from the pictures of ancient times still presented on every side in the daily life of its people. Nothing is more instructive or can be more charming, when reading Scripture, than the illumination of its texts from such sources, throwing light upon its constantly-recurring Oriental imagery and local allusions, and revealing the exact meaning of words and phrases which otherwise could not be adequately understood. The land is, in fact, a natural commentary on the sacred writings."—Author's Preface.

HOURS with the BIBLE.

Hours with the Bible. In six vols., 12mo, Brevier type, leaded, illustrated. I. Creation to Patriarchs; II. Moses to Judges; III. Sampson to Solomon; IV. Rehoboam to Hezekiah; V. Manasseh to Zedekiah; VI. Exile to Malachi. Per vol., cloth, 45c.; half Morocco, 60c.; per set, cloth, $2.40; half Morocco, $3.30; postage 8c. per vol. Now ready.

"It is the best connected popular exposition of the Old Testament, and deserves its immense popularity."—REV. J. MAX HARK, Lancaster, Pa.

"'Hours with the Bible' fills a place which no commentary can occupy, as it brings to bear upon the Biblical record a vast amount of information—geographical, historical, scientific—not available in an ordinary commentary. The celebrated author's style is charming, and Mr. Alden has put out the work in a style equally charming."—The Guardian, Philadelphia, Pa.

"This author is one of the most reverent and conservative of our time, following the old paths faithfully, and yet never following them blindly. He does not fear to dissent from traditional views when the text demands it, but he has no leanings toward liberal or novel theories. Taken altogether, we know no work of like design that can be commended with so little qualification. For the average reader there is nothing that compares to it."—Christian Evangelist, St. Louis.

A BOOK for YOUNG MEN.

Entering on Life. A book for Young Men. By CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE, D.D. Ideal Edition, Long Primer type, fine cloth, price reduced from $1.00 to 40c.; post. 6c. Ready.

"When such a man as the wise and gentle Dean Alford recommends a book, all is said, and said as only a few can say it. Every parent, every teacher, every friend of the race, every believer in things of good repute, must echo his convictions, and join with him in bearing witness to the good sense, the exquisite fancy, the pathos, piety, and sound moral reasoning that illuminates every page. Dr. Geikie strikes the golden mean between the merely didactic and the merely literary, his style embracing the essentials of rare culture united with a happy and elevated orthodox train of thought."—The Week, Toronto.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE FOOD OF THE POOR.

Professor W. O. Atwater, in his article on the pecuniary economy of food in the January Century, writes as follows: "That the rich man becomes richer by saving, and the poor man poorer by wasting his money, is one of the commonest facts in daily experience. It is the poor man's money that is the most uneconomically spent in the market, and the poor man's food that is worst cooked at home.

"I took occasion to make some inquiries myself among the Boston marketmen, and one very intelligent butcher in Boylston Market, said:

"'Across the street over there is an establishment which employs a good many seamstresses. One of them comes to my place to buy meat, and very frequently gets tenderloin steak. I asked her one time why she did not take round or sirloin, which is a great deal cheaper, and she replied, very indignantly, "Do you suppose because I don't come here in my carriage I don't want just as good meat as rich folks have?" And when I tried to explain to her that the cheaper meat was just as nutritious, she would not believe me. Now Mr. —— and Mrs. ——, who are among the wealthy and sensible people of this city, buy the cheapor cuts of meat of me. Mr. —— very often comes and gets a soup bone, but I have got through trying to sell these economical meats to that woman and others of her class.'

"I am told that the people in the poorer parts of New York city buy the highest priced groceries, and that the meat-men say they can sell the coarser cuts of meat to the rich, but that people of moderate means refuse them. I hear the same thing from Washington and other cities. A friend of mine, a man of wealth, who, like his father before him, had long been noted as one of the most generous benefactors of the poor in the city where he lives, and with whom I happened to be talking about these matters, remarked: 'For my family I buy the cheaper cuts of meat because they are cheaper. My children are satisfied with round steak and shoulder, even if they are not quite as tender and toothsome as sirloin. They are strong and healthy and understand that such food is good enough for their parents and is good enough for them.'

"I question whether his gardener or his coachman would be so entirely ready to accept such doctrine; and if the poor people, to whom in times of stress his money is given without stint, are like many others of their class, not a few of them would be ill content with some of the food-materials that appear regularly on his table."

DISCUSSING AN EGG.

Mr. Mathieu Williams, in one of his lectures, says: "Everyone who eats his matutinal egg, eats a sermon and a miracle. Inside of that smooth, symmetrical, beautiful shell lurks a question which has been the Troy town for all the philosophers and scientists since Adam. Armed with the engines of war—the microscope, the scales, the offensive weapons of chemistry and reason—they have probed and weighed and experimented, and still the question is unsolved, the citadel unsacked. Prof. Bokorny can tell you that albumen is composed of so many molecules of carbon and nitrogen and hydrogen, and can persuade you of the difference between active and passive albumen, and can show by wonderfully delicate experiments what the aldehydes have to do in the separation of gold from its complicated solutions; but he can't tell you why from one egg comes a little red hen and from another a bantam. You leave your little silver spoon an hour in your egg cup, and it is coated with a compound of sulphur. Why is that sulphur there? Wonderful, that evolution should provide for the bones of the future hen! There is phosphorous also in that little microcosm; and the oxygen of the air, passing through the shell, unites with it, and the acid dissolves the shell, thus making good, strong bones for the chick, and at the same time thinning the prison walls.

THE CZAR OF RUSSIA.

While the Czar was stopping recently in the Castle of Fredensborg, in Denmark, he was fond of taking little walks in the neighborhood. One day he was accosted by a beggar woman with a child in her arms. In pure Danish, and in the roughest manner possible, he told her to go away, and to be pretty quick about it. The poor woman, terrified, started off, but was followed by an officer. "Here, my good woman," said the officer, as he put some pieces of gold into her hand, "it is the Czar who sends you this, and he hopes that you will forgive his apparent rudeness of a moment ago. The fact is, he has just returned from a visit to his children, who have the scarlatina, and he was afraid that he might bring the contagion to your child, if he allowed you to approach his person."

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND:

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

The Master's Carpet.

BY

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 423 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

OF

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

This enlarged edition is a beautiful large 12mo volume of 240 pages.

POPULAR COMMENTARIES

In the critical biblical literature of the century few books have been so unqualifiedly endorsed as

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Commentary

On the Old and New Testaments. It has been tried, tested and proven, during one of the most active periods ever known in biblical research. That it has not been found wanting is evident in the still unabated demand. At considerable outlay we have issued a new edition of this valuable work in clear type, attractively bound, and at a price much lower than any complete commentary ever before issued.

In Extra Fine English Cloth, sprinkled edge, the full set, (4 vols.) ..... $ 8.00
In Half Morocco, the full set, (4 vols.) 10 00

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible is the Commentary on the Old and New Testaments, by Jamieson, Fausset & Brown. It contains notes of the choicest and richest character on all parts of the Holy Bible. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness."—Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., in "Aids to Bible Study."

The leading clergymen and college professors of the country unite with Dr. Vincent in placing this commentary in the first rank of all biblical aids.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The National Pure Food Convention met in Washington last week. About 125 delegates were present, representing nearly all of the leading trade organizations in the country.

A number of gentlemen, headed by Senator Beck and Representative Butterworth, called on the President to invite him to open the Centennial Exposition of the Ohio Valley at Cincinnati next summer.

The Committee on Appropriations has ready the regular annual pension bill for report to the House. The bill appropriates $80,275,500 as follows: For the payment of pensions, $79,000,000; for fees and expenses of examining surgeons, $1,000,000; for salaries of agents, clerk hire, rents, etc., $275,500.

CHICAGO.

The first discovery of natural gas from an artesian well at the Cooke brewery in this city lately has been followed up and illuminating gas of fine quality has been found in a half dozen wells, two of them under the great retail stores of Marshall Field and Mandel Bros. Several firms are arranging to test the quantity and utility of the discovery.

Saturday night two residence buildings were burned, imperiling the lives of some two score persons, and with two possible fatalities.

The great West Side street car lines, lately purchased by the Philadelphia syndicate which has about completed the cable line over the North Side, are now causing a lively battle in the City Council. In granting a new charter for a cable road on the West Side the aldermen voted along with it a 4-cent fare by ticket and that the company should pave and repair all the streets that they use. The railway managers refuse the charter, and talk of an elevated road. One or two other companies are trying to get a right of way for the latter.

GENERAL.

Governor Semple has signed the bill giving the ballot to the women of Washington Territory.

The constitutional prohibition amendment was passed in the Massachusetts Senate Thursday afternoon by a vote of 25 to 8.

Both hosuses of the Iowa Legislature balloted for United States Senator at Des Moines Tuesday, Senator Wilson receiving 58 out of 89 votes cast in the House, and 30 out of 41 in the Senate.

Stockholders of the Dover (N. H.) Street Railway Company were surprised at their election Monday to discover that Mrs. Mary E. G. H. Dow had been elected president of the road, and that her husband had been chosen treasury.

A six-foot vein of coal was struck at Colfax, McLean county, Ill., Friday morning, at the depth of 400 feet.

The mother of President Garfield is gradually sinking, and it is thought that she will not live more than a few days longer. Mrs. J. A. Garfield, Miss Mollie Garfield, and one of the boys are in Europe. The old lady is at Mentor at the old homestead, and is attended by her daughter, Mrs. Trobridge.

ACCIDENTS, ETC.

In Wyoming county, West Virginia, the desperadoes known as the Hatfield gang, invaded the house of Simon McCoy, taking his wife and son prisoner. The two latter were carried to the woods, tied to trees, and shot. The house was then set on fire, and McCoy perished in the flames, with, as alleged, two small children. McCoy's brother and his family are reported to have been murdered a few days ago by the same persons.

A meningitis epidemic is depopulating Asheville, N. C., at the rate of a dozen deaths a day, all attempts to check it proving futile. Many inhabitants are leaving town.

A large boiler in Kastner & Gogan's flour mill at Janesville, Wis., exploded Friday morning, completely wrecking the structure and killing two men. The boiler had for some time been condemned as in a dangerous condition.

Three deaths occurred in a coal mine near Minshall, Ind., Tuesday, two men being killed by a premature explosion, and the night engineer making a misstep and falling ninety feet down the shaft.

A box sent to Judge Woods at Indianapolis was examined and found to contain two cartridges, loose powder, and matches carefully prepared, so that an explosion would have been unavoidable if the box had been opened without suspicion. There is no clew to the sender.

Two American prospectors were killed and two wounded a few days since on the Yaqui River, Mexico, by a band ef eight Apaches, who came upon the party of five prospectors in the wild region of the Sierra Madre Mountains.

Friday night the residence of Frank Smith, at Harrod, Ohio, took fire and was burned to the ground, the whole family, Smith, his wife and two children perishing in the flames.

Thursday morning two men at the Standard Plate-glass works in Butler, Pa., were almost instantly killed while placing a sheet of glass in position on the grinding table. They were standing on the grinding table when the grinders were set in motion, and before they were aware of their danger they were ground to death.

Seven persons were drowned in Sand Lake, near Ennis, Texas, Wednesday. Two young ladies, daughters of William Williams, and a young man by the name of Babbitt, were skating on the lake, when the ice gave way and they sunk in four and a half feet of water. Miss Babbitt and two little girls, aged eight and fourteen years, daughters of William Williams, were drowned in attempting to rescue them. A brother of the young ladies, who was a quarter of a mile distant at his house, ran to their assistance, but he was soon overpowered by the struggles of those drowning and he, too, was drowned.

A St. Paul paper states that 235 persons perished in the recent blizzard. An unknown man was found frozen to death three feet from the door of John Ward's dwelling, near Fulda, Minn. Thirty-one children are missing in Turner county, Dakota, and seven children perished in the vicinity of Lennox. Fifteen persons were frozen to death in Custer county, Nebraska. In Texas and some of the adjacent States the late cold spell was more severe than has been known for years. Deaths from freezing are reported from that State and even from Tennessee.

Meningitis is epidemic at Asheville, N. C. A dozen deaths per day are reported, and every effort to arrest the dread disease proves futile. People are leaving the town by the score, many of them going to Tennessee.

At Chippewa Falls, Wis., the temperature registered 60 degrees below zero.

Fears are entertained that the Michigan peach buds are frozen.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000,000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.

DR. JAMES M'COSH.

This truly great and good man who, the readers of the Cynosure will remember, endorsed the call of our Congress for discussing the lodge, and who contributed a letter to that discussion, was born in Brechin, Scotland, in 1811, and if he reaches the age of Dr. Nott of Union College, he has years of usefulness and honor before him yet. Born near where Burns caught inspiration from brooks, and the bird songs in their "banks and braes;" and, better still, from a land which has furnished in its philosophers, Reid, Brown, Stewart, and others, the teachers of the teachers of mankind, Dr. McCosh, in comparatively early life, had gained a reputation for scholarship and administrative ability which made him coveted as the head of one of the first and noblest colleges in the United States. And his selection as President of the "College of New Jersey" at Princeton, has proved one of the wisest acts the governors of that institution have ever done for it. It will yet be regarded as a benefaction to the country and mankind.

The Chicago Inter Ocean has the following just and forcible estimate of him: "As the head of this institution Dr. James McCosh has shown himself a veritable prodigy. Besides executive ability of a high order, he has combined rare scholarship with strong religious convictions and keen human sympathies. His power of adapting means to ends stands out in striking contrast with the accomplishments of most other men. As an administrator of affairs he is a Grant among a multitude of McClellans."

This is the judgment of a writer who is accustomed to compare the leaders of men in the regions of war, politics, and business; and he properly places Dr. McCosh in the front rank. But the estimate were truer to compare him with John Knox or Wickliffe, men whose minds were the pivots of the destiny of nations. What could even Washington have done without a platform of American principles, forged in the fires of persecution across the seas, the Hampdens, Sidneys, and Raleighs, who faced the scorn, contempt, pillories, dungeons and despotism of their own people, and purchased our principles for us with their lives?

In 1843 Scotland had a church overgrown with moss and mistletoes. A handful of nobles owned the pulpits, and sold pastors for the people to the highest bidders, and the people must hear them or secede. A few fearless and brilliant men, like Chalmers, Guthrie, and young McCosh, (then only 32 years old) backed by the honest Christian people, who read their Bibles and believed them, enlightened the nation by discussion, and produced a state of public sentiment which induced five hundred pastors to forsake their State-livings, trusting in God and the Christian people for their bread. Christian doctrine too, as well as church government, had become fossilized. Dr. McCosh wrote, while yet in early manhood, his "Divine Government, Physical and Moral," which passed through a multitude of editions on both sides the Atlantic. The book is both Scripture and sense. It neither abridges God's government to make room for the liberty of his creatures, nor suppresses human freedom to exalt the government of God. Like the Bible, it shows God's government to be infinitely perfect, and the freedom of man infinitely free. All his other works (and he has written many) evince the same clear, thorough, discriminating stateliness of mind.

Under his wise, just and humane administration, his college sprung from an institute or denominational college to a de facto national university. Inspired by their confidence in its President, several millions of dollars flowed in, and have been so wisely applied that all that money, expended by an exquisite taste can do, to make buildings and grounds useful, stately and beautiful, has been done, so that one feels exalted by the spirit of the place. And in its rapid, steady, and stupendous progress, both of the exterior and the instruction of the college, no startling theories, nor splitting the hairs of doctrine, nor sectarian appeals have been resorted to; nor attempts to make the religion of a crucified Saviour suit the taste of the world which crucified him.

We first met Dr. McCosh some year and more ago. Gen. Clinton B. Fisk arrived that day to speak in the large rink as candidate for Governor of New Jersey nominated by the Prohibition party. As the crowd had gathered and well filled the rink, a roar of applause drew our delighted attention to Dr. McCosh, who had come in to give his public adhesion to a new and as yet small political party, whose principles he approved, which he did, calmly and handsomely in a few fitting and appropriate words.

The very success of his administration has made its weight oppressive, and this added to the weight of years, has made him twice ask to be relieved, which has been twice postponed. It is now said his resignation has been accepted, and he says he is engaged in the "painful" duty of separation from the college he has administered to for some twenty years. If he goes out, it will be to other duties. Every eye will follow him with benizons, and men will feel prouder for belonging to the race with Dr. James McCosh.

The two-thirds vote of both houses of the Massachusetts legislature last week passed the resolution favoring constitutional prohibition. Before the amendment is submitted to the people at the polls, the legislature must pass the resolution again next year by the same vote. Our friends in the Bay State have now their work laid out for them. Let every man be true. In Michigan, where the prohibitory amendment lately failed, the counties are coming up finely into line. Last week fourteen had voted out the saloon, and some thirty more are getting ready to adopt the same issue at the polls. The battle for State prohibition will be again joined ere long; and already the saloon keepers tremble for the result. The late convictions of this class in prominent river towns in Iowa convinces them that it is time to close up in one State. When Doomed was written over their doors four years ago, it was written in letters of fire that neither men or devils could put out. One brewer, who began his evil work in Dubuque forty years ago, and accumulated a fortune by it from the victims of drink, died a poor man last week. Prohibition brought at last a just retribution for years of sin against his fellow men.

AN OUTSIDE VIEW OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

BY PROF. W. J. COLEMAN.

I.—THEIR OBLIGATIONS.

There are certain facts and principles with regard to secret societies that all men may know without going into the lodge; facts and principles which no friend of secret orders can deny, because they are open and confessed. Upon these we propose to base our argument against all divisions of the secret empire.

I. Every man in entering a secret society takes an oath, or engagement, to be subject to its officers and to obey its laws. What these laws are and what these officers may require, he does not know. If he knew these before going in, it would no longer be a secret society. Now we believe it to be wrong for any man to take an oath without knowing beforehand what he is going to swear to. The man who will do this is not true to his own manhood. No man of sense will take such a leap in the dark. No business man will sign a note leaving the amount for which he is to be obligated to be filled in afterward. That there are officers and laws in the lodge we may know without entering its doors. The list of officers elected is often seen in the newspapers, and, judging by the length of their titles, they have no little authority. Shall we, like Samson, lay our head in the lap of those who may profit by our weakness, and, blindfolded, allow them by our oath to shear away the secret of our strength, our private judgment? Will we put put our head in a yoke from which we cannot withdraw, to be driven we know not where, to draw we know not what? But especially no man can swear such an oath and be consistently true to his God. Every Christian is already bound by his profession to take the Bible as his only guide in faith and morals. Now he can consistently swear obedience to another law, that in any way affects either faith or morals, only when he knows that it recognizes the Bible as the standard, and is in substantial conformity with the Word of God. To swear to another law in the dark is to risk his allegiance to his God. After a man has accepted Christ as his Master, to swear obedience to another power, that, to say the least, he does not know to be on Christ's side, is to cast a shade of doubt on his sincerity as a Christian. And if knowing that infidels and Jews are members, he should guess that the lodge is not declared on Christ's side, this makes his oath so much the more sinful. Inquiry should be made before taking vows, not after; and if, in the circumstances of the case, no man can find out beforehand what he is going to swear to, there is but one thing for him to do, and that is not to swear.

I say, then, that a man who swears to follow an unknown leadership and to obey unknown laws, goes back on himself. It is an unmanly thing to do. And the man who, after accepting Christ as his King and his Word as his law, swears to unknown leaders and laws that, so far as he knows, do not recognize and profess to obey that King and that law, goes back on his Christianity. It is an unchristian thing to do. To show that the practical consequences of this kind of an oath, and to prove that my conclusions are not overdrawn, let us take up the illustration which the Bible gives of this sin in the case of Herod. On Herod's birthday the daughter of Herodias danced before Herod and the assembled company, and so pleased Herod that he promised, with an oath, to give her whatsoever she would ask. He swore in the dark. He did not know what she would ask. The woman was very graceful, and no doubt looked so amiable as to lead Herod to think she would not ask anything but what it would be a pleasure for him to give. But look out, Herod. Persons, like things, are not always what they seem. This dance is a snare, though you do not know it. It was expected that you would make just such a rash vow as this, and though you do not know what she will ask, she knows all the time. She was "before instructed what she should ask." She looked very soft and sweet, but she asked that Herod would murder the man that had rebuked her mother's sin. She asked for the head of John the Baptist. Now Herod is in difficulty. He does not want to murder the Prophet, but he has sworn in the midst of a great company to give the woman what she should ask. Had he been an intelligent, God-fearing man he would have repudiated his oath. But he went on. When a man swears in the dark he is serving an apprenticeship for dark deeds. Christian friends, do not swear your liberty away to an unknown power, nor your obedience to an unknown law. It is a sin against yourself. It is a sin against God.

THE DESPOTISM OF EVIL.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

Sin is not only alluring, it is despotic. Many a young man who has been taught to abhor the intoxicating draught and shun the use of tobacco has found himself at the mercy of those whose influence and importunities were stronger than he could resist. Especially is this true of the tobacco habit. He learns to smoke in sheer self-defence. He must do so or give up his associations and occupation. Sick with the nauseous fumes he is forced to inhale, he resolves to submit to what seems inevitable and becomes himself a devotee to the morbid appetite. The men who thus force their unclean habits on others call themselves gentlemen and would scorn the imputation of having done a needless and enduring wrong to a friend and to his future household and posterity in succeeding generations; and yet, without provocation, he inflicts a wrong that no words can adequately express. The same is largely true of licentious habits. Young men especially are the victims of the despotism of evil which they are too weak to resist.

But in nothing is this despotism more obvious and deplorable than in the power of the secret lodge system to compel obedience to its commands. That "the image of the beast" "that causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand or in their foreheads: that no man might buy or sell save he who had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name," is the secret lodge system, may not be regarded as absolutely proved. Yet practically it is true. For all over the land, men are, or at least think they are, forced to join some secret lodge, order or union as a condition of success. Those who stand out against them are the exception and they labor under many disabilities.

This is not only true of those who unite in trades unions, but is not the less true of teachers, lawyers, editors and physicians, who, though they may have no distinct guild, must needs belong to some of the orders and fraternities if they hope for popular approval.

It might have been hoped that one class at least, the Christian ministry, would assert its independence and "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made them free, and be not entangled with a yoke of bondage." Alas! Christian ministers are but human; and while, as a class, they are behind no other in moral purity, they have been ensnared like all others in this device of the devil. Multitudes of ministers have joined the Freemasons or Odd-fellows to get a better place and a higher salary. They had been told that there was nothing wrong in these orders, and that it would increase their influence among men. They found their brethren who belonged to these orders occupying high positions and felt practically compelled to join them in order to succeed. Others join them that they may have an influential voice in their management and prevent their being used for the injury of the church.

It is a common practice among the colored ministers of the South to belong to all the orders and societies that are attended by the members of their congregation. They have a two-fold power of control. Those who conscientiously withhold their presence and influence from these orders, find themselves constantly thwarted in the execution of discipline. Each secret order to which any member belongs constitutes a refuge to which he escapes from all the censures of the church.

An officer in a (white) church in a Southern city was charged with and believed to be guilty of an infamous crime. He charged the crime on the pastor of the church, and through the influence of the lodge, was fast turning public sentiment against him. This pastor, who was not then a member of any order, but had always opposed them, told me that he was told and believed that the only way of escape was to join one of the powerful orders in that city. He accordingly joined the Knights of Pythias, and at once had hosts of friends, and his reputation was amply vindicated. Another, the pastor of one of the largest churches in Houston, Texas, told me that he found the societies absorbing so much of the time and means of the church and so influencing and controlling church discipline that he had come to regard them as the greatest obstacle to the progress of the Gospel. He had been repeatedly told that if he would succeed, he must join the orders, and though conscientiously opposed to them, he had finally sent in his name and fee for initiation into the Masonic order. He had been notified of his acceptance, but finally concluded that he would not join.

I need not say that good men who trust in God and "who have not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither have received his mark upon their foreheads nor in their hands," get the victory; but these are men of strong faith. They feel the despotism to which their weaker or less informed brethren submit. May the Lord in his providence break up this terrible power.

WHAT IS A REVIVAL?

BY REV. ISAAC HYATT.

Nothing is more helpful to promote all good and desirable reforms than revivals. But it is well to pause and inquire what constitutes a revival; for of all shams, the greatest and most disastrous is a sham revival.

A revival presupposes the existence of piety. Many Christians are like a fire almost gone out. Beside such a fire in a cold day a man would freeze to death, and in any kind of weather starve for want of food. So our piety may run so low as to be ineffectual to save the lost or nourish the hungry. It is very sad that our religion is so very much like a fire that needs often to be rekindled. Oh, how much better it would be to keep our hearts always aglow with the love of God, our zeal at the right temperature, and our walk with God circumspect! Taking things as they are we find the necessity urgent to work and pray for the revival of the work of the Lord.

How shall we know when we have such a revival? Oh, for wisdom to understand the right answer to this important question! A revival of the right sort is a change from sin to holiness. Any awakening that does not produce this change is from Satan, and not of God. Sin brings death; holiness gives life. And when the one is not forsaken and the other secured, we have a revival that will do us no good, but very much harm.

The right kind of a revival will create a change from formality to spirituality. "The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life." Forms, like dishes, are necessary. But very nice dishes with very poor food imparts little comfort to the hungry, and less strength to do the work of life. So elegant meeting houses, or a high order of intellectual preaching and artistic music without the baptism of the Holy Spirit gives us no comfort or strength to walk in the way to heaven.

Furthermore, a revival from God is a change from darkness to light. However beautiful the structure and superior the furnishings of the elegant mansion, how dark it is within when the curtains are closely drawn and the blinds tightly closed. So when the spiritual eye of the soul is blinded by sin, however amiable our disposition, superior our intellectual culture, and exemplary our deportment, the darkness within makes all uncertain and life a burden of dissatisfaction. Opening the blinds and rolling up the window curtains would fill the mansion with light; so opening our hearts to the reception of Christ would fill us with the glory of God, changing our wintery coldness into the warmth of a beautiful summer day. The best way to remove the frost from the windows is to build a good fire. So the best way to remove coldness from our churches is to secure a good thorough work of grace in our hearts.

Again, it would produce a change from worry to peaceful rest by faith in God. The unrest that characterizes the intense rush of our age is weakening our physical structure, withering our intellectual vigor, shortening our days and whirling us into many sinful ways that are displeasing to God. A good revival, such as followed the preaching of David Marks, Charles G. Finney, and many other noble men, would break up this unhealthy excitement and bring us to Christ, the true source of satisfaction to the soul. Also it would change us from cowards to heroes. Fear ensnares, courage makes free. And true courage is born not of the flesh, but of the Spirit of God, which enables us to carry the banner of truth right into the enemy's camp. Praise the Lord, the heroes are not all dead yet. There are a few left, who, like Rev. Wm. F. Davis, now in Charles St. jail, Boston, for his adherence to the right, are ready to live, suffer, or die for the truth. Yet where we find one, we need hundreds; and God-given revivals will give birth to more than all other agencies combined.

The revivals that the necessities of the hour demand, will create a change from bigoted stinginess to large-hearted and intelligent benevolence. In short, they will change us so we will act in harmony with the pleasure of God, to the best of our knowledge and belief. A revival causing these changes is of God, and should be hailed with joy and thanksgiving. Any other is of Satan, and will bring worldlymindedness, weakness, pride, discord and ruin to the churches.

SECRET DYNAMITISM.

There is a natural affinity between secret societies and death-dealing explosives. The reason is clear. These explosives can be secretly used to better advantage in carrying out the murder-breathing spirit of secretism with less probability of discovery than other methods of murder. It has come to pass that opposition to secret societies, even those counted by some "minor," and so innocently harmless, is not courting especial personal safety. This has been recently illustrated in the case of Mrs. R. E Rice, of Lawrence, Kansas. From a personal letter received and clippings from local papers sent we gather these facts: Mrs. R. E. Rice is a lady of culture—a graduate of Kansas University. Being thoroughly convinced that secret societies connected with institutions of learning are a great evil, she wrote two articles against secret societies as connected with the Kansas University, which were published in the Lawrence Tribune. Soon after the publication of these articles, as Mrs. Rice was sitting quietly and unsuspectingly one evening with her family, a piece of gas pipe about one foot in length, and scientifically charged with powder with fuse attached, came crashing through the window, lodging in the room where the family were gathered. The fuse had been lit, but was evidently extinguished in its contact with the window glass. The match which had been struck and partly burned in lighting the fuse was found outside. Though the authorities were notified, both the police and the local papers are inclined to shield the secret would-be murderers under the idea that it was simply a joke designed for a little amusement. Bombs with lighted fuse are too serious "jokes" to be thus lightly treated. All the circumstances point clearly to the offended demon-spirit of secrecy as the perpetrator of the attempted murder after the model of the Chicago Haymarket bomb-throwing. The fact is, the spirit of murder is in organized secretism ready to be breathed in the face of all opposition. When its spite and recklessness dares the deeds of death, secrecy seems to count it but innocent, if the "good of the order" is supposed to be promoted. God be praised that we, as a people, have washed our hands clean from this whole secret business, lifting our standard in the name of Him who "ever spake openly." Palsied be the hand that would tear down that reformatory banner we wave in the face of organized secrecy. The battle is waxing hot, and dynamite may hasten some of us to heaven, hurled by the hand of secret murderousness; but at whatever peril, let us stand true to God and truth. Mrs. Rice still lives to lift her voice and wield her pen against such secret combinations of midnight murderers. These college societies have been looked upon as the more harmless of the secret conclaves, but when assailed by the open truth, the real spirit of secretism is found in these and all other societies of like secret character. These secret conspirators deem anything legitimate so their precious secrets may be defended, even though the "profane" are made the victims of murder-charged bombs.—Wesleyan Methodist.

WOMAN'S DAY.

BY MRS. L. C. ANDREWS.

Lines suggested while attending the prohibition meeting in Chicago held at Battery D, Dec. 1st, 1887. "It is glorious to be a woman," rang out clearly from the rostrum to the large audience gathered there, in compliment to the efficient labors of temperance and reform women.

Noble women, falter never,
Still keep calling on God's name.
Loving women, true as ever
Raise the fallen, lift from shame.

Work! The tempter still is slaying;
His hosts wild with anger rage;
But Love's angels still are praying,
And with faith the battle wage.

In the secret closet kneeling,
Silently she offers prayer,
And the Heavenly Father heareth;
Do not doubt his presence there.

On the rostrum plainly dealing,
With the stronghold powers of sin,
And with power of thought amazing
God is helping her to win.

Soon the holds of sin shall crumble,
Soon the morn of light will dawn,
Shackles fall from sin-cursed mortals,
Hoodwinked eyes behold the morn.

For the sake of Christ then labor;
By the power of God be led.
Ye shall come off all victorious,
Ye shall bruise the serpent's head.

Soon these labors will be ended,
Care not then for blazoned fame,
But the love our hearts still cherish
God will bless, and God sustain.

THE G. A. R. AND THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The late action of the Allegheny United Presbyterian presbytery, on an appeal from the congregation at Springdale, Pa., is justly awakening some interest in the denomination. The presbytery voted unanimously that the G. A. R. order was not incompatible with their ideas of religion. The inconsistency of such a decision is being very clearly established in a discussion now proceeding in the Christian Instructor. Rev. A. J. McFarland of St. Clairsville, Ohio, having written a criticism on the order, based on such information as he had, James A. Ralston, an elder in the U.P. church at Hayesville, Ohio, replied. Bro. McFarland's rejoinder we reprint from the Instructor as below:

For some reason the paper which contained a nominal response to my query about the oath-bound secrecy of the G. A. R. did not reach me. But on hearing of the response I obtained a copy, and on reading it made an additional effort, with a neighbor, to see a copy of the ritual used in the G. A. R. Post of this place. The neighbor requested the Commander of the Post to let him see the ritual of the G. A. R., and he replied, "No, you can't see it; those books are for our officers only." He then asked, "Did you see that article, that insignificant article, that McFarland wrote about us?" And he was answered by the question, "Why didn't you reply to it?" to which he replied, "None but a fool would do that." He was then informed that a member of the G. A. R., who is an elder of the U. P. church, had replied to it; and the colloquy then ended by the worthy soldier and commander saying, "Well, he was a fool for that."

"The ritual is for the officers only." What is a ritual? It is a book of services, and whatever kind of obligation is imposed upon the initiate is contained in this book, which none but the officers can use, as has been stated by worthy members of the G. A. R. Now let me ask in the utmost candor, Why does not some United Presbyterian minister or elder publish the obligation prescribed in the ritual? Is it not because they are bound by oath to keep secret, or rather keep from the uninitiated the secrets of the order? Why do U. P. ministers and elders regard their obligations to the G. A. R. as paramount to their obligations to the church. Facts show conclusively that many of these ministers and elders, as well as private members, regard their obligation to the church as a mere gossamer thread. The brother who pretended to respond to my inquiry did not, to my mind, manifest that candor or brotherly love which even one soldier of the late war should manifest toward another, leaving out of view that which should exist between elders and members of the same church. Secretism destroys candor and cultivates deceit.

What does the assertion of brother R. amount to? Simply that some phrases in some former ritual are not in the one that is now used, and his quite gratuitous information to your readers that I have no right to excommunicate members of the G. A. R. because I do not know what I am talking about. "You do not know what you are talking about" is a very common expression with the oath-bound members of secret societies when one finds any fault with them. The brother says I have drawn my conclusions from a wrong premise. My major premise was assumed, not stated, because my argument was specially for United Presbyterians. But perhaps more plainness is necessary. Hence I will put it in syllogistic form regarding the argument in the Declaration and Testimony of the U. P. church as sufficient proof that all secret, oath-bound societies are wrong. The minor premise is, The G. A. R. is a secret, oath-bound society. The conclusion is that the G. A. R. society is wrong. Although the language used was not the same in words, yet the meaning was the same. If any organization claiming to be part of the Church Militant should refuse to allow an applicant for admission the privilege of reading its standards before taking the vows and pledging obedience to its laws and officers, might we not justly characterize it as an organization having the devil as its Grand Commander? He was a deceiver from the beginning. It was he who made Peter deny the Saviour, and that with an oath for the purpose of deceiving.

The U. P. church has been deceived in some measure in regard to the secrecy of the G. A. R., else I am very much mistaken. The elder says their ritual "contains nothing but what any Christian man can subscribe to." This reminds me of the charge of the Worshipful Master to the blinded initiate, saying, "I assure you, upon the honor of a man and a Mason, that in this obligation there is nothing which can conflict with any of those exalted duties you owe to God, your country, your neighbor, your family, or yourself." (Hand Book of Masonry, page 35) Does not this Worshipful Master and his hand book sing the same song of praise, and the same key and tune? What charitable U. P. can now say a word against either order? Oh, yes! Charity covers a multitude of sins, but all the mantles of charity that can be thrown over those secret, oath-bound societies cannot screen them from the gaze of Omniscience, nor the light of truth; for it can and will penetrate, and eventually reveal the secrets and the workings of the most hidden order, where Satan rules as king, and is drilling his followers for dress parade at the Grand Encampment to which I referred in my former article, and which was represented by Elder Ralston as being a quotation from the G. A. R. oath. If the Prince of darkness had written the ritual he would not have put any such phrase in it, and of course I did not so represent.

Did the brother deny that the G. A. R. is an oath-bound society? I could not find anything of the kind. The pretence of denial without the reality, and that other fact, that I don't know what I am talking about, this being a secret, oath-bound argument, leaves the charge in full force.

Now allow me to ask, "Is not the Sons of Veterans a secret, oath-bound society?" and to give my belief in answer in a few words. This order is composed of young men and boys, mainly, as yet. This order is said to be founded on the principles of Friendship, Charity and Loyalty, and its ritual was approved and promulgated by the sixth annual "Encampment of the Commander-in-chief" of the order, meeting in Des Moines, Iowa, Aug. 18, 1887. And the oath for initiation, as in this ritual, contains enough for the condemnation of the order by the true followers of Christ. "They are sworn in the presence of Almighty God and brothers of this camp," and "promise and swear," etc., and "further promise and swear that I will carefully guard, and never reveal, any of the secrets of this order," etc., etc. Is not this enough to prove it a secret, oath-bound order? But perhaps some of them will respond, saying, "You don't know anything about it."

ANOTHER TESTIMONY FROM THE EVANGELIST MOODY.

In a discourse Dec. 8, 1887, during his late meetings at Pittsburgh, D. L. Moody spoke as follows: "You cannot walk with God and with the world at the same time. In Jeremiah 6: 16, we are told to walk in the good old ways and we shall find rest for our souls. So many people call the old ways puritanical now. They say that the Bible was good enough for the middle ages, but that the world has outgrown it. There would be just as much sense in talking about outgrowing the sun. Truth never grows old. The Word of God is just as true to-day as it ever was. We want no new paths. The way our fathers took is the best way. Man never makes anything by taking other ways. They always lead to destruction. There is another command which we often neglect. 'Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.' I believe that one reason Christian people have so little is that they are not separated from the world. We are hand in glove with the world. At one time there was a cry that the church was going into the world, but it is now all the other way. The world has poured into the church like a flood. This has lowered the standard of the church and it has lost its testimony and power. This command, I believe, also touches secret societies. We have no right to go into societies where three-quarters of the members are the world. The body may vote for a Sabbath excursion, as such bodies often do, and in consequence the Christian is compromised. I believe that a believer has no right to marry an unbeliever. See how much sorrow and misery such marriages bring into the world. The mirth that cheers the world will freeze the Christian. How can two walk together unless they agree? I remember an apple tree we used to have at home that stood so near the road that half its branches were over on the other side of the highway. There anything in the road was considered public property. It was an early tree and yet it never bore ripe fruit. We always watched it, and the moment an apple begun to ripen a club was shied at it. That tree always had a lot of clubs lying under it, and more lodged in its branches. Why was it that that tree never bore ripe fruit? It was because it was too near the border—too near the world. That is the case with many Christians. You must get out of the world if you want spiritual life and power. So many Christians are yoked with the ungodly that they have lost their testimony. The ungodly have a great contempt for the worldly Christian."

CHARITY AS PRACTICED BY LODGES.

The various secret societies take pleasure in posing as benevolent institutions, who allay the suffering of the sick, support the widow and orphan. This is the bait with which an increase of membership is to be secured; is the holy mash intended to deceive those benevolent at heart. These are hard words; but, sad to say, they are true. All charity and benevolence lodges boast of may be compressed into the words: Pay your dues and we will pay ours. When a case of sickness or death is reported to a lodge, the accounts of that brother are closely scrutinized, and if an arrearage of but a small amount is deducted, this will cause the "brother" to lose the benefit of all his former contributions and, of course, save expenses to the lodge. Inability to pay the dues is no excuse in the charitable eye of the lodge. The Knights of Pythias, for instance, have the motto, "Friendship, Charity, Benevolence," but in their "Complete Manual and Text Book" they say, page 188: "There is scarcely a week that passes but what we hear of some brother who has met with an accident, or been taken sick, and when his name is announced in the lodge he is found to be in arrears with his dues, perhaps only a few days. There are but few of our older members who cannot relate some particular case of hardship, the result of carelessness on the part of a brother in not paying his dues." A "particular case of hardship" is hence not entitled to the charity of a lodge, unless all dues are paid. How do such "charitable" principles which prevail among the Knights of Pythias not only, conform with the divine injunction, "Love thy neighbor as thyself?" and again (Isa. 58: 7), "Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?"—nor ask him whether he paid his dues.—Lutheran Witness.

Canon Wilberforce is reported as saying in Philadelphia that when a physician prescribed alcohol for him, he prescribed the door for the physician.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

THE OUTLOOK IN NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, La.

The trip from Chicago to this city via the Illinois Central railroad proved a very enjoyable one in every respect. Accommodations and attendants were all that could be desired and I wish to commend this direct line from the North to the South to all contemplating a journey to this land of perpetual bloom. Those of our friends coming to the Convention here on the 17th, will, I feel sure, find it to their personal comfort and advantage to take the I. C. R. R. unless their experiences shall be different from ours.

Our party, comprising Mrs. Stoddard, Bro. Chittenden and myself, arrived in this city on the morning of the 21st, safe and sound, having made the entire journey of nearly 1,000 miles in less than thirty-six hours, without loss of sleep or special noteworthy incident by the way. The transition from bleak winter to balmy spring, and from snow and ice to blooming gardens and orange trees loaded with their golden fruit, in so brief a time seems almost like magic, but it is a palpable reality of which we cannot entertain a doubt.

Mrs. S. and I have obtained a room at the Christian Woman's Exchange, 41 Bourbon street, and have set up light housekeeping in a small way. Bro. Chittenden has a room near and is our frequent and welcome guest. The weather has not been favorable for getting about the city since our arrival, but I have seen the following brethren: Dr. Burgess of Straight University, Dr. Mitchell and Dr. Marsh of Leland University, Rev. A. S. Jackson of the First Baptist church, Rev. J. Marks of 6th Baptist, Revs. H. C. Cotton, P. A. Jones, F. J. Davidson, Marcus Dale (M. E.), S. T. Planton, J. G. Wracks and Byron Gunner, and many others.

I can scarcely give an intelligent opinion of the outlook for our convention yet, but I am hopeful. Much will doubtless depend upon the prayers and attendance of friends from abroad, and I earnestly request the prayers of all Christians for the blessing of God on this effort, and trust that as many as possibly can will sustain the meeting by their presence, as well as by their prayers. J. P. STODDARD.

TEXAS PROMISES TO LEAD THE REFORM HOST.

METHODISTS AND BAPTISTS NEARLY UNANIMOUS AGAINST THE LODGE.

The city of Houston, Texas, is in the same latitude as New Orleans, but has a somewhat cooler and dryer climate. The great prairies of the north, which come to the very borders of the city, make a way for the "Northers" that the Texans so much dread, so that the orange and the oleander, which usually survive the winters of New Orleans, have here a very precarious existence. Nevertheless, the thermometer has not gone below 19 degrees at any time, and the snow remained but a few days. For nearly a week it has rained, and vegetation has fairly started in its spring growth.

The city had, according to a recent census, 36,464 inhabitants. It is about fifty years old and is slowly growing. Formerly it had a good deal of trade through the bayou that runs down to Galveston Bay, but that trade has greatly declined and now it is an important railroad center.

There is a fair representation of the different religious denominations with usually good houses of worship. Among the colored churches the Baptists are, as usual, in the majority, though the M. E. church is well represented. Indeed, the Northern Methodists, as they are called here, have a much larger membership in Texas than in any other of the cotton-growing States. Unlike their brethren in the North, they are beginning to have a realizing sense of the evils of the secret lodge system and are speaking out against it. The presiding elder on this district told me that he found it everywhere one of the greatest hindrances to church work. He says that the question was up in their last annual conference, and that from the bishop down there was but one opinion as to the pernicious character of these orders. One of the leading pastors of the city said he had never joined any order, but had found them so great and obstinate to church discipline that he had some time since concluded to take the advice of some of his people and see how they could be managed from the inside. He had accordingly sent his application and fee to a Masonic lodge, and was notified that he had been accepted. On further reflection he found that he could not in good conscience become a member. Since then he has read "Finney on Masonry," and wonders how any Christian man could be connected with the lodge.

The two leading colored Baptist pastors were in hearty sympathy with our reform. Both invited me to lecture in their churches. I was able to speak in but one, of which Rev. Yates is pastor.

The condition of the streets was such that locomotion was almost impossible. The schools were suspended, and in most of the churches there was no public worship on the 15th or the 22d. I listened, however, to an excellent sermon at the First Presbyterian church, and visited several times the pleasant rooms of the Y. M. C. A., where I met a kind reception and where the Cynosure was welcomed. Nor should I forget to mention the excellent school conducted by Misses Peck and Dizer, who are laboring under the Baptist Home Missionary Society. I need not say that they are in sympathy with our work, and will be glad to circulate our literature. Their address is corner of Bell and Sanjacinto streets, Houston, Texas.

I left Houston on the 23d at 5:35 P. M., and at 9:40 reached the little city of Orange, on the Sabine River. This is a lumber region and abounds in great steam saw mills. I found here two brethren who have been long identified with our work. Rev. J. Hamilton and Mr. Isaac Simmons formerly lived at Johnson's Bayou, Louisiana, when that town was nearly destroyed by flood in October, 1886. They lost most of their property and came here. They did not lose their faith in God nor in his truth, and feel as ever the same interest in our work. It will be difficult to hold any meetings here, and I shall probably go to New Iberia and thence to New Orleans. H. H. HINMAN.

A LIVE COUNTY ASSOCIATION.

The DuPage County Association, Illinois, is about the only county auxiliary body which continues to hold regular meetings. Its annual meeting in the Congregational church at Bartlett, Ill., last Friday was a spirited and useful meeting, profitable to all who attended, and a prophesy of many more.

The Association was welcomed in a brief but happy address by Rev. Alexander Thomson, pastor of the church, and member of the N. C. A. Board of Directors. He made a striking comparison of the lodge oath and the manner of its administration to business documents, a lease, for example. The oath is taken bit by bit, a few words at a time. Thus the Union League oath had been doled out to himself, and when all was over he could remember but a slight part of an adjuration most solemn in its form of appeal to God. A lady of his acquaintance who had joined the grange told him of a like experience. After the initiation she remembered practically nothing of the obligation. This he believed to be a general experience. Yet this was the important part of the whole for the individual member, since therein he promised in a most solemn manner to perform duties which under the circumstances it was not possible to remember. No business man would accept or give a lease in such a way. Business documents of that kind are carefully examined; but oaths, which the lodge enforces with the direst penalties, are given in this fragmentary manner. Thousands are taking upon themselves such engagements in a way that makes it impossible for them to know the purport of the whole.

Prof. H. A. Fischer, president of the organization responded briefly. The reports of officers were received, showing that laudable efforts had been made during the year to increase the interest in the reform, by personal efforts and correspondence. Illustrated lectures showing the identity of Freemasonry and ancient paganism had been given in several places by I. R. B. Arnold. In one of the Congregational churches of the county the pastor reported the conversion of a 33-degree Mason, who had belonged to the Oriental Consistory of Chicago and to some fifteen secret bodies, some of which he had himself originated. Years ago he had given much time to the organizing of lodges. On his conversion he publicly confessed that he now had something better than lodgery, and showed his pastor an armful of rituals which he once enjoyed, but were now exchanged for the Word of the true God.

In the afternoon after a season of earnest prayer, Prof. C. M. Lowe spoke on the work of the N. C. A. at the South, showing its importance, its rapid and promising growth, and urging a hearty co-operation of all Christian people in the effort to deliver the colored churches from the members of the lodge.

Mr. W. L. Eglow of the Senior Class, Wheaton, spoke on the Sons of Veterans, making a forcible argument against this order because of its principle of self-perpetuation by a kind of hereditary clause; because it is keeping up a barbarous war spirit, and fans the flame of antagonism between sections of our own country, which should long since have been put out; because it taught a false idea of patriotism; because it trained for more objectionable orders; and because it required extra-judical oaths which God condemned.

The Secretary, Mr. Edgar Wylie, conducted a Bible reading on the Rejection of Christ by the Masonic order, which started a discussion in which there was quite general participation.

In the evening Rev. R. Menk, pastor of the United Evangelical church in Turner made an address in German on the way the lodge deals with the revealed will of God. He spoke eloquently, and many in the audience listened eagerly to their fatherland tongue. Pres. C. A. Blanchard followed in a most earnest appeal for Christianity, showing from the incompatibility of the lodge and the prayer-meeting that secretism should be opposed.

The officers elected were: Rev. A. Thomson, president; John Sutcliffe and Rev. Mr. Irion, vice-presidents; J. N. Bedford, secretary; B. Loveless, treasurer; and twelve township secretaries.

AMONG THE HILLS OF SOUTHEASTERN OHIO.

Near MOUNTVILLE, Morgan Co., O., Jan. 26, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am down here among the hills at the home of Bro. Jerome Moody. On every side of where I write the hills stretch up toward the sky until they appear like young mountains. They seem the larger to one accustomed to the level prairies of the West. While they would not seem desirable to me for cultivation, yet there is a grandeur about them that cannot fail to attract those who love the picturesque. Since my last writing I did some work for our cause at Cedarville and spent some time at Columbus where I had the pleasure of attending special meetings conducted by State Secretary and Treasurer Rev. C. W. Hiatt. Owing to a number of hindrances these meetings were not as largely attended as some he has held, but interest and attendance was increasing when I was compelled to leave. Some ten had confessed Christ, and there seemed to be a general looking to God for the outpouring of his Spirit.

Leaving wife and home on Monday morning, three hours' ride found me sixty-five miles south at Corning, a place of about two thousand inhabitants whose chief industries seem to be mining coal and drinking liquor. Having to wait a few hours for a train to this place I made inquiries and looked about. I found there were twelve saloons, nine lodges, three churches, three law offices, and the number of undertakers I did not learn, but concluded their business would prosper well. Pigs and half-dressed, and half-starved children ran together in the streets. It was not an uncommon sight to see a mother leading her child as she went to the saloon for a drink. The pastors of the two Protestant churches [Baptist and Methodist] were away. I did not take time to look up the priest.

Coming to this place I received a cordial welcome at Bro. Moody's and found he had made a number of appointments. He has since assisted what he could. My first address was given Tuesday evening in Bishopville, the town where Bro. M. was made a Mason and where he served the lodge for ten years, about seven of them as junior and senior deacon. The place of meeting was unfortunate. It was an old church built by the Wesleyans years ago. It has become quite dilapidated. There were three women and some twenty-five men young and old, who shivered around the stove with their overcoats on while I proceeded to unravel the mysteries of one of the last resorts of the devil to catch men's souls and fit them for their grand lodge, which they claim is above. All seemed interested, asked questions, and expressed a desire to know more concerning this matter. No Masons appeared. Bro. M. followed my remarks, testifying to the correctness of what I had said. The craft are very bitter against him and of course defame him in all possible ways, but he is looking for the "recompense of his reward," not in this world.

Last night we found our way over the hills, through the woods to a neat little church owned by the Free Methodists, of which church Bro. M. is a member. The building has recently been erected at a cost of eight hundred and fifty dollars. A little man by the name of Wade came down here, held meetings, and was the means, under God, of its erection. Rain fell and froze yesterday making the hills very icy. Notwithstanding all the impediments when we reached the church we found quite a congregation of the "pilgrims" as they are called. In fact I did not know where they all could come from, for people are not very thick down this way. I never spoke to a more appreciative audience. After Bro. M. had followed me with some very appropriate remarks he thought he could raise a collection, but did not succeed very well. Money evidently is a poor crop in this region.

Though deprived of many of the advantages and privileges of modern civilization I think the people generally here are trying to serve God and get through to glory. Sickness is very rare. I am told the doctor barely makes enough to pay his board bill. I have taken a few subscriptions to our paper and expect more at Mountville, where I speak to-night and to-morrow night. Partial arrangements have been made for a lecture for Wrightsville for Saturday evening. Should this fail, I expect to spend Sabbath and the first of next week with the Friends at Chester Hill. From thence probably to Athens Co. I trust the friends throughout the State will improve the winter days in pushing the work. Much can be done by circulating tracts and talking with your neighbors and friends.

W. B. Stoddard.

—The Friends have had a mission station in Constatinople since 1881, when a young Armenian, who had been educated in England, began work. In 1883 a meeting was organized, with twenty men and women enrolled as members. Property was purchased for the mission in 1884 in Stamboul, at a cost of $8,000, and a dispensary was established, to which Moslems as well as Armenians resort. The Friends also have an industrial school at Bahjijig, sixty miles from Constantinople, with thirty scholars. The mission, as a Friend writes us, is carried on in entire harmony with the work of the American Board. The Friends have been very careful, he writes, not to open a mission "to feed on the converts of the noble American Board."

ANOTHER WORD TO THE IOWA LODGE CHAMPION.

MR. EVANS AND THE SUPERVISOR MUST COME TO AN UNDERSTANDING.

Dear Cynosure:—After listening to Mr. Evans's address, which I reviewed in my last letter, I went to Jasper county. But before bidding adieu to Mr. Evans, I want to tell you what he said as an Odd-fellow about the secrets of Odd-fellowship.

"The secrets of Odd-fellowship are our own," he said proudly. And, then, seemingly with a malicious desire to hurt the feelings of that numerous class of persons who have come to the knowledge of these secrets, without being frightened with chains and skeletons and lances, he compared them to "sneak thieves."

I did not suppose that Bro. Evans was ignorant of the fact that Odd-fellowship has been revealed. But while I had no doubt but what he knew that the secrets of the order were out, I was not quite prepared to have him virtually admit the fact, and manifest his spleen by railing on those who had come to the knowledge of what he, as an Odd-fellow, was pleased to term "our secrets."

Now, if it were an innocent pastime, I, for one, would have no objection to his diversion of making faces and calling names, even though it might not seem to me to be the most fitting occupation for a minister of the Gospel. But, however I might feel disposed to indulge Bro. Evans in what seemed so agreeable to his tastes, on the ground that it was perfectly harmless to me, the fact that this, like the religious part of his discourse that I reviewed in my last letter, is sophistical and deceptive, should be pointed out.

To illustrate my thought on this part of Mr. Evans's address, I will relate an incident as given by a gentleman of Floyd county, Iowa, who was one of the county supervisors and a Freemason. It was given to a ministerial friend of mine. The supervisor said: "Masonry is a good enough institution, and I used to take quite an interest in it."

"But," he added, "it has been given away until it is not worth any thing any more."

Then he related how a Mason came to him in his journey who had fallen among thieves, who had slyly stripped him of his pocketbook, and left him without the means to prosecute his journey. He made himself known to the supervisor by the sly art, that only Masons are supposed to know, and asked for a loan of ten dollars. He gave his name, and the name, number and location of his lodge. The supervisor loaned him ten dollars, and when he went to lodge he put in his claim against the traveling brother. His lodge sent the account to the lodge to which the traveling Mason said he belonged, to be collected and returned to the lodge of the lender. The innocent supervisor anticipated the pleasure of, at no distant day, checking out from the treasury of his own lodge, the money that he had loaned to a worthy and distressed brother. Judge, then, of his chagrin when, instead of the ten dollars, word was returned that no such man belonged to that lodge, or ever had.

Three times this game was played upon the supervisor. Each time he was increasingly careful to test the applicant by all the rules known to the mystic art; and each time the word came back, "No such man belongs to this lodge or ever has."

"I used to take an interest in Masonry," the supervisor repeated; "but it has been given away until it is not worth any thing any more."

Given away! Yes, that is the word, GIVEN away. To accept a gift is one thing, and to practice the art of a sneak thief is another thing; is it not, Bro. Evans? Really, my dear sir, have you practiced sophistry until you cannot vent your spleen in a little bit of railing without charging those who have simply received the secrets of Odd-fellowship when they have been given away, with being sneak thieves, because they know how you teach moral lessons in the lodge?

But enough of this irony, dear reader, you see that Mr. Evans missed his way when he taught the self-righteousness of Odd-fellowship as a substitute for the righteousness that the truly penitent sinner receives through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Dr. Evans knows, full well, that he should be teaching the people, "except your righteousness exceed the righteousness" of the Freemasons and Odd-fellows, "ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." And he knows that he ought not to call those honest people thieves, who have innocently received the secrets of Odd-fellowship when they have been "given away." I say "knows," for I hope he has not practiced the false worship of the lodge until he has lost the power to discern truth.

Pitiable, indeed, is the condition of that man who has practiced the lodge worships until he has come so completely under the mesmeric power of Satan that he can see no difference between the word paintings of love in Odd-fellowship, and the love of God that is really shed abroad in the heart of the humble penitent, who has believed in Jesus Christ, and received the gift of the Holy Ghost, according to his promise. But if a D. D. should be beguiled into the lodge, and should practice its false worships until he became so completely under the mesmeric power of Satan that the lodge counterfeits of religion seemed to him as good as the true grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, so that he would say to those who are seeking to climb up to heaven by the way of the lodge instead of by Christ, "All the angels of God cannot keep you out of heaven," it would not be strange, after becoming so spiritually opaque, if he should commit the little blunder of supposing that those who have received the secrets of Odd-fellowship, when they were given away, are thieves. And, of course, when a man's understanding is darkened until he really thinks that those who innocently receive what has been given away are thieves, it is a relief to his mind to say so.

But the saddest part of it all is, that those young men that Mr. Evans encourages to attempt to climb up to heaven by Odd-fellowship instead of plainly telling them that Odd-fellowship is a delusion and a snare, and that Christ is the one only way to God and heaven,—these must, if in their blindness they seek heaven by the way of Odd-fellowship instead of by Christ, hear the Master say, "He that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."

Oh, my dear brother, how can you descend from the position of a minister of Jesus Christ and his glorious Gospel to a teacher of Odd-fellowship? How can you substitute its mockeries for the glorious Gospel of Christ, and thus aid Satan to delude and destroy the souls of men? C. F. Hawley.

NOTES OF THE NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN CHURCHES.

On Sabbath evening I preached in the Dutch Reformed church on Claremont Ave., Rev. William D. Perry, pastor. This congregation was organized in 1852. They have a large church gallery on three sides. National Reform was well received. I preach three times every Sabbath, morning and afternoon supplying Rev. Carson's pulpit. Paul "made tents" that he might preach the Gospel without being chargeable to the people. We do this that we may preach the mediatorial dominion of Christ over the nations in the pulpits of this city, and not burden the over-drained treasury of the National Reform Association. The Brooklyn Daily Times gave a good paragraph to our movement last Friday. We took an article on this reform up to the editor of the New York Observer. The editor would have nothing to do with this impracticable prohibition. They were dead set against that. He believed in working for what is practicable, high license and tax. Nevertheless, he took the paper under consideration.

Monday noon I attended the Presbyterian Ministers' meeting in Dr. Crosby's church. Dr. Crafts read an essay on "How to get the Bible studied." He supposed not one family in ten had family worship among professors. While there is much studying about the Bible, there is not a great deal of accurate knowledge of the contents of the book. He suggested systematic study, reading the Bible in course clear through, committing the Catechism, etc. Especially he urged bringing Sabbath-school children into the public service. When the gallery is filled with children the minister will be sure to adapt the service to them. Dr. Worrell said, "Before Gibbons became Cardinal he wrote to the Pope telling of their success in America. Says he, 'We can manage every class here except the Scotch and Irish Presbyterians, who have committed a little book they call the Shorter Catechism. We can do nothing with them. they are lost.' Let us hold on to the Catechism." Dr. Hall said, "The most pleasant duty in the church which he served was to review the lesson with the Sabbath-school. He went from class to class asking them questions and hearing their questions. It brings the children near to their pastor." And that is the secret of success.

WHY ZION LANGUISHES.

Ware, Mass.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Inquiries are being made in regard to the "languishing state of Zion," not only in the East, but in all parts of our beloved land, and I wish to notice, briefly as possible, some of the many reasons why this state of things exists. Various opinions have been given, some of which I believe to be true, others to be false and ungrounded. I have been told here in Massachusetts that the reason why we did not have "old-fashioned revivals" was because the people were more enlightened and had a better and different way of doing business, an easier method of getting people into the church. It does not seem necessary to "renounce the devil with all his works" but lock arms and walk right in, "hail fellows well met." That is what the "liberal" United Brethren are trying to do, or at least it is the commission platform. I advise all to keep off from it who do not want to go down, for the vessel is not only a leaky craft but has a traitor's flag hoisted. Beware!

We see, especially here in the East, a great effort to fully unite the church and the world. Separation seems to be out of the question, and in all the sermons I have listened to, by the orthodox ministry, I have heard but very slight reference made to this all-important point—"separation from the world." In my view there is no plainer command in the Bible than to be separate from the world.

Yet this seems to be an impossibility with the present state of society respecting the numerous secret societies. So many churches court the favor of these orders that they are inseparably connected. A Masonic minister attends church on Sabbath, perhaps attends other religious services during the week, and a meeting in the "lodge room" is frequently interspersed. Who is in that lodge room? Not only infidels, atheists, deists, Jews, Arabs, but, in fact, murderers, robbers, liars and thieves. A minister of our Lord Jesus Christ is there, too, to take upon himself the same horrid oaths that the others have taken. Then talk of his preaching Christ to such a class! He might as well talk to so many Egyptian mummies. They say, and truthfully, too, he is no better than I am. He does the same things in the lodge room that I do; then why say he is better than I am? That minister's influence for leading souls to Christ, and getting them thoroughly converted to God, is lost. He may get people to join the church, but they are not "living epistles, read and known of all men," but are dead weights, standing in the way of sinners, and hedging up the real way to salvation. A Mason of high standing in Pennsylvania said to me, "If such ministers are Christians, then I am," yet (with an oath), "they are a set of hypocrites."

Can we wonder why Zion languishes, with such men as leaders? It is a necessity, for it would be out of God's order and plan to save souls while they cling to "idol worship," and "regard iniquity in their hearts." "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me." Psalm 66: 18.

Repentance toward God and faith in our Lord

Jesus Christ, seeking forgiveness of our sins, is necessary for our salvation. The majority who profess conversion under such labors, partake too much of of this unholy influence. They are ready for the theater, horserace, and the ball room. They are ready to say, as one said to me not long since, "I was brought up that way." Talk to such about faith in prayer, and they seem astonished. Truly, it can be said here in New England that the "Amen corner has died out." Not a vestige is left. If a hearty amen, or glory to God, should be heard it would be like a bomb thrown in their midst.

Another evil, yet not the least, is the manner in which the Gospel is supported. Church fairs, festivals, crazy tea parties, grab bags, sales rooms, fish ponds, and other things, too numerous to mention, are resorted to in order that the preacher may be supported. This, too, is an abomination in the sight of the Lord, and a great hindrance to the work of the church. People pay their taxes or grocery bills without any such parade. Then why is it necessary to resort to such measures to support the Gospel? I think there is no need of such a course if people would deal as honestly with the cause of Christ as they do in worldly matters; no such wicked, unchristian measures would be resorted to. It truly is lowering our standard as Christians. If a church member wants an extra ornament to adorn their person, they have no trouble to find a way to purchase it, but let there be a call for an extra dollar for the cause of Christ and the church, see how quick excuses will come; and then some of the above methods come into requisition. Why not deal as honestly and uprightly with God, as you do with your fellow men? This, too, has a powerful influence, and Zion must languish under such administration.

By the help of the blessed Jesus I intend to keep out of this union with Satan, and stand aloof from all such entanglements and devices of the enemy. I wish to stand alone with Jesus, willing to be persecuted for righteousness' sake, realizing that in order to be his disciple, I must leave all and follow him. It is not wealth and numbers, but hearts filled with love to God, a church, pure, consecrated to the work of the Lord and faithful in labor for the salvation of the yet unsaved. Then Zion will flourish, and scores, yea, hundreds and thousands, will be saved and added to the church. MRS. L. M. HOYT.

TO NEW ORLEANS FROM KANSAS CITY.

A VERY CHEAP RATE.

1310 East Thirteenth Street,
KANSAS CITY, MO., Jan. 24, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Enclosed you will find an excursion bill which will be of value to many who may desire to attend the New Orleans convention. The nearest point to New Orleans to which this excursion will take us is Hammond, Louisiana, fifty-three miles from New Orleans, and the round trip rate from Hammond to New Orleans is $1.65, making the entire round trip from Kansas City only $18 50. The General Passenger Agent informs me that if tickets are purchased on the 7th of February, they can be used at any date thereafter, i. e , of course, within the prescribed time of the ticket, or it may mean only as late as the last date of the excursion Feb. 21, but in any case good for any one wishing to attend the convention on the 17th of February. Any persons who may desire to avail themselves of this reduced rate, if they will send me $16 85 I will purchase the tickets and retain them for them until they wish to use them, or could mail the tickets to those purchasing.

That you may be able to state to your subscribers that parties would be safe in sending money, as I am not well known in the West (since I have only been West two weeks) I, would give Rev. M. A. Gault or Rev. J. S. T. Milligan as references, or any Covenanter minister, and my position is that of General Secretary of Home Missions in the West for the Reformed Presbyterian church.

Hoping that these liberal railroad rates will induce many to go, I am yours respectfully,

J. MILLIGAN WYLIE.

PITH AND POINT.

TEN LECTURERS TO ONE NEEDED—TRUE! TRUE!! TRUE!!!

You are making a grand paper. Every number seems to be better than the other. I expect to spend a few days with Elder Smith and plan for future work. Times seem to be growing worse out this way. The G. A. R and the G. T 's are booming in Iowa. We need ten lecturers in the field for every one.—M. A. GAULT.

KNOW YE THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES?

I believe it is impossible for any thoughtful man to consider the condition of Europe at this present moment without alarm. Nations beating plowshares into swords, and their pruning-hooks into spears, and war—terrible war in the near future, the one thought of all; while, besides the foes that threaten each nation from without, the grinning skeleton of socialistic secret societies from within makes the future to thoughtful men simply appalling. Nor can we hope that the reaction of the coming conflict will not be felt here Surely it is a time to keep our lamps burning, for the Lord may be at hand. —A. THOMSON, Pastor Cong'l Church, Bartlett, Ill.

ORGANIZING AGAINST LODGERY.

I understand your paper is, under the power of God, taking strong grounds against Masonry and secret orders of all kinds, but especially the head of all secretism, Freemasonry. I want a sample copy of your paper with a view of taking it and enlarging its circulation if it is what I hope it is. Have you any definite plan for open organization to meet this foe of God and man, called Freemasonry. If so please send the plans or constitution if one exists. My firm belief is that more souls are going on the broad road to ruin through the blinding influence of this unchristian institution than any other one means.—IRA D. KELLOGG.

GOOD WORDS FOR THE SOUTHERN FUND.

We sympathize with the effort of the N. C. A. to put one thousand Cynosures in the families of the colored pastors of the South, and manifest it by enclosing in this an express order of $6 50, with prayer that it may bring forth abundant fruit.—W. H. G.

Two dollars is to send the Cynosure to the South. It is but a little towards the thousand. I wish it was much more. May the Lord bless it to the good of many. I wish every family would take the Cynosure. I send ours and give to many far and near. The Lord bless the editors. —MRS P. B. SHAW.

A WORK OF FAITH.

A lady says she has subscribed for the Cynosure from the first number to the present, has solicited her neighbors, and three are now and have been many years subscribers. Some, like seed sown on stony ground and among thorns, have taken the Cynosure awhile, then stopped: and some like the first son that told his father "I will not," afterwards repented and took it. I have walked many miles to canvass for the paper, have entertained students sent out to canvass for it, have thrown Cynosures into carriages, and asked strangers while in their carriage if they would accept of a paper. Many times they received them thankfully. Where there were to be open-air public speeches, I would scatter tracts and papers before the audience assembled. While on the cars I took papers with me, and as I had opportunity gave to some one or left them in the car. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand, for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether both shall be alike good "—Eccles. 11 6. "For there is no restraint to the Lord, to save by many or by few."—1 Samuel 14 6. "Lord, it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power."—2 Chron. 14 11.—MRS. S. B. ALLEN.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VII.—Feb. 12.—Jesus and the Little Ones.—Matt. 18: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.--But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. 19: 14.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

"Who (then) is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" Their question was not, What elements of character make true greatness? who of us is greatest? but, Who of us shall occupy the highest place in your coming kingdom?—Abbott. They had as yet no other notion of the kingdom that was shortly to appear than that it would be a temporal one; that their Master was to become a powerful prince, with places, honors, wealth, at his command.—Hanna. This question grew out of the imperfection of their character, and a misunderstanding of the nature of the kingdom of heaven. The same spirit has wrought unnumbered evils in the church and in the world.—P.

Jesus does not give them the answer they expected, pointing out the great ones, but lays down the principles of greatness in his kingdom: If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all, simply because the desire to be first, self seeking, is exactly opposite to the spirit which is the law of Christ's kingdom, the spirit of love, of self-denial, of helpfulness of others, of humility. Therefore, the more any one has of the desire to be first, the less he has of Christ's kingdom So that the desire to be first makes him last by the very nature of things. Despotism, self seeking, ambition, ever make a man a slave, a servant of all. He is a slave to his ambition, to the whims and opinions of other people, to circumstances.—P.

Distinguish between the strong desire to improve, to have large usefulness, to grow in holiness and love, and the desire to have more honor and power than others. Aut Cæsar aut nullus "to be first or nothing," leads to crimes and wars. It was Milton's Satan who said. "Better to reign in hell than serve in heaven." "How like a mounting devil in the heart rules the unreined ambition." But Paul's desire was divine, when he "pressed toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus"(Phil. 3:13, 14).—P.

"Except ye be converted." The Greek student should observe that the tense here is not the future, but the aorist, and represents neither an act completed in the past time—i. e., it is not equivalent to, Except ye had been converted—nor one to be effected in the future, Except ye shall be converted, but one past and continuing, Except ye be continually turned back from this spirit of self-seeking, and continually take on the spirit of a little child.—Abbott.

"And become as little children:" not sinless, for no children are sinless. They all need to be saved from being lost, as we see a little further on (vers. 11, 14). And if none but the sinless could enter the kingdom of heaven, that kingdom on earth would be empty. The meaning is, You must have those qualities which are characteristic of childhood, which make the ideal childhood. As Dr. Robinson puts it, "What you would have your child be to you, that be yourself to God." These qualities are: 1. humility; 2. freedom from ambition, rivalry, or jealousy; 3. tender and gracious affection; 4. perfect trust; 5. obedience; 6. a teachable spirit; 7. unworldliness; 8. indifference to the distinctions of rank and wealth.—P.

"Whosoever therefore shall humble himself (so as to be) as this little child." Humility is not thinking meanly of one's self, but being willing, even with great powers, to take a lowly office and perform seemingly menial and insignificant and not honored service. The first is not characteristic of childhood, the latter is. Christ's own example is the best interpretation of his teaching (John 13:3-5; 12:15; Phil. 2:5-8).—Abbott.

At this juncture John remembers a recent occurrence, and relates it for Jesus's approval. Probably during their recent tour of Galilee, two and two (Matt. 10:1; Mark 6:7, 30), they had met a stranger casting out devils in Jesus's name, and they forbade him because he did not follow them. The point was: (1) Here was a man doing the work of a disciple in the kingdom, and yet he had not enough of the Christlike spirit to follow Jesus, and especially his chosen twelve. How could that be consistent with what Jesus had been saying? (2) John himself not only would receive Jesus, but he would refuse to receive any who would not openly follow Jesus.

Offending the Little Ones. Our Lord does not mean vexing them, making them angry, or ill using them; but tempting or leading them into evil. The "little ones" are the more ignorant and simple minded, ready to believe and do what others tell them. In school, this temptation is to idleness, to extravagance, and the breach of school regulations. It comes through example, reproaches, and laughter. That boy has gone a good ways in the devil's service who will dare to influence another against his father and mother.—Dr. Arnold's Rugby School Sermons. There are many other ways, such as tempting to lie, to drink intoxicating drinks, suggesting religious doubts, breaking down religious habits, sneering at strictness of Sabbath-keeping and obedience to parents.

"But woe unto that man by whom the offence cometh:" who is guilty of this most awful of sins—the leading of others into sin. He that sins himself is weak, but he that leads others into sin is devilish. It is a fiend's business.

"Hand," the temptation to do what is wrong,—forgery, stealing, murder. "Foot," going into forbidden ways. "Halt," or lame from the loss of a foot. "Maimed," from the loss of a hand. "Eye," coveting, lusting. Hand, foot, and eye are the most valuable of our members, and often used proverbially to denote anything peculiarly dear and valuable; the dearest objects of our desires, the honors, possessions, or enjoyments we most prize.—Clark.

"Cast into (the) everlasting fire," that prepared for the devil and his angels (Matt. 25:41). Fire is the symbol of the most terrible torment; and nothing can put it out. The consequences of sin are eternal.

"In heaven their angels," their angels in heaven, who are their ministering spirits (Heb. 1:14). In the Old Testament angels are represented as guardians of God's people and nations (Ps. 34:7; Dan. 10:13, 20, 21); in the New, they are more particularly represented as guardians of individual believers. Our Saviour only reveals here the general fact that his followers have their angels who are their attendants and guardians.—G. W. Clark.

'Do always behold the face of my Father," i e, children are under the care of the highest order of angels, of those that stand continually in the presence of God and have most direct and immediate access to him.—Cook.

Some have strongly felt the objection to the Gospel, that it is not probable that the Son of the infinite God would leave all the measureless stars without redemption and come to this little world, which is but a mote in the sunbeam compared with other worlds, and here become man and die for us, the almost invisible atoms in this obscure corner of the universe. But here the enigma is solved. Wherever the lost are, there he must go for them. The hearts of all the family go after the lost one.—P.

"It is not the will of your Father.... that one of these little ones should perish;" these little ones, as above, weak, humble believers. God will not that a single one of them should perish—reach the final state of the lost. "Little ones" cannot refer to all mankind; here, as throughout, it includes children. It warrants the belief that children, dying in childhood, are all saved. The parable shows that it cannot be on the ground of their innocence, but because the Son of man came to save them.—Rev. Com. But it is also true that Jesus came to save all the lost; seeks to save them. God has done everything for their salvation which wisdom and love can do. And those who are lost are lost because they refuse to be saved. They will not come to Jesus. They resist every effort divine love can make to redeem them.—P.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.
College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill.
First Congregational, Leland, Mich.
Sugar Grove Church, Green county, Pa.
Military Chapel, M. E., Lowndes county, Miss.
Hopewell Missionary Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Cedar Grove Miss. Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Simon's Chapel, M. E., Lowndes Co., Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Miss. Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Brownlee Church, Caledonia, Miss.
Salem Church, Lowndes Co., Miss.
West Preston Baptist Church, Wayne Co., Pa.

OTHER LOCAL CHURCHES

adopting the same principle are—

Baptist churches: N. Abington, Pa.; Menomonie, Mondovi, Waubeck and Spring Prairie, Wis.; Wheaton, Ill.; Perry, N. Y.; Spring Creek, near Burlington, Iowa; Lima, Ind.; Constableville, N. Y. The "Good Will Association" of Mobile, Ala., comprising some twenty-five colored Baptist churches; Bridgewater Baptist Association, Pa.; Old Tebo Baptist, near Leesville, Henry Co., Mo.; Hoopeston, Ill; Esmen, Ill.; Strykersville, N. Y.

Congregational churches: 1st of Oberlin, O.; Tonica, Crystal Lake, Union and Big Woods, Ill.; Solsbury, Ind.; Congregational Methodist Maplewood, Mass.

Independent churches in Lowell, Countryman school house near Lindenwood, Marengo and Streator, Ill.; Berea and Camp Nelson, Ky; Ustick, Ill.; Clarksburg, Kansas; State Association of Ministers and Churches of Christ in Kentucky.

TOBACCO DOCTORS.

BY J. W. HODGE, M. D.

Perhaps one of the most shameful and pernicious exhibitions of modern inconsistency is furnished by the medical man who is addicted to the use of tobacco. That any human being should, with "unblushing effrontery," set himself up as an apostle of the healing art, while, at the same time, by depraved indulgences and sensual gratifications, he is habitually violating the natural laws of life and health, and setting a vicious example before a world looking to him as an exponent of physiological law, is sad evidence of professional depravity. Moreover, that such baneful incongruity between the profession and practice of the physician should be regarded generally with such unaccountable nonchalance as to be tamely tolerated by the lay public, while it merits their most indignant censure and should provoke from them the most trenchant castigation, reminds the philanthropist that this filthy habit is one of the phases of idolatry which as yet remains uncriminated by public sentiment. That the tobacco pest is one of the most grievous scourges of modern civilization no fairminded person in the exercise of common intelligence will attempt to deny.

The illustrious surgeon, Prof. Higginbottom, of Nottingham, England, said: "Tobacco has no redeeming property whatever, and it is a main cause of ruining our young men, and rendering useless the best efforts of ministers of the gospel. The proverbial drunkenness of our country can only be remedied by laying the axe at the root of its superinducing cause—the thirst-creating power of tobacco-smoking."

A. L. Gibbon, M. D., medical director of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, writes: "Tobacco-smoking creates a thirst for alcoholic stimulants; by its depressing and disturbing effects on the nerve centres, it determines functional disease of the heart, impairs vision, blunts the memory, and prevents mental application."

John Lizars, late Professor of Surgery in the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, wrote: "Tobacco-smoking creates ulcers on the lips, tongue and tonsils; it produces vertigo, vomiting, dyspepsia, piles, diseased liver, congestion of the brain, apoplexy, palsy, loss of memory, insanity, blindness, deafness, and functional disease of the heart."

Prof. Solly, senior operating surgeon at St. Thomas' Hospital, writes: "I know of no single vice which does so much harm as tobacco-smoking. It is a snare and a delusion."

In the annual report of the Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane, published in 1876, seventeen cases of insanity are attributed to the use of tobacco.

An eminent London physician states that a large percentage of the cases of night-deaths—deaths occurring suddenly during sleep—which came under his observation, occurred in men addicted to tobacco-smoking; and in whom, he says, death was probably induced by cardiac cessation, from the paralyzing effect of tobacco upon the nerve centres.

Quotations of this tenor from the most eminent medical authorities on both sides of the Atlantic might be multiplied almost ad infinitum. In view, then, of these appalling statements coming from the most undoubted sources of authority should not the parents and citizens of every enlightened community awake to a just appreciation of the magnitude of this evil; and forthwith avail themselves of their rightful authority to prevent the perpetuation of such a vicious habit, by strenuously insisting, at all hazards, upon the observance of right moral and right physical habits, especially on the part of those who "set themselves up" as teachers of youth and guardians of the public health? In this way only can the dispersion of these baleful narcotic mists and deadly vapors from the face of society be effected.

The frightful extent to which this pernicious practice prevails at the present time is unprecedented by anything to be found in the annals of recorded time. Tobacco greets us at every corner. Puppies in the guise of officers and disguise of gentlemen, puff their foul impertinence into ladies' faces. It is scarcely possible to travel in any public conveyance without encountering the rudeness and boorishness of smokers, who have become so demoralized by their filthy habit as to ignore the proprieties of social life. As you pass along the crowded thoroughfares of our large cities, you are compelled to inhale the nauseating fumes from cigars and pipes, with the disgusting reflection that you are taking in the foul effluvia from decayed teeth, filthy mouths and diseased lungs. Here, in one great tobacco-brotherhood, united by the strongest narcotic ties, may be found scavengers, doctors, bootblacks, blackguards, and blacklegs, all champing spitting and puffing in mutual narcotic sympathy—all breathing narcotic incense to the same licentious god.

Tobacco-smoke when drawn into the mouth absorbs the putrid emanations which it finds there and diffuses them in the atmosphere; and, moreover, data have recently been furnished by eminent pathologists, which, if they do not warrant a positive conclusion, they at least establish a strong probability in favor of the communicability of certain forms of malignant ulceration of the mouth, and respiratory passages, by inhaling the smoke from a diseased person. Is it not an appalling reflection to think that these pestilential vapors which are ever an abomination to the lovers of pure air and on whose lethal wings are borne at times the malignant germs of disease and death, should thus prevade the common atmosphere to which, in its native purity, all living creatures have an indefeasible right?—American Reformer.

THE THOUSAND COLORED PASTORS.

SHALL THEY HAVE THEIR PAPER?

Week by week generous friends of the colored race answer, YES. The fund for this purpose reaches $611.-04, as reported on page 13, and cheering letters show the enthusiasm in this enterprise of all who realize the nature of secretism. Every letter from the South justifies our efforts, and approves the judgment that no expenditure of an equal sum will bring so great returns.

The $900 contributed for this purpose in the two years and a half after June, 1885, placed the Cynosure in the hands of huudreds of colored pastors, but few of whom could have paid for it themselves. Note the grand results which have followed, chiefly because of this work:

1. The Louisiana Baptist State Convention, representing 70,000 church members, has voted against the lodge.

2. The Texas Baptists will probably take the same stand at their next meeting.

3. The Methodist Episcopal church in Texas is nearly ready for like action.

4. So are the Arkansas Baptists, a prominent Association having already so voted.

5. The same churches in western Tennessee are coming out against secretism.

6. So in Alabama the Good-will Association is standing against the orders.

7. The Congregational churches all through the South are opposing the lodge, encouraged by the American Missionary Association.

8. Two schools for higher instruction have been organized within a year which maintain this principle, while nearly every institution for the education of the Negro is open for instruction of the students on the dangers of the lodge.

9. Christians at the North should hasten this work with all zeal, because the reflex influence upon their churches will soon be powerfully felt.

The Cynosure has proved the best agency in accomplishing this work in the South. A fund to send a thousand copies to as many colored pastors is being raised. Dear reader, has not the Lord given you means to help it on?

POPERY AND MASONRY.

Some of our friends, readers of the Cynosure, on reading the new book on the thirty-three degrees of Scotch Rite Masonry are puzzled to find that the rite which rules the Masonry of the world was made by Jesuits and Jews. How can it be, since war to knife now exists between the papacy and the lodge?

The answer is this: In 1773 Pope Clement XIV. entirely suppressed the order of Jesuits throughout the world; because the Society of Jesus seized and executed the substance of the power of the church while the pope only had the semblance. That quarrel is now healed and the two are one.

So it will be with popery and Masonry, which are one in nature and will be one in policy and in fact. But let us rejoice that their present battle is opening the eyes of thousands to the nature of both. The following specimen is from the Catholic Review of recent date:

"Some of the Masonic sects in Europe approach diabolism in their hatred of the Catholic church and in the activity and ingenuity of their propaganda against the church. They have declared a war to the knife against it, or, to be more in keeping with their teaching and practice, a war to the dagger and the poison-bowl, their favorite weapons. They manifest a fiendish greed for the apostolate of wickedness, and leave no stone unturned, no infamous device unexhausted, that may tell against the church and draw souls away from her. They are more encouraged in this warfare because it appeals to the worst passions of men, and because it is sanctioned, if not actually directed, by a government which is Masonic to the core."

It is true, Masons hate and oppose the Romish church for two reasons: because the church hates them, and also because the lodge hates Christ and refuses to worship him. But enlightened Christians do not hate the "Holy Catholic Church," but the secret order of Jesuits, which manufactured the ruling rite of Masonry, and which now runs the Romish church. We should always remember that the Holy Catholic Church existed fifteen solid centuries and almost a half before there were any Jesuites. Nor should the words of Lafayette be forgotten, who said, If the American Constitution falls, it will fall by these same Jesuits, who since 1540 are the head secret order of the world. The "Holy Catholic Church" and the "Roman Catholic Church" are two organizations that essentially differ.

A LODGE WAKE.

"Corruptio optimi pessima." (The best people corrupted become the vilest.)

A late Worcester (Mass.) paper gives a full account of a Masonic mock funeral in honor of Charles W. Moody, late secretary of Worcester Lodge of Perfection. It was held in the Masonic hall of that city, and attended by 14-degree Masons, Scottish Rite, "leading citizens," public officials, and prominent Masons of other rites. The hall was garnished and beautified with flowers. The chair of the dead secretary, like that of John B. Finch in Miss Willard's memorial services, was draped in mourning purple; with the addition in this case of the "ivy leaf" garland of the heathen god of drunkenness, the jolly god, Bacchus. A tiny coffin was placed in the middle of the hall, loaded with flowers. A semi-heathen Congregationalist pastor, Lovering, "said prayers for deliverance," whatever that may mean; and, to astonish gapers and starers, and show the awful superiority and mystery of Masonry, the paper says, "The officers of the lodge marched in procession and took their respective places;" and after the address, Masons and the lodge master performed "The Commemoration of the Acacia," which must have made the beholders wonder, as we do, what in the world that was. And mixed and interspersed with this demi-heathen devil worship were sung beautiful hymns—meant for Christ when written, but here sung to Satan, such as: "The Lord is my Shepherd," and half a dozen others. "Incense offering was performed by Rev. J. F. Lovering." And the services were closed with, "Must Jesus bear the Cross alone." The little mimic coffin was then pushed aside, and "a social hour was enjoyed by those present."

If this were an Irish Catholic wake in county Cork, there would be the excuse of general ignorance and long-suffered oppression, superstition and priestcraft, for such a burlesque on Christian civilization and mockery of religion. But, no, it was in New England! in Worcester, Massachusetts! And the paper says, "The beauty of the services was commented upon by all, and many words of praise were heard for the committee in charge;" and "The services were so well liked that it is expected they will be reproduced at a later day for the benefit of the whole Masonic fraternity"!!! A "beautiful" funeral to be reproduced, and the parts said and sung over "for the benefit of the whole Masonic fraternity." "Incense" burned; "The Acacia" commemorated, and "prayer said for deliverance" (whether for the dead secretary Moody from purgatory is not explained) by a semi-apostate Congregational pastor! And all this mixed with "Watts's Psalms and Hymns," in the Puritan city of Worcester, by people who have been to New England district schools!

It is no longer wonderful that Mormonism should spring up in New England and take human society back through the centuries to the seraglio, bowstring and bastinado of Constantinople, and the polygamy, despotism and blood-avenging of Salt Lake.

Our readers are requested to notice that this funeral hotch-potch is to be repeated "for the benefit" of the whole Masonic fraternity. Now if there are lawyers in Worcester of the stamp of the distinguished and Hon. Judge Merrick, we request merchant S. A. Pratt to consult some of them if such Masonic "benefits" are not in the nature of lottery "benefits" and mock auctions,—schemes to get money in the shape of dues and degree-fees, upon the false pretence of funerals, false worships, etc.?

Surely no farrago of false religion in the Tabernacle at Salt Lake, ever exceeded the religious medley in Worcester Masonic Hall. Cannot the good people of Worcester be induced to read "The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite," now just out?

FASTING AND PRAYER.—An aged brother in New York writes in favor of special prayer with fasting for an especial blessing upon the New Orleans Convention and a signal victory over the enemies of our God. Several days have been suggested, but for convenience, as a time most likely to be remembered, we would name Friday, the 17th, the opening day of the Convention, and urge all whom the Lord's Spirit so moves to observe this day. But if this be not so convenient for some, the 10th, which is a week earlier, can be easily fixed in mind. The time is not so important as the united prayer and strong crying to God of his people. Let us believe God and expect great mercies.

—Secretary Stoddard addressed a fair audience at Shiloh Baptist church, New Orleans, last Thursday evening, and received the thanks of many at the close. A colored Methodist conference is meeting in the city, of which a number of members have been interviewed. All condemned the secret orders, though most had been among the initiated. Bishop Warner promises an opportunity for notice of the Convention to be given, and a statement of its objects.

—In one of the addresses at the county convention at Bartlett, Ill., last week one of the speakers referred to Birmingham, Iowa, as a community where no one could keep on the fence on the lodge question, but must take one side or the other. That is as it should be, and when a respectable number of our communities come up to the same Gospel ground the lodge is gone. Birmingham is a little city among the thousands but out of her borders have come the Free Press, the Psalm-singer and "In the Coils"—products of which any American town might be proud.

—Many of our readers visit Chicago and wish to see the best features of a great city. An hour or two during such a visit cannot be better employed than in visiting the cyclorama of Jerusalem on Wabash Ave. As a work of art it far surpasses any of the several battle scenes we have seen in this and other cities, while the theme of the immense painting is beyond all comparison more noble. So vivid an idea of Jerusalem during Passover week, when our Lord was crucified, cannot be gained by years of study of books. The painting is one of the great attractions of Chicago.

—Our Boston letter last week told of the efforts of Dr. Justin D. Fulton to arouse that city to the dangers of Catholicism. The excitement was so great over the meetings in Mechanic's Hall that some 60,000 tickets were reported sold at $1 each, a book going with every ticket. A large number of police were present to preserve order, but they had nothing to do. Petitions were largely signed asking Congress to appoint a commission on the strength of the allegations in the new book to investigate the practice of auricular confession, and decide whether it is calculated to pollute the morals of the people and undermine the foundation of our institutions.

—We call especial attention to the reports from all quarters on the condition of the Knights of Labor, as appears in "Lodge Notes" this week. This order has evidently had its day. The workingmen of our cities are being undeceived in regard to the promises of the order, and are falling out of the ranks by thousands. A secret despotism can never secure permanent good to the cause of labor. While workingmen are understanding this fact, because there is a sugar coat of temperance over this poisonous lodge pill, some of our temperance workers, with strange unwisdom, insist on bolstering up this order. W. T. Mills, an aggressive young Prohibitionist, Zimmerman, who has got into a $100-a-month job as organizer, both boast of their connection with the order; while Miss Willard herself seems to forget important facts when the efforts of Powderly for temperance are remembered.

—Bro. Hinman's late visit to Hearne, Texas, is noticed handsomely in the Southern Guide of that place. Mentioning the leading points of objection to the lodge made in Bro. Hinman's address, the editor says: "It is useless for us to say, for the benefit of his hearers, that he made these points plain and impressive, for we are free to admit that we have never heard societies so accused, neither have we heard the evidences so clearly and skillfully questioned. To our mind, he proved every indictment. He summoned his witnesses from ecclesiastical and profane history, and called upon the stand the Saviour and Paul, who positively testified in the affirmative, and by their sides he placed the Masons themselves, whose testimony was equally as strong. We can only say he is an able prosecutor, and will hurt no honest man who hears him. We listened with profound interest and saw one side only, he can surely be answered by some men, but not all men."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. A. J. Chittenden of Wheaton, now in New Orleans with Secretary Stoddard, is being much benefited already by the change of scenery and climate. An entertaining letter from him on New Orleans will appear in our next.

—It is said that ex-Governor Alger, whose liberality with the poor of Detroit has been a theme of praise, owns over 100 square miles of forest land near Alpena, on which there is standing over 500,000,000 feet of pine timber. So he may not yet have come up to the measure of his duty. His example, however, should stir up many rich men to good works.

—Old John Brown is to be remembered at the Ohio Centennial Exposition at Columbus next summer. One of the attractions will be a department devoted to relics of the hero of Ossawattomie and Harper's Ferry. We should like to see among them the old Masonic monitor which the old man threw away when he renounced the lodge and which his son Owen picked out of the swill barrel.

—The pleasant town of Geneva, some thirty-five miles from this city, is not only rejoicing in one of the most gracious revivals ever known in the place, but is also enduring much affliction from a Democratic politician, liquor advocate and Freemason, who has been serving as mayor, but by his outrageous and revolutionary acts has roused the people to the point of impeaching him. A new election last week places Mr. Henry Warfield, a Prohibitionist, Anti-mason and Quaker in the chair.

Prize-fighting, fanned by the importance given to the brutal business by our daily press, is having quite a rage in all our prominent cities. Condemned by law everywhere, the press with strange inconsistency fosters these exhibitions, and really keeps them alive. Editors should be prosecuted as well as the half-idiotic and generally drunken fellows who engage in them. We are glad to note that the Denver authorities have taken hold of a case in that city, and have found indictments against some 250 persons who attended a fight, some of them prominent politicians in State and county. In addition to the fine imposed by law, let these men forfeit also the confidence of Colorado voters.

OUR DAY, the journal which a million American readers have been anxiously expecting from Joseph Cook, at last appears. It is "a record and review of current reform." With Mr. Cook as editor, and such associates as Miss F. E. Willard in the department of Temperance, Dr. Pentecost in that of Church Work, Anthony Comstock in that of Prevention of Vice, Prof. L. T. Townsend of Boston University in that of Education, Prof. E. J. James in that of Labor Reform, and Rev. C. S. Eby in that of Missions, America will have a noble magazine, worthy of a generation of Christian reformers. This first number is a grand one. Dr. McNiece on "Shall Utah be Made a Mormon State?" or Prof. Townsend on "The Jesuit and the Public School," are either one alone worth the annual price of the magazine. The Cynosure from her long watching in the northern sky hails Our Day. May its sun be as unsetting as our own Pole-star.

NOTICES

THE N. C. A. NATIONAL CONVENTION.

OFFICIAL CALL.

The Seventeenth Convention of the National Christian Association is hereby called to meet in the Central Congregationalist church in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, at 7:30 P. M., February 17th, 1888. An interesting programme has been arranged, able speakers have been secured, and three sessions will be held daily, closing with the evening of Feb. 20th. Seats are free and the public are most cordially invited to attend.

REV. J. S MCCULLOCH, D.D., Pres.

LATEST AND BEST RATE TO NEW ORLEANS.—Round trip tickets will be on sale at $25 from Feb. 6th to 12th next, good to return until March 1st next. This will make the fare less than 1½ cent per mile from Chicago to New Orleans via Illinois Central Railroad. This reduction from the usual rate will probably be general throughout the country at that date, but we are not able to speak positively at present. Look for further notice hereafter, or make inquiries of railway agents.

REFORMERS OF IOWA.

The N. C. A. Convention at New Orleans is to be held next month. The Iowa Christian Association at its last annual meeting appointed Rev. Wm. Johnson of College Springs, Page county, Iowa, the president of the Association, its delegate to the Convention at New Orleans. Special contributions are needed to defray his expenses. Let all who can respond immediately. Send your contributions direct to Dr. Johnson, as the time is short. Don't fail to promptly send the means for our president to represent us at the New Orleans meeting. C. F. HAWLEY,
State Agent of I. C. A.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27, 1888.

There is enthusiastic interest now among the prohibition circles of this city as well as throughout the country, and notable concert of action in the effort to drive the liquor traffic from the District of Columbia. Petitions to this effect have poured into Congress from every State and Territory, and the counter petitions circulated by the liquor men of the District are something curious and even ludicrous, I may say, from their want of sense and logic.

From his pulpit a Washington minister said, last Sunday, "These men plead for liberty in the conduct of their business; they ask for personal liberty that they may enslave your sons and deprive them of their liberty. They also raise the cry that perjury, fraud and social corruption would follow in the track of prohibition. This," he said, "makes us think of the poetical figure of Satan weeping for souls that are lost."

On the same day the liquor traffic was vigorously attacked from several of our city pulpits, notably that of the Vermont Avenue Christian church, and that of the North Carolina Avenue church. Mr. Power, the pastor of the former, like most of the Washington pastors, is strongly opposed to high license, classing it as a cowardly compromise with the whisky party. He selected for his subject, "The Coming Conflict with the Whisky Power," and he argued that there was no regulating the whisky traffic; that there is no alternative but total extermination. He urged prohibition in the District as the only hope of the rising generation, and said the cry that prohibition does not prohibit is false, for were prohibition once strongly entrenched on our shores the death of the whisky traffic would quickly follow. Speaking of the term fanatic, applied to temperance workers, Mr. Power stated that the dictionary had not yet been compiled that would contain the word "temperance fanatic." "He is not the coming man," he said, "nor the man that is, for we can never have such a creature. Go as far as you will on the track of temperance and you will never approach within sight of fanaticism."

As the subject is one of unusual interest just now, I will mention how another preacher presented several new points in the matter. He regarded the present time as a crisis. To be defeated now meant eternal defeat for the temperance people of the country. He said the cry of to-day was for national prohibition. The District of Columbia is national ground, and here the fight will be made that will influence the entire country. He urged that the example set here would encourage or discourage the efforts of all the temperance people working throughout the country, and that though there were many hidden evils behind this question, when Prohibitionists once gain the victory their triumph will be complete. The work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was eulogized in the highest terms, and the ultimate success of the prohibition measure now before Congress was predicted.

Congress has had before it this week a good deal of miscellaneous matter, such as the Pacific railroad investigation; the delay over the Congressional Library building; the Jackson, Miss., outrage resolution, and the Thoebe-Carlisle contest, in which the Speaker's title to his seat was secured by a bare quorum.

The most important appointments made by the President during the week were Marshall McDonald for Fish Commissioner; Mr. Hoge, of Va., for District Attorney, and Mr. Ross of Washington for our new Postmaster. By these appointments a long agony is over. There were a hundred or more aspirants to the last two offices mentioned, and the selections made seem to be quite satisfactory to the public. *

LITERATURE.

"THE LIFE AND WORK OF J. R. W. SLOANE, D.D." Edited by his son, Prof. William M. Sloane, of Princeton, N. J.

In this volume of 440 pages, there is first a brief account of the Covenanters from the swearing of the national covenant in Scotland in 1638 to date. This passage may be interesting: "In the conduct of church services they exclude all written liturgies, but hold firm to the traditionary practices of their ancestors. They use, as a close transcript of the original, the amended metrical version of the Psalms, based upon that of Rouse, and commonly used by the Scottish churches; avoiding all other hymnology as unscriptural, and not of divine ordering. Their praise is purely congregational, and is led by a precentor or a choir unaided by any musical instrument. In prayer the use of Scriptural language for the expression of worship and desire is well-nigh universal; the selection and ordering of the petitions, ascriptions of praise, and acknowledgments of mercy, being, of course, left to the free choice of each individual. In the celebration of the sacraments they have rigid forms, hallowed by use, and suited to their edification. In simple dignity they literally sit at the table of the Lord, and partake of the elements as they pass from hand to hand, while the pastor admonishes them of the solemnity and awful significance of the sacrificial act. At due intervals they renew their covenant with God to abide by their principles, and serve him in godly fear. Its members have always refused to become politically identified with the United States Government, because its Constitution derived the powers of government from the will of the people, and not from God, according to the authority and teaching of Scripture."

A sketch of Dr. Sloane's ancestors follows. Then comes the autobiography of his childhood, his youth and early manhood. His pastorate in New York from 1856 to 1868 comes next. And after that his professorship in Allegheny from 1868 to 1886. He was a prominent figure in the anti-slavery controversy during his ministry in New York. He describes a meeting in "Cooper Institute" Dec. 15, 1859, in aid of "the John Brown Fund." Dr. George B. Cheever had spoken but a few sentences when a decently-dressed man sprang up immediately in front of the platform, and shaking a stout cane at the speaker, declared with horrible imprecations that he would make a martyr of him. Then the tumult began, breaking out in all parts of the hall apparently at once, shouts, hootings, hissings, catcalls, groans, "Order! order!" "Put him out!" "Down with him!" "Go on!" demoniac yells, cheers, counter-cheers, and—who can describe Pandemonium? Precautions had been taken to secure a number of policemen: about thirty, I believe, were scattered about the hall. They did nobly, struggled bravely with the rioters, and occasionally plied their clubs effectively; but they were too few in number, and unable fully to cope with the mob. Dr. Geo. B. Cheever stood to his post; the friends of the meeting encouraged him with cheers and cries of "Go on! go on!" and he did go on until the last sentence was completed, although but short portions of his noble speech could be heard.

During the greater time of the delivery of this speech, a large portion, both of those in the audience and on the platform, were on their feet. It was, perhaps, about the time that this speech was closing, that the chief of police, a Mr. Pillsbury, with seventy-five men behind him, entered the hall. The next speaker was Wendell Phillips. The storm called out his noblest powers: he was above it, as if guiding it. One illustration of this, but imperfectly recalled, may serve to give an idea, although a faint one, of his peculiar power: "'All that John Brown did, was to endeavor to help men to liberty. Did he do right?' 'No!' from a hundred murderous throats. 'Well, I was born at the base of Bunker Hill, and I say he did do right. If not, answer, Byron, from your marshy bed at Missolonghi, why did you go to help the Greeks? If not, answer, Kosciusko, from your tomb on the Hudson, why did you come to help us? If not, answer, Lafayette'—'We were white men,' again roared the many-headed beast. 'Yes' (with ineffable scorn). 'You were white men. Lafayette said if he had known that he was fighting for a white slave republic, he would never have drawn his sword for America.'"

Dr. Sloane came last. The Tribune said of him, "By describing the characteristics of the turbulent element which had disturbed the meeting he succeeded in quieting the rioters, and, in fact, caused many of them to hang their heads and leave the room." "Virginia hung John Brown," said the rioters. "Yes," responded the Doctor, "but Virginia cannot furnish ropes enough to hang the principles for which John Brown died."

He was invited to deliver the annual address before the Philo and Franklin Literary Societies of Jefferson College, Aug. 6, 1862. His subject was, "The Three Pillars of a Republic," Religion, Law and Liberty. Here is a sample of his utterances: "The American engineer who was employed to construct the great railway from St. Petersburg to Moscow, was directed to make out a diagram of the road, and lay it before the Emperor. In due time it was completed, and presented to his majesty for inspection. 'What is that?' said the haughty autocrat, after looking at it curiously for some moments. 'Please, your Majesty,' said the confounded engineer, 'that is the road.' 'Road!' exclaimed Nicolas, 'it looks more like a snake. What are all those curves for?' 'Sire, replied the engineer, 'those curves are to save the cities contiguous to the route.'

TRIBULATION.

Yes, there is tribulation, but Thy power
Can blend it with rejoicing. There are thorns,
But they have kept us in the narrow way,
The King's highway of holiness and peace;
And there is chastening, but the Father's love
Flows through it; and would any trusting heart
Forego the chastening and forego the love?
And every step leads on to "more and more;"
From strength to strength Thy pilgrims pass and sing
The praise of Him who leads them on and on,
From glory unto glory, even here.

THE REVIVAL WE NEED.

Oh, for a great and general revival of true religion! Not a burst of mere excitement, but a real awakening, a work of the Eternal Spirit. This would be a glorious reply to skepticism, and would act like a strong wind in clearing the air, and driving away the miasma which lurks in the stagnant atmosphere. There would then be small honor paid to men who mar the Gospel of our Lord, and truth, which has fallen in our streets, would again ascend her throne. Let us pray for such a visitation of the Holy Ghost with our whole souls. It is not only desirable, it is essential; we must either be revived by the Lord himself, or the churches will descend until error and ungodliness swallow them up. This calamity shall not happen, but only divine grace can avert it.

At the same time, we cannot expect a gracious revival till we are clear of complicity with the deadening influences which are all around us. The extent to which sheer frivolity and utterly inane amusement have been carried in connection with some places of worship would almost exceed belief. We call the attention of our readers to the fact that doctrine has been the ground of battle in the downgrade struggle which has been chosen by our opponents, but on the matter of prayer-meetings and worldliness they have been prudently silent. Certain of them have in this affair exhibited that discretion which is the better part of valor.

If any of our churches have been guilty in this respect, how can they expect the divine Spirit to work with them? Wherever the statement which we have quoted, or a similar one, can be proved, we are at a loss to know how conversions can be looked for. The Lord our God is holy, and he cannot compromise his own glorious name by working with persons whose grovelling tastes lead them to go to Egypt—we had almost said to Sodom—for their recreations. Is this walking with God? Is this the manner in which Enochs are produced?

It is a heart-sorrow to have to mention such things, but the work of the Lord must be done faithfully, and this evil must be laid bare. There can be no doubt that all sorts of entertainments, as nearly as possible approximating to stage-plays, have been carried on in connection with places of worship, and are, at this present time, in high favor. Can these things promote holiness, or help in communion with God? Can men come away from such things and plead with God for the salvation of sinners and the sanctification of believers? We loathe to touch the unhallowed subject; it seems so far removed from the walk of faith, and the way of heavenly fellowship. In some cases the follies complained of are even beneath the dignity of manhood, and fitter for the region of the imbecile than for thoughtful men.

Brethren in Christ, in every church let us purge out the things which weaken and pollute. It is clear to every one who is willing to see it that laxity of doctrine is either the parent of worldliness, or is in some other way very near akin to it. The men who give up the old faith are the same persons who plead for latitude as to general conduct. The Puritan is not more notorious for his orthodoxy than for his separateness from the world. Liberal divines do not always command the respect of the public, but they gain a certain popularity by pandering to prevailing tastes. The ungodly world is so far on their side that it commends them for their liberality, and rails at the orthodox as bigots and kill-joys. It is a very suspicious circumstance that very often the less a man knows of the inner life, and the less he even cares to speak of it, the more heartily he is for the new theology, the theory of evolution, and the condemnation of all settled doctrine. Those who would have a blessing from the Lord must avoid all this, and determine to follow the Lord fully. Not only must they quit false doctrine, but they must receive the Gospel, not as dogma, but as vital truth. Only as the truth is attended with living faith will it prove its own royal power. Believers must also sweep the house of the leaven of worldliness, and the frivolities of a giddy generation. The evil which is now current eats as doth a canker, and there is no hope for healthy godliness until it is cut out of the body of the church by her again repenting, and doing her first works.

Those who through divine grace have not defiled their garments must not content themselves with censuring others, but must arouse themselves to seek a fuller baptism of the Spirit of God. Perhaps these evils are permitted that they may act as a sieve upon the heap gathered on the Lord's threshing floor. Possibly they are allowed that our apathetic churches may be aroused. We know already of several cases in which true ministers have gone over the foundation truths again with their people, and have preached the saving Word with clearer emphasis. In other cases churches have been summoned to special prayer about this matter. This is a good beginning; let it be carried out on the widest scale. As one man let us cry mightily unto the Lord our God, that he would arise and plead his own cause. Now, if never before, let those who are loyal to Jesus and his Word be up and doing. A boundless blessing is waiting for the asking. We believe in prayer. Let us pray like Elijahs.—C. H. Spurgeon.

TEN THOUSAND PER CENT.

Mr. Stuart dropped into the office of his friend Mr. Morris, in a mood decidedly depressed, occasioned by a failure. It was a little after business hours, but Mr. Morris was still in his office and alone. He laid down his pen and greeted his friend with a cheerful nod and a cheerful "How are you, Stuart?"

"Sour as an east wind," was the response, as he looked at the beaming countenance of his friend, whom he had known for many years, and whose counsel he had sought many a time, and scarcely ever been disappointed.

There appeared to be a little more than the usual brightness in Mr. Morris's face as he wheeled his chair round and bade his friend be seated in another. Mr. Stuart noticed it and said:

"What are you up to, Morris? Had some good news, eh?"

"Oh, no, Stuart," he replied, "nothing unusual or new in particular. I was only thinking of a little investment I am just about making."

"I thought so," said Stuart, "and a good one, I'll be bound."

"I think so," was the reply. "What would you say to ten thousand per cent?"

"Ten thousand per cent! You are raving."

"Not a bit of it," said Morris. "And the very best of security—a regular royal pledge."

"Now I know you are crazy. Who ever heard of such a thing?"

"Crazy? Not a bit of it," said Mr. Morris. "This," wheeling round his chair and laying his hand upon a paper on his desk, "is a check which I have just signed, and intend for a poor missionary whom I know. I have just heard he is sick and in much need. The Scripture says that 'he that hath pity on the poor lendeth to the Lord,' but I was never awakened to the fact of what interest he pays until yesterday, when our clergyman startled me by saying that he had promised ten thousand per cent. I pricked up my ears at the statement, and waited curiously to hear the proof; and there it was, sure enough, in St. Matthew 19: 29, 'And every one that hath left houses, or brethren or sisters, or father or mother, or children or lands for my name's sake, shall receive a hundredfold, and inherit eternal life.' I was struck at the sound of ten thousand per cent, but I figured it out and found it correct. The preacher was very much in earnest as he declared the Lord's dividend. He was as enthusiastic as a stock-broker, only in an infinitely more noble cause. I was very much impressed at the time with the thought, and in fact, have been ever since. It was in my mind when you came in. Not that I can lay claim for a moment to the spirit of self-sacrifice which the text quoted indicates, but my gift to the poor is a loan to the Lord, and I am not afraid but that I shall reap a good dividend."—Sel.

Last Monday afternoon a little boy, ten years old, was playing on the avenue. The street car came up, the horses trampled upon him, and the wheel almost severed the head from the body. He went out from that home a bright, bounding lad; he was carried back a corpse. How can that bereaved family say, "He doeth all things well"? It is the simplest thing in the world for Christian faith. Jesus appeared there on the avenue, and kissed the lips of the lad and said: "Follow me, to-day thou shalt be with me in paradise." His body was laid away in the grave, but it rests as in its bed until the resurrection morning. He sleeps in Jesus, and God watches over his grave. Rispah watched the dead bodies of the sons of Saul and guarded them against the ravenous fowls of the air. So God watches over the dead bodies of the saints and sees to it that none of their dust be missing. Yes, though the grave be a neglected and unknown spot, winged seraphs hover there keeping a more vigilant watch than the Roman soldiers about the grave of Jesus. Invisible watchers keep the graves where the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep, and invisible watchers keep the graves where our fondest hopes were laid. You who have laid your dear ones in their narrow house weep not, for angels guard them better than you. Rather dry your cheeks and rejoice that these same forms will ere long be called forth to meet the Lord in the air.—Rev. J. M. Foster.

2 Tim. 4: 2.

"Do you see that boy?" said a policeman just off duty on one of the down-town streets in New York city to a man in whom he was beginning to have confidence as a Christian worker, "the white-faced boy in the doorway across the alley. Well," as the gentleman glanced and nodded, "that boy has been in jail fifteen times. He is just out now. He is known as 'Wicked Jim.' He is a good case for you. If you make anything out of him I will promise to take stock in your religion."

The gentleman smiled pleasantly, and said, "Thank you. I never found a case that I considered hopeless. That lad has not an altogether bad face;" and stepping across the narrow sidewalk he said abruptly,

"Good morning, Jim. Have you had your breakfast?"

"Nary a crust," replied the lad in surprise.

"Thought so by your looks. Come on. Can you walk pretty briskly?"

"When it's worth while. What's up? What do you want with me?"

"I want you to be a better boy. But here we are;" and he preceded his guest into an alcove of a small, neat restaurant, saying, "Sit down here opposite me at the table and order what you like; we will talk later."

Jim availed himself, with alacrity, of the privilege given him, glancing often at his companion, who partook of his breakfast more leisurely and in less quantity, reading his paper meantime. As he finished his last cup of coffee he said,

"I'm obliged to you; and I've made up my mind you are one of them Sunday-school fellers. Now, boss, it a'n't no use. I'm 'Wicked Jim.' I've been sent up fifteen times. I'm just out. There won't anybody have nothing to do with me. There a'n't no way for me to get a living only to steal it. You might just as well let me go and never think no more about me. I'm 'Wicked Jim.'"

"And 'Wicked Jim' you want to be to the end of the chapter?"

"There a'n't no help for it. There can't nobody help it."

"God can help it."

"I don't know much about him. I don't think he cares much about me."

"Oh, yes, he does. He sent me this morning to give you a breakfast. I came up from the ferry to go to Broadway. It was a little farther, you know, to cross over and go around the block where I found you, but something seemed to lead me that way, and when I reached the corner God put it into the heart of that red-haired policeman to point you out to me."

"He must be tired keeping an eye on me. What makes you think God led you around where I was?"

"Because it was a good influence. Satan might have put it into the heart of some one to find some mischief for you to do. Only God would send some one to try to make a better boy of you."

"How can God make me good?"

"By converting you."

"What is that?"

"The beginning is for you to want to be a Christian, to want to love Jesus and be like him, so as to lead a good, useful life here and go to heaven when you die."

"Everybody wants to go to heaven," said the boy uneasily.

"Do you think they would like heaven? There are Christians in heaven. If they do not like such society here, would they like it there?"

"I don't know," said the boy sadly; "I ha'n't never had no chance to know Christians. I've always been 'Wicked Jim,' and been with them that was most as bad as I, not quite. I am so bad I don't think God could do anything with me."

"Oh, yes, he could give you a clean heart."

"Do you believe it?"

"I know it; but you must first want a new heart. You must want to be good and desire to lead a better life. You must believe there is a God and that his Son Jesus Christ died to save you."

"I know about that. I heard a man preach it once in a little country jail where I stayed three months because I was tramping. I've thought about that Christ, how he sweat great drops of blood, but I don't see what good that did me."

"He was God. He knew there would be a 'Wicked Jim' here in New York to-day who would have to die and be punished for his sins, and he said, 'Let me suffer the punishment, and then if Jim will only believe that I suffered for him and will accept a clean heart, and leaving off all his wicked ways try to live a new life for my sake, that is all I will ask.'"

"Is that truth, boss?" said Jim, with his great, blue, dilated eyes full of tears.

"Yes. Shall I pray to him and ask him to help you to be a good boy?"

"I wish you would," said the boy; and he knelt, sobbing, completely melted, as the prayer, in simple language that he could understand, went on.

After awhile he said, "I feel better. I feel as if 'Wicked Jim' had strayed away down town, and as if this was a new Jim who wanted to be a good boy."

"The name shall go with 'Wicked Jim,'" said the missionary. "You are James hereafter. I shall call you James Newlife. Come now and have a bath and I will get you a new outfit in the way of clothes;" and the gentleman took him up stairs, for the restaurant was connected with a mission, and he was soon thoroughly transformed in appearance.

He was a fine-looking lad now, and hardly seemed able to believe his own eyes when he saw his reflection in a mirror.

"I was shivering when I stood there in that alleyway," he said, "and was planning how I could manage to steal a coat, or what I could do to get sent up again."

"I want to ask you a favor," said his new friend. "Try to forget 'Wicked Jim.' Do not think of him; do not speak of him; never relate any of his bad deeds."

James Newlife is an exemplary Christian man, fairly educated, in good business, with a pleasant home, well ordered by a lovely wife.

He is active in all good work, and has given evidence that it was indeed the Lord who had sent that kind-hearted brother after him that bleak March morning.—Anna A. Preston, in Am. Messsenger.

WINTER.

The snow is here,
And fuel is dear,
And woods are sear,
And fires burn clear,
And frost is here,
And has bitten the heel of the going year.

Bite, frost, bite!
You roll up away from the light
The blue woodlouse, and the plump dormouse.
And the bees are still'd. and the flies are kill'd,
And you bite far into the heart of the house.
But not into mine.

Bite, frost, bite!
The woods are all the searer,
The fuel is all the dearer,
The fires are all the clearer,
My spring is all the nearer,
You have bitten into the heart of the earth,
But not into mine. —Tennyson.

THE STORY OF AN OSTRICH.

While Sir John Lawrence was Viceroy of India and busied with great affairs, such as putting 700,000 children into state-aided schools, 54,000 of the number girls who heretofore had been despised; also making wonderful improvements in jails and barracks, introducing railroads and telegraphs, and becoming, as Florence Nightingale said, the father of sanitary measures in India, he yet listened to the petitions of very humble people, and interested himself in doing kind acts to the lowly, as the following story will illustrate:

Another anecdote illustrative of Sir John Lawrence's kindliness of heart, especially where young children were concerned, should be preserved. Early in 1864 an ostrich, domiciled in the Viceregal park at Barrackpore, happened to deposit her first egg on the grass, exposed to the inclement climate of that time of the year, and the attacks of jackals and foxes. It was picked up by the daughter of the park-keeper, a girl of eight or nine years. Her father had died shortly before this time. Proud of her discovery, she carried it off to the bungalow, and, having learned something of the habits of the ostrich in its native Sahara, she got some dry white sand, put it into a lidless box, and half-burying the egg within it, exposed the whole, in the brightest spot she could find, to the mid-day sun, and when evening came she would transfer it, box and all, to the care of a hen, whose eggs she removed each day for the purpose. Strange to say, the hen took kindly to the task, and in due time the monster chick was hatched. The foster mother took to flight at the sight of her offspring. But the girl supplied its place, and the young ostrich used to follow her about, from place to place, share the bungalow with her, and eat off her table. But the fatal day came when a new park-keeper was appointed, and almost his first act was to claim the bird as government property.

It was accordingly carried off to the Government aviary. The little girl, broken-hearted at the loss of her pet, took to her bed and became seriously ill. But a kind-hearted military surgeon, who happened to be calling on the widowed mother to see if he could do anything for her, heard the sad story. Through his means it reached the ears of Sir John Lawrence at Simla, who, by return of post, ordered that the bird should be at once restored to its rightful owner. There was a joyful meeting between the two friends; the little girl soon left her bed, and, on returning to England a few weeks later, with her mother, she carried with her the gigantic pet which had been born and bred amid such curious vicissitudes.

TEMPERANCE.

WOMEN DRUNKARDS.—HOW THEY ARE MADE.

There are women who drink. All drinking women are not depraved, but every depraved woman drinks. Abolish strong drink and the social evil would instantly shrink to one-fourth its present dimensions. A large proportion of all crime may be directly traced to intemperance; nine-tenths of the crimes committed by women are committed in the excitement of intoxication, or are the fruit of poverty or depravity caused by drink. The men who frame the laws that protect the traffic in rum, are laying weak, unfranchised womanhood on the altars of political trickery and lust for gold. They know that women, high-minded, unselfish and pure, had they power, would crush the traffic that curses their lives with bitterest woe; but the power is withheld from the sufferers, and those who refuse to let woman share in the governing power, insist on misgoverning to woman's hurt and shame. The old-dog-in-the-manger story comes to mind, but it is too feeble a figure to illustrate this cruel wrong. One of the most repellant features of the liquor system is its selfish, tyrannical, heartless, inhuman attitude toward the noblest and gentlest part of God's creation. A sadly pathetic plea for down-trodden womanhood will be found in the subjoined statistics recently published in Godey's Lady's Book by L. M. Hall, Superintendent of the Women's Reformatory Prison at Shelborn, Mass.:

Out of an examination of 204 inebriate women I have found that 128 began their drinking by the use of beer, thirty-seven by drinking whisky (as punch at first usually), twenty began with wine, eight with gin, and eleven could not remember what beverage was first used. These young girls, mill and shop girls largely, began by going to some so-called refreshment saloon with their friends, and the debutante usually began by sipping a little tonic (made of hops, sugar and water, charged with carbonic acid gas and colored with brown sugar); beer soon followed, and soon rioting, other kinds of intoxicants, recklessness and crime; and what was an innocent, foolish girl yesterday, is to-day a branded criminal, and all for a glass of beer. Alas! how many ruined lives I have seen.

Beer was also the beverage which older inebriate women used to entice the younger ones to drink. A call upon one of these old sots was the signal for the pitcher of beer to be sent for, and a little coaxing and urging would result in the first fatal glass being indulged in. The steps were then easy. Beer is the trap which the drunkard maker sets for the feet of the unwary. And he usually makes sure of his prey because of it. A glass of raw whisky would have presented but slight attraction to these overworked, half-fed girls, had it been offered to them at first. After that sleeping devil, the appetite for intoxicants, had been aroused by beer, it became altogether a different matter, and at last, in many cases, chloroform or peppermint oil was added to the drink of these maddened creatures, so furious had the appetite become for something stronger.

It may be of interest to note that out of the 204 inebriate women, 126 had been guilty of other crimes, and yet in but sixteen instances did the first commitment of a crime antedate the habit of drinking.

Of the beverages first used, while in but thirty-seven cases it began with whisky, in 187 it had become the favorite beverage. Several hopeless drunkards, far gone toward insanity, had never drunk any other intoxicant than beer.

One hundred and thirty-two were committed to prison for drunkenness, 56 for offences against chastity and public order, and 16 for crimes against property. Their ages when last committed averaged thirty and a half years. Sixty-five were between 30 and 41 years of age, 49 between 25 and 31 years of age, 34 between 20 and 26 years of age, 30 between 15 and 21 years of age. The remainder were over 41 years of age.

Many of the older ones could not tell how many sentences they had received, showing the absolute uselessness of punishing those poor creatures while the temptations are left in their way.

To show the effect upon the children of inebriate parentage I collected the following: Of 111 inebriate mothers, 33 of whom had inebriate husbands, 408 children were born. Of these, 227 perished in infancy and early childhood, and of the survivers many are doomed evidently to an early death. In many cases the death of these children was indirectly due to the inebriety of the parents, through cold, deprivation, etc. Ages: Twenty-seven of the 204 women began to drink intoxicants before they were ten years of age; 11 between the ages of 9 and 15, 74 between 14 and 21, 37 between 20 and 26, 33 between 25 and 31, 19 between 30 and 41, 3 between 40 and 51.

Average age, eighteen and one-half years. More than one-half formed habits of intemperance before they were twenty-one years of age, and more than one-third at the giddy age of from fifteen to twenty inclusive.

THE ANTI-NUISANCE LEAGUE.

The recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Kansas prohibitory cases has led to the inauguration of a movement in this city, as novel as it promises to be interesting. That decision, it will be recalled, is to the effect that a State has the right to declare the liquor traffic, including its manufacture, a nuisance and absolutely abate it. Those who are behind the movement alluded to propose to test the applicability of the common law against nuisances to the license system generally, and, by a series of suits, carry the matter through the various State courts, and up to the United States Supreme Court. The organization is to be called the "Anti-Nuisance League," and the membership will be composed of men of all shades of political belief who may agree that decision affords reasonable ground for the belief that the common law against the maintenance of nuisances may be made to apply universally, including the liquor traffic. So sanguine are the promoters of this novel proceeding in its success, that the sum of $10,000 has been already pledged for the test, and the League is in process of formation. It is also proposed that these suits shall be commenced simultaneously in several States under the direction of the League.—Demorest's Monthly.

SOME TEMPERANCE MAXIMS.

Better fall with Truth than stand with her under your feet.

Until the old parties obtain a divorce from the Rum Hag they are not at liberty to court Prohibitionists.

A plank in a party platform with one end on Plymouth Rock—and the other on a beer barrel is not equally supported.—Rev. Joel Swartz, Gettysburg, Pa.

City Collector Onahan of Chicago has refused to issue a saloon license to T. G. O'Conner, at the corner of Harrison Street and Hermitage Avenue. This was done in compliance with a petition from all the professors in the medical college in the vicinity, who represented that the saloon would have a demoralizing effect on their students. Why cannot all other colleges and the public schools have the same privilege?

The Reform League of Keokuk, Iowa, intends to rid that city of saloons very soon. In case the liquor men are driven out it is said they intend to migrate and resume business at Warsaw, Hamilton and Nauvoo, in Illinois. The people in the towns last named are greatly excited over the matter, and threaten to make it warm for the liquor men in the event of an invasion.

The Emperor, taking a pencil and placing it firmly at a point on the paper, says, 'That, sir, is St. Petersburg;' then, drawing a straight line energetically to another point, 'and that is Moscow; make me that road.' 'But what,' interposed the engineer, 'will become of the cities?' 'Do not know, sir; let the cities take care of themselves.' It is time to inaugurate an era of free speech, and cease to pursue the old tortuous path for fear of affecting the interests of some church, society, or party which never had any right to exist, which is even now nigh unto cursing, and fit for nothing but to be consumed by God's judgments. Let them take care of themselves. But let us see to it that we are faithful to truth, and true to our own convictions of justice and righteousness." Near the close he said: "Is it constitutional to save the life of the nation? Is not the nation more than the Constitution? Was not the Constitution made for the nation, and not the nation for the Constitution? The Constitution is nothing but a paper—a mere parchment—good for nothing except in so far as it answers the great end for which it was framed. The moment it fails to do this, we not only may, but should cast it aside and make another. If it were true that the Constitution stands in the way of the salvation of the nation, then at once I would cut the Gordian knot, tear the Constitution to tatters, and trample it underfoot." Then referring to the raising of the obelisk in Rome in 1586, when the Pope had decreed that any one speaking while it went up should die, and the tackle failing to carry it to its place, a workman shouted, "Wet the ropes!" he continued: "Command or no command, law or no law, Constitution or no Constitution, let us shout, Wet the ropes! Free the slaves!"

His addresses before the National Reform Conventions in Cincinnati and New York are full of interest. Here is a paragraph from his lecture on Freemasonry: "It is Mr. John Foster in his essay on popular ignorance, I believe, who employs an illustration of this kind: An officer was sent out to take a fortress; he failed: his excuse was, that it was mud; if it had been wood, he might have shattered or burned it; if it had been stone, repeated blows would have crumbled it; but the thing was mud, and the balls simply struck in it, without doing it any injury. Something of the same difficulty is encountered in dealing with Freemasonry: it has no basis of truth on which it rests: it is supported by no argument; it has no results to which it may point as a support to its pretensions; there it stands, repeating with damnable iteration its high-sounding phrases, with unblushing repetition its exposed falsehoods, and putting forward its arrogant pretensions with as impudent an assurance as though its utter hollowness and baseness had never been exposed. It is a fortress of mud, resting on the ignorance, infatuation, and prejudice of its dupes, on which argument is lost. How shall we deal with such a sham? When we read of the numbers which this institution claims, we are reminded of the cynical remark of Carlyle, 'These islands contain thirty millions more or less of inhabitants, mostly fools.'" "Not a week has passed since a good man told me that when a boy he was in the village of Caledonia, N. Y.; he went into the shop of a respectable carpenter in the village; the man came into his shop; said he, 'I have just now seen a sight that made my blood run cold.' It was Morgan as he was carried away to his imprisonment and death, a crime yet unatoned for and unrepented of, and chargeable at this hour upon the institution of Masonry in these United States."

His lectures on "Theories of Evolution," "Save the Youth," "Preaching," and "The Theology for the Times," bristle with points of interest. His sermons on "The Word," "On National Sins," and "Christ in History," close the volume. From the first take this: "When the celebrated Robert Hall was reproached with meddling in politics, he replied, 'The plain state of the case is, the writer is offended, not at my meddling with politics, but that I have meddled on the wrong side.'" "'Do you see that leader?' said the driver of a stage coach in England, to a gentleman who sat on the box at his side. 'Yes, sir; what of him?' was the reply. 'Well, when he comes to that gate, he always shies. I must give him something to think of,' and coming down with a sharp blow of the whip upon his flank, the spirited creature darts forward, forgetful of the object of his former alarm. These leaders must be made to feel that their fear of disastrous results to their particular ecclesiastical organizations, should they prove true to themselves, to the oppressed victims of an outrageous tyranny, and to God, is wholly groundless, or, at all events, far from the greatest misfortune that might befall the cause of truth and righteousness." Earnestness is essential. "'Why is it,' a minister is said to have asked Garrick, 'that you actors produce so deep an impression with your falsehoods, we ministers so feeble an one with our truth?' 'Because,' said the witty actor, 'we speak our lies as though they were true, you speak your truths as though they were lies.' The old canon of criticism, 'If you wish me to weep, you must first weep yourself,' applicable to all forms of speech, is eminently true of this."

The book is invaluable. Every Covenanter ought to have it, every Presbyterian ought to study it, every Christian would be blessed in reading it. Dr. Sloane was a great, strong, grand Christian; a true friend, an earnest patriot, a calm leader in the fury of the battle, an eminent preacher, an upright, straight-forward, well-rounded, manly man.

J. M. FOSTER.

Scribner's Magazine for February is rich in illustrated articles, which are also of unusual interest in their text. The leading article, entitled "Mendelssohn's Letters to Moscheles," is the first of two which have been made from a remarkable collection of manuscripts which has been for nearly half-a-century in the possession of Felix, the son of Ignaz Moscheles, the eminent composer and most trusted freind of Mendelssohn. Another handsomely illustrated article is Professor N. S. Shaler's paper on "Volcanoes," He describes in clear, unconventional language the theory of the origin of volcanoes, pictures some noted eruptions, and relates some personal experiences during an ascent of Vesuvius. A feature of the article is an unusually bright and correct translation by Professor J. G. Croswell of the famous letters of the younger Pliny, in which he describes the eruption of Vesuvius in 63 A. D. Among the illustrations are a number of picturesque views of the great volcanic eruption which occurred a few years ago in the Sandwich Islands. Joseph B. Bishop, whose paper, read last winter before the Commonwealth Club of New York, attracted such favorable notice, writes briefly of "The Law and the Ballot," and advocates certain measures which will tend to the break-down of machine rule in politics, and lead to the purification of the ballot as an expression of the individual will Notice was lately made in the Cynosure of Bro. I. R. B. Arnold's Bible reading and exposition of Christian prayer at a union meeting in the College Hall, Wheaton. The Scripture passages of this interesting address have been neatly printed on slips in large type and can be used by any ingenious pastor with excellent effect. He will send to all such pastors the papers for this Bible reading if they agree to take up a collection for Western Home Missions.

C. F. Holder, the well known naturalist, opens the February American Magazine with an illustrated article, "In the Heart of the Sierra Madre." The explorer entered the vast mountain region north of Pasadena by the trail running up the Arroyo Seco, a canon lying just to the west of the little farms of John Brown's sons and of John Brown mountain, where his bold children have taken their abode in an eyrie overlooking all the San Gabriel valley, Los Angeles, and far out to sea. Most of the illustrations are of the scenery of this canon, but one is of the beautiful fall some miles up Millard canon, which forms a bright memory in the mind of the writer, who was guided into this romantic region by T. K. Bufkin, a warm-hearted friend and Christian reformer. J. Macdonald Oxley contributes an interesting and valuable resume of the results obtained by expeditions which the Canadian government has recently sent to explore Hudson's Bay. The object of the explorations is to determine the feasibility of a north-west passage to the North-west itself. Mr. Oxley adds an entertaining account of the natives dwelling on the margin of "The Inland Ocean of the North." An unusual variety of articles fill up the number.

The February Missionary Review contains a masterly paper on Japan by Prof. Knox of the College at Tokio; an intensely interesting Biography of Africa's Martyr Bishop—Hannington—by Dr. Pierson; a valuable article on the Evangelical Alliance's recent grand conference at Washington, and another on the Crisis of our Country: "The Progress of Islam," and a remarkable paper on American missionaries in China by our resident minister there. This Review is unsectarian, independent, and world-wide in its scope. It presents the facts and results and operations of missions all over the world. It has editorial correspondents at every great centre and gives the latest information from every field. It makes a specialty of statistics, and aims to give, classified and tabulated, the entire missionary statistics of the world from authentic sources, which will be invaluable to every pastor and friend of missions.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Bro. B. Loveless, the Wheaton evangelist, is engaged in meetings at Lyndon, Ill., where great interest has been aroused, and many conversions reported.

—C. H. Yatman is still in Peoria, and his work is blessed with gracious results, many conversions being experienced in answer to the prayers of the church.

—Col. G. K. Clarke and wife, who have been conducting the Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago, held 724 meetings last year; 3,535 persons were at the altar, and many saved.

—As a result of a revival in Cambridge, Ill., 75 professed conversion. The pastor, W. W. Carr, was aided by Miss Anna Downey.

—Methodism in Japan is of only fourteen years' growth. but there are now over 3,300 communicants in the various Methodist bodies. The Methodist Episcopal church, which is the strongest, has 30 missionaries, with 2,500 members.

—Rev. Mr. Jackson, pastor of the First Baptist church (colored) New Orleans, and president of the Baptist State Convention believes in refusing admission to church membership to members of secret lodges and puts his belief into practice in his own church.

—Dr. Pentecost, who is holding a protracted meeting in Lawrence, Mass., is receiving a warm response from the Christian people of that city. All the churches are united in the work. The audience during the last week numbered five hundred in the afternoon Bible-reading service, and from eight to eleven hundred in the evening preaching service.

—Evangelist Mills is holding services in Philadelphia. Ten churches, representing seven denominations, unite in these services, which are held evenings in the Central Congregational church and afternoons in the other churches in turn.

—Dr. Roth, who some months ago resigned the presidency of Thiel College, has accepted a call to an English Lutheran mission in Chicago. At the same time he will become Dr. Passavant's assistant in the management of the various charitable institutions under the control of the latter. Dr. Passavant is becoming old and his health infirm.

—There is a great call now for foreign teachers in the government schools of Japan, and Mr. D. L. Moody has become interested in sending out Christian teachers to occupy those position. They will have a great influence on the future of Japan. These teachers will receive fair salaries from the government after being engaged, but their expenses to Japan, and until they begin work, must be paid by themselves or friends in America.

—A few weeks ago about 5,000 Protestants of Cevennes, France, celebrated, on the top of one of the mountains where their ancestors used to meet on Sunday, the centenary of toleration, signed in 1787 by Louis XVI. The ceremony is described by an eye-witness as singularly impressive. A rustic pulpit had been erected on the summit of the wild mountain which formed there a plateau. Thirty pastors, in black silk gowns, were seated in front, and on a ridge behind them the congregation. A commemorative stone was unveiled by the Patriarch of Cevennes, and pastor Vigue, of the faculty of Protestant Theology of Paris, preached a sermon on religious toleration and kindliness. He took his text from a passage in St. Paul's Epistles to the Corinthians on charity.

—The installation of Rev. Geo. H. Sharpley as pastor of the Second Reformed church at Pella, Iowa, took place Jan. 18. The charge to the congregation by Rev. Wm. Moerdyk of the First Church showed the deep interest of a Hollander in the success of the American enterprise, and a recollection of his earnest counsel will increase the prosperity of the church.

—During the last thirteen years the Gettysburg Theological Seminary has graduated 177 men who were ordained to the Lutheran ministry. At present the seminary has an attendance of forty-six, which is greater than ever before in the history of the institution. Of the graduates of Pennsylvania College at Gettysburg during the fifty-four years of its existence, more than 400 have entered the ministry. Sixteen have been presidents of the college, thirty-nine professors in colleges and fifteen professors in theological seminaries.

—The late William Hilton, who was a member of the old South Church, Boston, in his will bequeaths $50,000 each to the American Board, the American Home Missionary Society, the Massachusetts General Hospital, Phillips Academy, Andover Seminary, Harvard University, Amherst and Williams Colleges; the colleges to use the amounts left to each in the education of needy students. Also, $25,000 each to the American Missionary Association and the Boston City Missionary Society; and $10,000 each to the Boston Young Woman's Christian Association, the Home for Little Wanderers and Abbot Academy. These sums, under the conditions of the will, may not be paid in a number of years.

—Dr. Somerville, of the Free Church of Scotland, is having extraordinary success in his evangelization mission to the Jews of Austria. His meetings in Vienna, where, contrary to expectation, the authorities allowed him to speak, were crowded, and a strong impression was made, as at Prague.

LODGE NOTES.

The Detroit Knight Templar Masons lately had a banquet in which the demands of their stomachs ran up a bill of $3,000 more than their pocket books were willing to supply. The balance was left to a committee!

There was bitter wrangling at the meeting last Sunday of the Central Labor Union, New York, between the Knights of Labor and their opponents. The brewery engineers who left the knights and organized an open union are seeking admission to the Central Labor Union. This is opposed by the knights on the technicality that they have not been organized six months, as the rules require.

In the announcements in a late single Chicago daily of meetings for which excursion rates were granted by the railway lines, there appear seven lodge gatherings thus favored. Among these are Grand Army, Odd-fellows, Ladies Relief, Good Templars, "Ancient Order of United Workmen," and two of Lieutent Governor Grand Master Smith's Masonic schools of instruction at Carthage, Chicago and Peoria, Ill.

A Toronto dispatch says, "The decline in the Knights of Labor as to numbers goes steadily on here. All the assemblies show decreases, some to a very large extent. One assembly had 600 members a year ago, and now has only sixty. Five months ago there were in this city fully 4,000 Knights of Labor. It is doubtful if there are 1,000 now. Internal dissensions and dissatisfaction with the management of the order are alleged as the causes of this remarkable decrease."

The Knights of Labor Assembly at Dover, N. H., which had 800 members a year ago, now has only sixty-eight. Some members favor dividing the $4,155 in the treasury among the members, but Master Workman Mellen opposed division. He refused to entertain a motion for the purpose at a meeting When he was about to open a meeting, Jan 4th, he was called to the door and arrested in a suit by two members for alleged libel. Worthy Foreman Pray called the meeting to order, and it was voted to divide the money. Mellen obtained bail and returned to the hall just after the meeting had adjourned. He called another meeting in secret session, and he and his friends are supposed to have installed the new officers recently elected, and who all stand by the master workman.

The Knights of Labor convention in San Francisco Sunday was captured by the Socialists, who elected Thomas Payser, a notorious Socialist as master workman. Payser was mainly instrumental in getting passed last week a resolution condemning the attempt on Louise Michel's life, and alluding to his martyred brethren in Chicago. There was a strong conservative element among the knights, and they elected their president last year; but this year the Socialists succeeded in suspending a number of assemblies hostile to them and reinstating others whose votes they were sure of. The conservatives hope to reverse this election when the delegate sent here by Powderly, who is now on his way, makes an investigation. The order there has fallen from a membership of several thousand to 400, and if the Socialists run it for another year they will kill it.

T. B Barry, of Michigan, a member of the Knights of Labor Executive Board, was in Detroit recently, and in conversation with a prominent knight stated that hundreds of assemblies have not paid one cent into the General Assembly since the Minneapolis Convention was rapped into adjournment. In February, 1886, there were over 8,000 Knights of Labor in good standing in the city of Detroit. To-day there are about fifteen hundred, although the estimate has been placed as low as eight hundred. Assemblies are disbanding, some to become trades unions, others with no special object in view, except to get away from the Knights of Labor. The educational features of the order have been practically abolished, and discussions of the many phases of social and economic questions are confined to probably one or two assemblies. This state of affairs is regretted by the workingmen, but nevertheless it is absolutely correct. The cause of the wholesale defection is said to be because politicians, who have crept into the order, have sought self-advancement rather than the good of labor. These, it is alleged, are numbered by the score in every large city where the Knights of Labor exist.

NEW TRACTS.

The Organization and Work of the National Christian Association is a four page tract containing names of the N. C. A. officers, and describing the Object and Funds of the Association, What the Association has done, What it expects, and What it desires. Twenty-five of these tracts will be sent postpaid to any one address for five cents.

Five Biblical Arguments Against the Lodge is one of the clearest and best put arguments against Freemasonry yet issued. It appeared in the Cynosure of Jan. 26th ult. and is by Rev. B. W. Williams of Texas. Twenty-five of these for five cents postpaid to any one address.

Each of the above are sent free to those needing them for free distribution.

A few cents sent to the Free Tract Fund will help scatter much needed truth in a great many places. Many can distribute and can not pay, while many others can pay but can not distribute. The N. C. A. is established to bring these two classes together. Many thousand pages have been sent out this winter by means of the above fund.

A letter is just received from a minister in Manitoba who pays the postage and furnishes the names. This week he has sent his second list of 100 names of ministers.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

HOME HINTS.

ABOUT LAMPS.

Don't have in every room a beautiful lamp, softened and shaded so that it is "just light enough to see how dark it is." The "dim, religious light" is becoming and æsthetic, but somewhere, wherever the most reading is done, we want a good strong light. I have in my mind a picture of a great six-foot man whom I know, wandering helplessly around from one shaded, lace-trimmed lamp to another, trying "to find a lamp without a petticoat," by which to read his evening paper. Let the useful German student, or the Argand drop light, hold a place of honor, especially if there are very young or old eyes to bend over the printed page. There are many lamps, beautiful to lighten a dark corner, that are useless on a center-table. There has been a species of carved brass shade invented lately, set here and there with great bull's-eyes of colored glass. Beware of it. It is fair to look upon, but difficult to read by. First, the light through the red bull's eye will smite your long-suffering optic, and if you dodge that it is only to fall to the more pensive blue. After prancing around one of these shades a whole evening, I went to bed and dreamed I was looking at fireworks.

Rose is the prettiest all-over color for a shade, and yellow next; blue is apt to make people look a little ghastly. There are all kinds of crocheted, silk, ribbon, lace and paper shades, but they all lose their color before long, if put on next to the glass shade, and then they look so scorched and forlorn, and show so plainly that they "have seen better days," that one regrets the time spent in making them. I saw some pretty shades lately made of pink and yellow crape. They were just big circles of crape, with a hole cut in the middle for the chimney and top of the shade. The lower edge was trimmed with lace. They fell in soft folds, and shaded a lamp without extinguishing it. Now a word as to the care of lamps, which few servants understand. They should be kept perfectly clean and filled every day. The wick should be rubbed off, not cut, and the chimneys washed whenever they are the least smoked, with a little ammonia and water, which clears them instantly. There is nothing that will reward your care more, for a pretty, well-trimmed lamp lends beauty to a whole room, while a smoky, smelling one destroys an evening's pleasure.—Congregationalist.

THE CALIFORNIA REDWOOD.

While traveling in California I became acquainted with the redwood tree, which there grows to an immense size. A nice, large new house was pointed out to me entirely of the wood from one of those trees; the fence that went all round it at some little distance included. It is fast coming into use for house decoration and the manufacture of furniture. It takes a high polish and is as handsome as the more expensive woods, which are getting scarce. It is a good substitute for rosewood, the supply of which is said to be extinct.—M. A. B.

Prof. Brinton says that the very best thing for a sprain is to put the limb into a vessel of very hot water immediately, then adding boiling water as it can be borne. Keep the part immersed for twenty minutes, or until the pain subsides; then apply a tight bandage and order rest. Sometimes the joint can be used in twelve hours. If necessary, use a silicate of sodium dressing

Sometimes the lampwick will obstinately refuse to be turned up in an orderly manner. It will seem firmly wedged at one side, while the other will run up in a point, causing weariness and vexation of spirit. To overcome this depravity take a new wick, draw out a single thread near the selvage, and the wick will be found quite tractable when introduced into the burner. The cogs will take it up properly, and it will appear in good form and give an even flame when lighted.

Frank Beardsley's little two-year old boy, of North Lansing, came near losing its life on Thursday. It obtained a piece of concentrated lye from the sinque where Mrs. B. had been using it, and ate quite a piece of it before being discovered. They were terribly alarmed and sent for the doctor, and during the meantime gave it large doses of caster oil which the child would shortly after each dose throw up in chunks of soap, the oil uniting with the lye. It was the means of saving the child's life, as the necessary delay in getting a doctor would have proved fatal had it not been for the oil.—Genoa Herald.

A Boston woman of brains has invented a new way of making herself useful and making money at the same time. She studies the newspapers, posts herself on what's going on in the world, uses the scissors freely, pastes, writes and revises carefully until she has a condensed digest of the live topics of the day. This she reads to a class of wealthy women, who pay her well for furnishing them with information concerning what they ought to be able to talk intelligently about.

CATARRH CURED.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged aronnd by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

"Maurice Thompson is an ordained prophet of Nature! Whenever he talks of either Birds, Weather, or Archery, the very leaves on the trees stop rustling to listen, and the clouds stand still in the blue to wonder! His latest, 'Sylvan Secrets,' will repay the reading."—Evening Journal, Chicago.

"Mr. Thompson is a pleasing writer, and a new book from him, dealing with outdoor subjects in his own charming way, such as those who have read his previous works will not easily forget, is sure to be welcomed by an eager and extensive circle of readers. His observations are fresh, keen, intelligent, and full of a bright and original individuality."—Times, Hartford.

"This is a most delightful volume, written in Mr. Thompson's inimitable style. A born lover of nature, he makes the reader see through his eyes, and imparts to him something of his own enthusiasm. He is an ardent and intelligent bird-lover, and the secrets here revealed will be readily appreciated by unscientific readers."—Methodist Recorder, Pittsburgh.

"Mr. Thompson is a true poet, though his book is written in prose. He is a keen observer of Nature, an enthusiastic and intelligent lover of birds, and an original and instructive, as well as graceful writer. His frequent moralizings are delightful."—Evening Times, Denver.

"When Maurice Thompson pens the secrets of the thousand lips which God has placed about us, we seem to have been blind until his magic opened our eyes. Sylvan Secrets such as here are told us we would rather read than the secrets of a thousand years of history, for into this little volume the author has written the very essence of the nature of which he speaks. Such a chapter as 'Swamp Sketches' deserves place by Lamb's and Irving's essays."—Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh.

IN BRIEF.

The inventor of the original Babcock fire-extinguisher died in an almshouse the other day. His extinguisher suddenly made him rich, speedily spoiled him, and finally extinguished him.

Three little boys arrived from New South Wales at New York bound to their father, Thomas Jones, at Nanticoke, Pa. They were between the ages of 5 and 10 years, and each had a tag attached to his coat

In 1880 a train on the Northern Pacific was thirty days in getting from Fargo to Bismarck, D. T. The wires were tapped and a newspaper written every day; and a child was born on the train while snow bound.

Citizens of Buffalo have made up a purse of $100,000 to be presented to the first successful inventor of some practical method of utilizing the water power of Niagara River. Numerous propositions have been received by the committee, some from the best engineers in the country, who say that the power can be made useful.

The birth rate among our distinctively American families is less than in any country in Europe except France. On the average, the birth-rate among the families of our immigrants is fifty per cent greater than among ourselves. The peopling of America for the future seems to be given over to the classes least fitted for the duty.

The women of Paris have adopted for the winter season a waggle in their walk The art of waggling gracefully in furs is being taught in the best dancing schools. The correct waggle is described as a short step and an undulating sweep of the hips It is said to be much more graceful than the mannish stride that prevailed during the summer.

Carefully prepared statistics give the number of criminals in this country at 500,000, a vast army, only 50,000 of whom are incarcerated. Of the 500,000 it is estimated that one-third are under 20 years of age, one-half under 21 years of age, and a fraction under 22 years of age—the chances being that all of them will continue criminals through the remainder of their lives.

A joint special committee of the Massachusetts Legislature that has investigated the child-labor system of the State, has just reported, recommending that parochial and other private schools be examined annually by school committees, who shall approve or refuse to approve them, and that the teachers must hold certificates of qualification from the school committee, as required in public schools. A bill embodying the recommendations was presented, and, as this would place all parochial schools under charge of school committees of Protestant complexion, a lively fight is expected.

Elihu Stevens, of Smithfield, Me., is probably at the head of the largest family in the country. The aged man still appears hale and hearty. He is of medium height, quite erect, and although he complains of his poor eyesight, he is still able to go about alone. Before a recent reunion he drove to Oakland, and went about among his friends, inviting them to attend the celebration. Five generations of his family are now living. He was three times married, had ten children by his first wife, five by his second, and six by his third. His children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and great-great-grandchildren who are now living number 319.

The immense buildings of the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, although not completed, were in some departments thrown open to the public Wednesday evening, January 4th. The buildings, which are on Ryerson street, were erected by Mr. Charles Pratt, for the purpose of giving industrial training to poor children. Twelve thousand books are already placed on the library shelves, and there is room enough for thirty thousand more. The reading room is to be well supplied with current newspapers and periodicals. These departments, however, form but a small portion of the Institute, where manual training will, it is alleged, be tried upon a scale and with a completeness never before attempted

A most peculiar case of superstition exists in York Township, Ohio. A well-known farmer named Milar has always kept a fine lot of cows and made a great deal of most excellent butter. Of late years he has had what he terms it, "Witches in the cream," giving himself and family a great deal of trouble and great loss. It happens about every two weeks when they put the cream in the churn it begins foaming over the top and refuses to gather. No amount of churning has any effect toward gathering the butter, and the cream is taken out and thrown far away. The family attributes the trouble to witches brought on through the agency of a woman in the neighborhood through spite. It is a strange case

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

At a meeting in Washington Wednesday night, presided over by Cardinal Gibbons, Bishop Ireland stated that the corner stone of the divinity building of the new Catholic University would be laid in about three months.

Among the petitions and memorials presented to Congress last week and referred were the following: From the Chicago Board of Trade, asking retaliatory legislation against France and Germany for excluding American meat; several from Pennsylvania against the admission of Utah as a State with polygamy; many petitions from various States in favor of prohibition in the District of Columbia.

Democratic members from the tobacco-growing States held a meeting and determined to ask the Commissioner of Agriculture to demand the resignation of the statistician of the Agricultural Department, because of his incorrect estimates on the tobacco crop last season.

The Manderson Grand Army pension bill has been favorably reported in the Senate. It is similar in character to the vetoed dependent pension bill. A more definite method of fixing dependence is outlined in the present measure, which also limits its provisions to those who served in the late rebellion. The bill increases the pension of minor children from $2 to $5 per month.

CHICAGO.

It is rumored that Chicago may have a cardinal, and Archbishop Feehan's name is prominently mentioned in connection with the dignity.

The port holes at the crib have become so blocked with ice as to endanger the city's water supply, and powerful tugs have bent sent to clear them.

Thomas Walsh created an uproar in Judge Clifford's court Saturday morning by trying to shoot James Britton, who had just been acquitted of attempting to assault Walsh's daughter Annie.

William Hayes, who pleaded guilty to the fatal stabbing of John Watts about a year ago, has been sentenced by Judge Horton to twenty years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. Another murderer has just got a sentence of 35 years.

A delegation of the citizens of Park Manor, which is in a prohibition district in the recently annexed portion of Hyde Park, called on City Collector Onahan to complain about a saloon. They were assured that the sign would be pulled down and the place closed up.

GENERAL.

A national anti-saloon Republican conference will be held in New York April 18 and 19.

Sir Morrell Mackenzie, the distinguished physician who is now treating the throat of the Crown Prince of Germany, has received an offer of $30,000 to come to America to see a patient in Michigan.

The jury that has been sitting at Springfield, Mo., on the case of Cora Lee, accused of the murder of Mrs. Graham, brought in a verdict of not guilty. The charges against Mrs. Molloy, the temperance lecturer and mother of Cora Lee, will be abandoned.

George H. Clarkson, a Chicago drummer, has sued Kansas City because he was sandbagged and robbed there. The case is said to be without precedent.

The seventh annual State Convention of the State Temperance Alliance of Iowa is called to meet at Des Moines, Feb. 8.

The funeral of Mrs. Eliza Ballou Garfield took place at Mentor, Ohio, Monday, the remains being placed beside those of President Garfield in the vault at Lake View Cemetery, Cleveland, the same day.

From Galveston, Wednesday, there were shipped to Zanzibar, Africa, ten tons of superior Texas cotton seed. An experienced planter was also sent to instruct the natives in the cultivation of the cotton plant.

The brewers of Milwaukee have informed their employes that on Jan. 26 every union man will be discharged.

The Governor of Mississippi has vetoed the bill providing for the holding of a constitutional convention.

Professor Nathan Shepard, of Saratoga, fell dead in the New York Postoffice Tuesday afternoon.

At a meeting of the trustees of Adelbert College it was decided to refuse admission to women after the close of the present year. A ladies' annex is talked of.

A street car cable train became unmanageable Friday in Selby avenue, St. Paul, Minn., and when descending St. Anthony's Hill the cars shot downward at a great speed, ran off the track, and were smashed to pieces. Three persons were fatally injured and fourteen were badly hurt.

The joint depot of the New York Central, Michigan Central and Grand Trunk Railways at Niagara Falls was burned Thursday at a loss of $50,000, several people living in the building having narrow escapes.

The jury in the Barney Kennedy murder trial at Dubuque, after being out sixteen hours, reported a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, and the punishment was fixed at death. Kennedy was convicted on a former trial and sentenced to hang, but secured a new trial on the ground that one of the jurors was not a naturalized citizen. His attorneys will now move for a third trial because one of the jurors in the trial just concluded became intoxicated during its progress.

FOREIGN.

John Bright, in a letter to the papers, says that Mr. Gladstone prefers to maintain silence when he is questioned regarding such cases as the circulation of bills attributing the Mitchellstown riots to Mr. Bright and Mr. Chamberlain. Mr. Bright fears that Mr. Gladstone does not object to the stones and mud thrown by his followers.

Medical reports from San Remo continue to speak favorably of the condition of the German Crown Prince.

Two thirds of the residents of Dover, England, composing conservatives, liberals, unionists, and independents, have signed a "round robin" denouncing the recent snowballing and hooting of Mr. Gladstone in that town and expressing regret at its occurrence.

The boycott has been pushed to a curious extreme in Kerry, Ireland. Placards recently posted in Rathnore warn all girls not to marry until every priest in the district has joined the National League. Should they disobey their husbands and themselves will be boycotted.

A gigantic conspiracy among post-office employes has been discovered in London, the object of which was the stealing of letters and valuables. It is said to have been so adroitly arranged that it is difficult to detect the guilty parties. An investigation is going on.

It is stated that warrants have been secretly obtained for the arrest of six Irish members of Parliament and magistrates who are now in hiding.

An ancient-looking stone coffin has been discovered at Canterbury Cathedral, which is supposed, by those posted on the subject, to contain the bones of Thomas a'Becket.

Prince Bismarck announces that the loan required on account of the new military bill would amount to 280,000,000 marks.

Professor Virchow, in a letter discussing the latest phase of the Crown Prince's illness, says he is of the opinion that the disease is not cancer. Dr. Mackenzie declares himself as satisfied with the present condition of the Crown Prince's health and says that there is a decided improvement in every respect in the part of the Prince's throat where the previous growth developed.

A frightfully fatal explosion occurred in No. 5 pit of the Wellington colliery, near Victoria, British Columbia, by which upward of ninety lives were lost. It was accompanied by a report like that of a large cannon, and there instantly shot far into the air a dense mass of black smoke and dust, which converted the snow-covered ground into an inky deposit.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000,000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.
The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.
TERMS: $2.00 per year; strictly in advance, $1.50. Special terms to clubs. Send for sample copy.

The Ann Arbor (Mich.) Courier says a building in that city is now being fixed purposely in anticipation of the adoption of prohibition. A room is being fitted up in the center of the building where no possible light or noise can reach outside ears, and no entrance can be effected unless with the knowledge and consent of the outside guard. This is fitting. All unlawful things are on a level. The lodge meets in the dark and behind guarded doors. The saloon must be driven into its holes and hiding places. Let the two go down to the pit together.

Some time since the legislature of Tennessee passed a law against base-ball playing on the Sabbath. The Supreme Court of the State has just decided in favor of the law, and the sporting men of the State give it out, spitefully, that the game is dead—no more base-ball for poor old Tennessee! Without the Sunday game the business won't pay. A business that depends on such an exigency deserves death. Nevertheless, all the boys who play for fun and healthful recreation will go on playing just the same and enjoy it just as much. In Illinois a law against this Sunday playing is ignored, and scores of games went on Sabbath after Sabbath last fall. We hope the effort of the Sabbath Association will be effectual this year to stop the business.

As a fair example of a thousand political slanders, the New York Witness has exposed a malicious editorial of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat which quotes as a celebrated remark of Senator Gorman, that it "cost like hell" to secure St. John's help in the Democratic victory of 1884. Senator Gorman, in a reply to a note from the editor, says "there is not one word of truth" in the slander; and he hopes all who know him will believe him incapable of making such a statement. The editor of the Iowa State Register, whose persistent efforts to make the world believe a similar lie, have left nothing behind but the ugly scars on that gentleman's reputation.

A story which may seem sensational, yet to those who have studied the character of Russian revolutionists, and of the more widely disseminated International Society of Europe, has every feature of probability, comes from London. The St Petersburg correspondents of the St. James Gazette report that an army officer, who had been shot in the region of the heart, was taken to a hospital, where the doctors declared that his wound was mortal. The officer thereupon admitted that he had shot himself to avoid the necessity of shooting the Czar. He said he was a member of a secret society which had balloted to decide who should undertake to assassinate the Czar, and the choice had fallen upon him Several persons in the hospital who overheard part of the confession were immediately arrested. Two physicians who were present on duty were liberated. The full confession of the officer was taken in writing by the authorities. Such are some of the exactions, and such the penalties of the secret lodge.

The dispatches Monday morning reported a resumption of the old boodler system of political taxation among the departments of Washington by Don M. Dickinson, the new Postmaster General, and that he has sent $8,000 to help his party in Michigan. We hope for the sake of consistency, if there is no regard for righteousness or honor left, that this old infamous business will not be resumed under the administration of a President who has promised much to civil service reform. It was, to be sure, surmised that Vilas was not ready enough as a political organizer, and, therefore, he was retired to the Interior Department, to make room for an aggressive politician. If that is the game to be played in 1888, the sooner the people know it the better. They have had enough of such business from both the old parties.

The reader of the poem on this page will be thrilled with its eloquence, and moved to observe more narrowly the movements on the chess-board of European politics. To some they will appear the precursors of revengeful war; to others as a grand appearance of doing something to satisfy the people, and justify the immense war preparations that drain the life out of every important nation of Europe. Whether for a blind, or for a reality, these nations have had enough of war, and if by a peaceful revolution they could throw all the war business upon the few leaders who are promoting it—pen them up and let them have it out with one another—"the world would be the better for it." How much of the anxiety about the wind-pipe of Prince William of Germany is manufactured as a war measure, we are left also to conjecture. If we may credit the reports, his wife, the eldest daughter of Victoria, is a reformer. She wishes to make Germany happy and prosperous under a constitutional government, like England under her mother, with autocracy and Bismarck abolished and the voice of the people effectually controlling their affairs. The old Prime Minister dreads, therefore, the day when death shall sieze the aged Emperor of Germany. There is thus a kind of tragic interest about the reports of the learned doctors. Let us hope that so many of them, with their hands at the throat of the Crown Prince, will not choke him to death.

We can imagine what would become of the lodges if their vile, blasphemous or silly initiations were performed in public from a report which comes to us from Paris. At Rouen, France, some two weeks since a disgraceful scene occurred in the great cathedral, caused by the sacrilegious attempt of a priest to work upon the superstitions of the people. He arranged a scene in which he impersonated the Deity and carried on a dialogue with another priest representing, in costume and sentiment, the Devil. The congregation hissed the performance, and finally drowned the voices of the speakers by singing the "Marseillaise" and "En Revenant de la Revue." The police were summoned and attempted to clear the cathedral, but were unable to do so. They arrested several of the congregation, however, and the disorder was finally stopped by the termination of the farce which provoked it. Suppose the Knight Templar initiation with its skull, wine and double damnation were performed statedly for public amusement or instruction; or the burning bush scene of the Royal Arch; or the Jubulum murder of the Blue Lodge; or the mummery of a Good Templar lodge; or the solemn oaths of boys in the Sons of Veterans—the whole lodge business would be routed and driven into its secret dens instantly. There is no safety for such business but in the "dark places of the earth" where Christ is not. See Isaiah 45:19.

THE TREMBLING OF NATIONS.

BY REV. ALEX. THOMSON.

Oh Europe, mother Europe! why do you stand to-day
With bristling steel and iron front in war's accursed array?
Why roar your thundering forges, but not to shape the plow?
Must war's infernal horrors hang forever round your brow?

Where rolls the icy Neva; where flows the classic Rhine;
Where Norway lifts her granite brows, and shakes her mountain pine;
Where tolls the Finnish peasant on Bothnia's rugged shore,
And where the brave and light-haired Dane pulls manfully the oar,

There's sound of coming conflict, as when November gales
Burst from the icy mountains where Winter trims his sails,
And sends his fleet forerunners, and bids his trumpets blow,
Before he hurls his shot of ice and musketry of snow.

The Russian bear is growling on his wild Tartar plains,
And screams the Austrian eagle from bleak Carpathian chains,
And France, like couchant tiger, lies ready for the spring,
With glaring eyes that never leave the German eagle's wing.

From where the lively Belgian toils ever at his loom;
From where the sturdy Hollander keeps eye on dike and flume;
From Spain's ancestral castles; from everlasting Rome;
From where the Turk grasps lance and sword to guard his fathers' home;

From where the Greeks are stirring, with old ambition's power;
Where bold Bulgaria trembles at each succeeding hour;
From where the brave Swiss peasant keeps well his mountain wall;
From our own mother Britain, the bravest of them all;

Comes news of coming conflict and marshaling of men,
As if our mother Europe, mad with maternal pain,
Had in her womb a demon, who, when he shall have birth,
Will let infernal furies forth upon our hapless earth.

O Thou before whose presence the trembling nations stand,
What hidden purpose hast thou; what awful work on hand?
Must earth's foundations tremble and hell her furies bring
For man's great final trial ere the coming of the King?

AN OUTSIDE VIEW OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

BY PROF. W. J. COLEMAN.

II.—THEIR SECRETS.

Every secret society is supposed to have secrets that are to be kept carefully from the world. With regard to these secrets we offer you this alternative. Either these secrets consist of facts and principles which are valuable to all who know them, or they consist of facts and principles which are of little or no value to anybody. In the first case, if these secrets are of great value to all who know them, then these secret societies are selfish and unchristian in that they do not make these secrets known to every one whom they can reach. Why should any man or set of men seek to keep to themselves truths which would greatly benefit the world? What deliberate selfishness it is to continue to do this generation after generation. What a sin it is to plan to keep the world in want of these treasures of truth by obliging every man who receives them to swear solemnly never to reveal them, even to his nearest friends. It is true, we grant men patents on their discoveries, but that is for but a limited time, and then not to keep their inventions hidden from the world, but to have the world buy at such an increased cost for a time as will pay the man for his work. But the secrets of these societies are never to be revealed with their will. Indeed,it is more than hinted that it is not entirely safe for a man to reveal these secrets which on our supposition are so valuable to humanity. Secret society men are in the habit of calling men vile names who reveal these secrets to this poor, dark, ignorant world outside. But,says one, "These secrets are too valuable to be told to everybody. They are too sacred. They would be abused." Then they must be valuable indeed,more so even than the most precious truth that we know of, and that is the Word of God. For that, as the song of the angels tells us, was "good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Is their light more precious than the light which the Son of God came down to shed abroad upon the whole earth? and, if so,why should it be hid under a bushel? How contrary is all this sworn secrecy to the command and example of the blessed Lord. He made himself the light of the world, and commissioned his disciples to go into all the world and preach the Gospel. What should we think of the apostle Paul if,instead of preaching the Word openly and everywhere, he had made himself the traveling secretary of a secret order, and had told no one the way of salvation unless they had sworn an oath never to tell this truth to any one out of the order? If secret societies have secrets of great value to the world, they are filled with a spirit the direct opposite of that of Christianity that they do not make them known to a sinful, suffering race. It is a selfish, uncharitable and unchristian spirit that deliberately refuses to do good to our neighbor when it is in our power. It is worldliness incarnate that plans to hide our light from our neighbor when to enlighten him would make our light none the less.

Secondly. If secret societies have no secrets that are of value, then their secrecy is a delusion and a snare. This is a perfectly fair and conclusive argument. The division is complete and leaves no undivided third. These societies either have secrets, or they have not, and these secrets are either valuable, or they are not. If they have valuable secrets,they violate the command of Christ, contradict his example, and prove their selfish and unchristian character, in that they make every effort to keep them hidden from their neighbors. If they have no valuable secrets, then is their secrecy a swindle. What would you think if a number of respectable Christian men would persuade you that they had a society in which you would do well to seek membership,and when you had consented would, with great ceremony, take you into some very retired place and, after swearing you to eternal secrecy, then tell you nothing of any value or importance? Would you not think either that they were fools, or that they were trying hard to make a fool of you? Whichever horn then of the division the advocates of secrecy may take, they are impaled. Whether they have secrets or whether they have them not, they are alike condemned. On either supposition all decent, intelligent Christian men ought to stand clear and have nothing to do with them.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

BY A. B. CURTIS.

Deep imbedded in the inmost nature of the Hebrew mind was the idea of compensation. The wicked must be punished, the righteous must be rewarded. All things, thought they, must finally be equalized. This dualism, as it were, runs all through their thinking. Jehovah and Satan are set over against each other. Good and evil, blessing and cursing,obedience and transgression are everywhere contrasted. Their poetry is dualistic, each two successive lines set forth the same thought by either synonym or contrast. Their noun and verb are dualistic also; there are but two tenses and two genders. Their word for "money" means literally balance. They balanced everything. The good was the fruitful, the true, the prosperous, the existent: the bad was the sterile,the false,the non-prosperous, the non-existent.

The New Testament caught the lesson and wove it into the very web and woof of the Christian life. Christ's idea of forgiveness is nothing other than the Golden Rule applied, between God and man on the one hand, and man and fellow-men on the other. Peter's question, "How oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? till seven times?" contains a fundamental error. It implies that there will come a time when God will tire of keeping the Golden Rule with his servants.

To illustrate this from our Lord's reply to Peter: A certain man was in debt ten thousand talents. His lord forgave him that debt at his urgent request. But subsequent events showed that, after all, the forgiveness was only nominal. Because the forgiven man refused in turn to forgive his own debtor, his lord's compassionate "I forgive thee all" was made of none effect. Forgiveness can only come to a forgiving spirit. Though God may nominally forgive sins in answer to a prayer of faith,that answered prayer does not become effectual until the forgiven person has himself forgiven an enemy. Nor, in turn, mark this, has he forgiven that enemy more than in name until he has gone to him and sought a reconciliation.

This world is a looking-glass to reveal us to ourselves. Frown at it and it will sour on you; smile at it and with it and it is a God-given companion. What is this but the Golden Rule all-sidedly applied? Every time we forgive a fault in another the forgiveness of our Heavenly Father becomes sweeter. Though we should live so close to him that no special forgiveness on his part were now necessary,yet the old one would be revealed in a new and brighter light because of our added experience and then would gush up into our soul all the joy and love of our early conversion. Forgiveness has nothing to do with "times." Shall I keep account of how many times I practice the Golden Rule, hoping to measure my goodness by that means? God's forgiveness of us and ours of our fellows act and react upon each other. In proportion as God forgives us we forgive our enemies. In proportion as we forgive our enemies God forgives us. Neither is anything without the other. Together they act and react preparing the forgiving soul for a brighter heaven. As love grows strong by what it bears, so forgiveness grows sweet by what it forgives. When we pray, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that trespass against us,"let us remember that forgiveness without reconciliation and not from the heart is only nominal, and will not secure for us a union with the spirit of Christ. "Whatsoever therefore ye would that men should do to you,do ye even so to them."

NEGRO EXPATRIATION.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

A proposition to colonize the Negroes of the United States in South America is now being mooted. It is said that earnest friends and members of the race are at the bottom of the movement and that great results are expected. But it may as well be accepted as one of the inevitable things that any plan for the expatriation of the colored Americans, whether originating with Negroes or Caucasians, is doomed to disappointment. For good or ill, for better or for worse, the two races are here as permanent factors in our body politic. Whatever may be our conceptions of what would have been desirable,we must needs accept the present condition of things as one of the dispensations of Providence with which it is vain to complain. Whether the relation of the two races shall be mutually helpful and beneficent will depend largely upon their cheerful acceptance of this providence and of the obligations that grow out of it.

Seventy years ago,when the Negro population was but one-fourth what it now is, there were some great thinkers,statesmen and philanthropists,who thought they saw in African colonization a solution of the slavery question. They did not even then represent the best and highest Christian sentiment, for the friends of the slave soon abandoned the movement as both chimerical and cruel. Nevertheless, the American Colonization Society was organized under the prestige of great names, and for more than half a century has been in the field. The net results are the colonization of about 16,000 people in Africa and the establishment of a feeble republic that has scarce that number of civilized citizens. Meanwhile the colored population has increased from 2,000,000 to nearly 8,000,000, and the annual increase has advanced from 60,000 to about 240,000; while the last annual report of the American Colonization Society shows that after seventy years of effort and organization they have in the last year sent 100 colonists to Africa at a cost of more than $18,000.

The intelligent, thinking men, both in the North and South, have accepted this verdict of history,and while some are commendably willing to aid all who desire to colonize the Dark Continent, none are so stupid as to suppose that present methods can have any appreciable effect on the number of Negroes in America. There have probably been more immigrants within the last two years from Africa than all who have gone from this coast. Yet, strange as it may seem, a large proportion of the white people of the South, and a few at the North, are continually prating about colonizing the Negro. With them expatriation is the alternative of emancipation. The two races, say they, can never live side by side; all effort to educate the Negro but emphasizes this antagonism, and unless the Negroes are removed there will be a war of races in which they will be exterminated. This feeling finds expression in some of the leading papers of the South and is the animating spirit of much of Southern legislation. They have no objection to the Negro, so long as he is in a dependent and servile condition, but all plans for the practical recognition of his equality as a citizen are met with undying hate and vague pleas for some method for his removal.

The trouble with these people is that they have had centuries of mis-education and have, in the main, radically false conceptions of what Christianity is, and what it requires. To them such small matters as the principles of political economy, the facts of the census, the rules of arithmetic, the impulses of humanity and the Ten Commandments are as nothing when put in competition with their prejudices and desires. It would be unjust to say that they are in these things consciously wicked. They are rather to be pitied as the victims of their own hallucinations.

Suppose we could revive the colonization movement (which is most improbable), and suppose we could send away 200,000 a year. This is more than ten times the number that has been colonized in seventy years, and yet it would not diminish the colored population. They would still be increasing on our hands. It is safe to say that if it were possible to send 200,000 emigrants to West Africa in a year, at least one-half would die from the malarious climate and destitution. If it were attempted it would be simply murder. Nor is South American colonization a whit more practicable. True, the difficulties are not so great. Africa has a comparatively dense,and South America a sparse,population. West Africa is very malarious; South America not so much so, and withal has governments of some stability.

But there are no advantages for the Negro in South America that he cannot have in a far greater degree in this, his native land. He is here a citizen. With all the disabilities he endures he is gaining in numbers, wealth, and especially in education. Thousands of Negroes are attaining a college education. Many of them are lawyers, physicians, teachers, editors and well-educated ministers. They are legislators, judges and executive officers; and though in some States they are practically denied the right of the ballot, yet even there they are gaining in moral and social influence. The power of race hatred which would drive them from the land of their nativity is, when represented by the numbers of those who cherish it, very great. But the facts of history and the providences of God are all against it Men of intelligence dare not outrage the moral sense of mankind by even proposing the extradition of 8,000,000 of people. Meanwhile if any colored American thinks he can better his condition or contribute to the improvement of his race by going to Africa or South America, by all means let him go. But let no man, black or white, do violence to common sense by proposing to send away the whole race.

MASONRY IN ITS RELATION TO REVEALED RELIGION.

BY REV. R. MENK, GERMAN EVANGELICAL PASTOR.

Masonry pretends to be a factor and promoter of civilization. Its teachings within the walls of its lodges are said to be of a very scientific character, so as to instruct the initiated in geometry, architecture, astronomy and physiology. This would place this institution in the rank with universities and colleges, and young men would save much trouble and expense when going to these places of learning to get an education by joining these societies. If this is true, then why is this light hid in darkness? Why is the world so totally ignorant of this court of learning in our midst? If this is true, if this institution is what it pretends to be, then it would be unjust to say anything dishonorable against the order, because learning is a great factor in civilization.

Masonry pretends to be an agent of benevolence. Who will say that this is not praiseworthy? Benevolence is the very result of practical Christian religion, and is honored by all true Christians. But benevolence, if of the true Christian type, must be of a general character, must be shown toward all men in need and distress. If this is the case, who would say anything against the practice of this Christian grace? But every one knows that the benevolence of this system is limited to their own members. Any one can testify that this is not Christian benevolence.

Masonry pretends to unite different men of different stations in life and creed into one union of brotherhood. This is a very praiseworthy undertaking, and promotes civilization. But the greatest thing of all is the kind of religion by which this union and harmony is accomplished.

Let us see whether this is true. What is religion? It is the true way by which man comes into the communion with his God that he may partake of all the blessings of God for his temporal, spiritual and eternal welfare. Man is created for God. He is dependent upon him for all things, and longs for his blessings, but feels also his entire unworthiness of the same. He knows himself cast out of God's grace and presence and feels his sinfulness as the only hindrance to communion with his Maker. God's Word shows plainly what man feels instinctively. It teaches us the true character of God as a holy being, who must punish sin with eternal wrath; teaches his merciful state of being by which he extends grace to men who are corrupted in sin, that they may be redeemed from all evil.

To redeem man from this pitiful state of being, to bring him to his God and make him live forever, God revealed his eternal decree of redemption. Most blessed words of promise go forth to sorrowing mankind, to create hope for a deliverance. God chose a people from all nations through which he would fulfill his promises of a Saviour. God's purpose in giving the law was not that man might be his own Saviour by keeping it, but to let Israel and all men know their sin and their inability to perform what God commands to do. Israel failed to keep the law because he had not in himself the strength to do it, and came under the curse of the law. So a redemption from this curse was needed. God provided for this duty his Son. Gal. 4: 5, 5: "But when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." He was the real high priest, to give himself to God as an offering in shedding his blood for the remission of sin for all. This is the only offering that is acceptable to God, and none other is needed. By his resurrection from the dead and ascension to the right hand of God, his offering is shown to be accepted, and God commands all to believe in him and be saved. But as man cannot believe out of his own will, nor of himself be renewed in heart and life, God sent the Holy Spirit to do this. His work on our hearts proves that he brings about a new creation in our natures, that we may become God's real children. This is the revealed religion of the Bible in a brief outline, and it is proved true by all who have become real Christians.

How stands Masonry related to this glorious work of God for the salvation of men? All the books of lodge instruction show that they fail utterly to conceive of this way of salvation. So Masonry has no true sight of God, who requires that his holy law be obeyed by men. As Israel failed to keep this law, how can Masons keep it? Israel fell under the curse of the law and needed a Redeemer; can Masons do without him? God ordained Aaron for his priest to bring for Israel the offerings he commanded; but who commanded Masons to choose a priest, and bring through him the offerings God does not ask for? And as they seem not to need the God-appointed Redeemer, Jesus Christ, nor believe in him as our High Priest, God does not respect their coming to him by the way of their own priesthood, nor regard their prayers. But Masonry pretends to bring its members to heaven, and to set them beside God's true children who are there through belief in Jesus; therefore, its religion is delusion and deception. Beware, then! How can Christians confess Christ in the church and deny him in the lodge and hope to be saved? Do not draw in the yoke with the unbelievers and fellowship them in their iniquity, lest you bear with them the wrath of God.

NEAR THE PRECIPICE.

The great Continental Powers are all moving on to the brink of a chasm such as they neared a century ago. The Continent of Europe is now the greatest armed camp the world has ever seen, and is daily increasing its preparations for conflict with feverish alacrity. There is one feature in the position which is phenominal in history, viz., "That all are deliberately and simultaneously getting into battle array." Every week brings some fresh incident which is on all hands interpreted as another indication of the approaching storm, while not a single minister or government seems any longer to make the feeblest effort to suggest conciliation and peace. Every one of these great militant powers, which can each march over a million warriors into the first line of fire at the first bugle blast, is greedy for some territorial bonne bouche, or else in terror of the neighbor which is determined to snatch it. France is resolved on the recovery of Alsace and Lorraine, and the conviction of this paralyzes the "honest broker" of Berlin in his attempts to counteract the palpable designs of Russia. But the French are aware that their shabby diplomatic seizure of Nice and Savoy is resented by Italy as one of the most outrageous robberies of history. Italy has her eyes on the Trentino also, still in the talons of the Austrian eagle. Thus the strenuous and constant strain of the Italians to create a vast army and splendid navy very easily explains itself. And of the Austrian order for a million repeating rifles—horrible weapons for slaughter by arithmetic—all the world is talking with mingled wonder and dejection. For this means that Austria does not flinch from the appalling prospect of an early conflict with the almost countless Muscovite hosts.—London Christian Commonwealth.

WAR A CRIME.

Ten members of the British Parliament and representatives of various unofficial English bodies have waited upon the President of the United States and expressed to that officer the sense of many millions of people on the other side of the water that the time has come to make some practical attempt to do away with war as a method of settling difficulties between nations. To these expressions the President has responded in fitting terms, including the conventional reminders that, while the people of the United States strive persistently for peace, none could fight more terribly when pushed to battle. It may be felt, with reason, that the idea of international arbitration has gained in moral strength. It must be remembered that the Geneva award was universally considered unjust to England, and that the Halifax award was notoriously outrageous in mulcting America. If, with these two unlucky experiments to remember, the people of both countries are able to carry forward the propaganda, all men should rejoice. It is but a profession, it is but words, at best. But words have a tremendous influence on the deeds of men.

War is a tiny term. It has but three letters. But within those three letters lie hidden all the evils of which man is capable. In time of war not only does all bad become good, but all good may become bad. In time of war the lover of peace may be held as the enemy of man. Murder and robbery stand out as virtues to be particularly admired, and the burner of cities, the executor of capital sentence, the expropriator of property, the unconscionable despot, gradually assumes the attributes of a god, and petty men who have slaughtered no regiments and burned no cities walk under his huge legs, and peep about to find themselves dishonorable graves. It was so in Julius Cæsar's day. It was so in Elizabeth's day, when Shakespeare gave the language for it. It is so in our own day, when the man who put torch to a great city lives to be welcomed to that rebuilt metropolis as a guest who honors the town with his coming.

That this little word, war, should make ambition virtue; that it should put the seal of legitimacy on all the bad acts of which the basest human heart is capable; that it should illumine a man's fame as no other thing, be it good or bad, can embelish it, must have caused the philosopher some thought. A great general, compared with Shakespeare, is a mere nobody. He may o'erthrow Osiris, Orno, Apis, Isis, but who shall care for it two thousand years afterward? Whether he be a Cambyses, Alexander, Cæsar, Charlemagne, Frederick, Napoleon, or Grant, or Von Moltke, his fame must pale as other generals crowd upon the scene. But, in his own time, what is that strange glory that so exalts him? What makes men worship him as if they thought he would outlast Shakespeare and Homer? This habit of man can only be explained on the theory that, in the tribal times, the mighty man was indeed a saviour, who preserved his family and the wives of his friends from death and slavery. A dog, in lying down, revolves many times and thoroughly examines his bed. His master beat down the long grass for a mattress, and pulled out obnoxious herbs with his teeth that his dreams might be undisturbed. Probably, too, when a civilized man bows and fawns before a successful general, or, at a distance, debates upon the splendor of that general's renown, the admirer is drawn away from the realm of common sense by animal instincts, which have persisted beyond the day of their proper use and need.—Chicago Herald.

NOTES OF THE CRESCENT CITY.

BY REV. A. J. CHITTENDEN.

Bro. Hinman tells me of an Englishman who had been three days in America and announced himself to a London paper as ready to give a description of the country. I, therefore, preface my letters with one general remark—"subject to revision when better informed." My first impressions of a New Orleans winter were very damp. The last three days have redeemed the reputation of the city in the estimation of visitors, and nothing alloys our happiness but the thought of friends in the North coughing and shivering. Yet, it is but fair to say that no place on the line of the Illinois Central Railroad has seemed to us a better place to live in than northern Illinois.

New York City and New Orleans are hardly American cities. The typical Yankee has almost disappeared from the former, and the typical Southerner seems to be almost invisible in the latter. He is found in his traditional physique and character in the latitude of Mississippi or Tennessee—rather tall, dark-white skin, dark and black hair, rather sharp features, and general bearing modified by circumstances, which in the last two decades have had a telling effect. This city is said to represent almost every nationality. Certainly the variety is sufficient to furnish a museum with fac-similes. The colors range through the entire series, and might be likened to the various brands of syrup, commencing with pure glucose and passing into New Orleans molasses, then West India molasses, till you reach the brown-black and the soot-black, or the black unadulterated. Of course we have white, German and Caucasian.

In a lay meeting at the Methodist Conference now in session the positive Negro type prevails, and, judging from a very brief hearing, the genuine Negro of the higher African descent promises to equal or excel the mulatto in facility of speech and general vigor of thought.

The Negro delights in parliamentary exercises, and when a question is "before the house" there are sometimes a good many speakers before the house also. "I rise, Mr. President, to a point of order," says one. "The gentleman—I should say, the brother—rose for explanation and now he is making a speech." The contest was over the seating of a lay delegate by "proxy." The chair made a good ruling—that the proxy must be from the same place as the original to be eligible. Bro. B. is nominated to attend the National Conference and the nominators urge their candidate in a fashion that succeeds well in clearing the track of all impediments.

"I desire to say, Mr. President," says No. 1., "that the brother whose name I present for this honorable appointment is eminently fitted to represent us and the interests of our people in the approaching national meeting. He has already done much to secure to us the respect of the entire denomination. When he was at the Philadelphia meeting, he was treated with genuine courtesy, and in every way regarded as one of the great men of the occasion. I hope, therefore, that this nomination will be sufficient and that no one will presume to allow his name to run against that of Bro. B."

Nominator No. 2 endorses the selection with equal vigor. "I wish also, Mr. President, to give a reason why I favor the election of Bro. B. He represents both the male and the female gender of the sect, and that is another reason why we wish him to go to New York." (He was a married man.)

It was then moved that the election be made unanimous by a rising vote. The scarcity of seats compelled about half of the meeting to stand all the time, and the rising vote was a success. But it doubtless would have been in any case.

The population here is divided, in general by Canal street, the main street, about fifteen rods wide, with boulevard center and double horse-car and steam street-car track, running from the levee on the southeast nearly through to the northwest side. On the northeast side the population is French, German, Spanish, Italian, Irish, etc. The southwest side is called American. The French side is mostly Catholic and Jewish.

Religion appears in modest formalism at the open cathedrals at all hours, and in the synagogue on Saturdays. It evidently has almost no saving effect on the minds of the masses. No one could tell at certain hours of the night whether he were in a heathen city or a "Christian." One need not go further to see Paris or Vienna. Vice is thorougly impudent, and will even assault you in the day time, if you venture in some of the "back streets," crying out loud enough to be heard twenty rods away. Policemen are scarce, and not well supported by the city authorities. One of them said this side of "the city is a hell on earth." The theaters are, many of them (and their number is legion),run on the Continental plan. They are simply a composition of stage, saloon, and the other gate to death. A long hall is filled with men and girls; the men mostly young and either drinking or smoking; the girls in flaming costumes, giving them the appearance of elongated Chinese lanterns, or what might be called a Turkish Mother-Hubbard over-dress, stuffed in some way all round as if it were the stage ballet costume covered for the intervals between the acts. "Admission Free," is over the door, and so much we saw in three minutes. The saloon power is to be the doom of the city unless it is driven out by law. Abolish that, and nearly all the vices which it feeds would be reduced seventy per cent. "The Old Absinthe Depot, Established in 1826." So reads one of the signs over that species of French saloon.

All through the city are scattered little places exhibiting in the windows, "Tickets in the Louisiana Lottery Scheme." These offices are, if possible, more numerous than the saloons. The extent of this vice must be fearful. I believe it to be as demoralizing to the minds of the people as physical intoxicants. There is really no sense in tolerating such an evil. The State ought to be thoroughly ashamed of it. It is time for these people to understand that unless they discontinue such demoralizing practices, some more sober and enterprising settlers will take possession of the opportunities offered in this truly favored portion of the earth.

There is more unoccupied land in the South than in the northwest. And the tide of immigration is setting strong this way. Nature is generous, but she permits no fooling for any great length of time. The wise shall inherit the land.

LETTER FROM THE CONGO.

BRO. EDWARD MATHEWS ON AFRICAN EXPERIENCES.

BENZA MENLIKI, Congo Free State, Africa.

Having reached this place I decided to learn what I could of the sweeping revival of a year ago which has changed the hearts and lives of 1,200 natives,and in missionary reports much is said about Bro. Richard's great success. I find the people kind-hearted, and they gave me a royal reception, I assure you. Brother and sister Ingham too are very pleasant. There are some strange features connected with their work. First, these natives Christians all smoke, women as well as men. Of course many throw this all away. "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant," etc.? "To his own Master he standeth or falleth." Second, many of the men keep their many wives. One of their most useful evangelists, with whom I talked this evening, and have met him before, has two wives. The position taken by the missionaries of this mission is—the Bible does not condemn the practice of living with their wives, but God forbids them to marry more. They infer from Paul's letter to Timothy touching elders and deacons having but one wife that the heathen were permitted to keep many wives, but not to be officers in the church. Of course I combat these opinions and argue that God's original plan was, monogamy, one wife, and his displeasure always rested on polygamy. But we read: "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." Perhaps this is the blade experience.

One thing is certain, they do not scruple at working on Sunday. They are carrying materials for a church given by Americans, from Tunduwa to Benza Menliki, which is four days' walk. I saw a caravan yesterday trudging along with siding, flooring, and frame stuff. I inquired, how about "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," etc. The answer from one of the missionaries was, "Oh, there is no Sabbath in Africa." It was evident that preachers and converts were to act upon the statement, and so I gave my thirteen men the privilege of going to Luri River with prospect of shooting an antelope or buffalo, or remaining in camp and remembering the Sabbath.

We are now at an altitude of 160 feet above the sea level, and yet some of the mountains climbed have taken us as much or more than that above the valley below. I find it full harder on me to descend than to ascend. I stand it well, as you may know from the fact that I keep ahead of my men nearly all the time. I sometimes get into camp three hours before some of them.

I will describe some of the flowers I picked today. The first is cotton, which I picked from the tree growing wild in an abandoned village. The reason the beautiful spot, abounding with fruit and ornamental trees,—too lovely for my pen to portray—was abandoned is, that being on the trail of caravans for the Pool, the Zanzibars, Kilandas and Luangos robbed the natives of all they had, and so they have gone miles from the trail that they may enjoy the fruit of their labor. The first that attracted my attention was a beautiful yellow flower, something like a tulip, but it grew in a cluster; it has a beautiful purple trimming at the root of the leaf. The next a sort of morning-glory, and yet in some respects it resembled a large fuchsia. The third has a delicate leaf and the flower is very pretty, the principal color is purple, tipped with yellow, with yellow and red petals, with white fringe at the stem. The next is a button-shaped flower, with a dark yellow tip mounted on a dark green stem. I picked one, also, which answers to our little blue forget-me-not. A few miles from where I am writing the heathen murdered three Christians (Africans), simply because they were a standing rebuke to their ungodliness. They had given up their Gilley-Gillies (or charms of various kinds), and devil worship of the place. So to be rid of them they charged them with being bewitched and put them to death.

E. MATHEWS.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

"WHY PRIESTS SHOULD WED."

Since the publication of Morgan's expose of Freemasonry, no book has created greater sensation in Boston than Fulton's "Why Priests Should Wed." The attention it has received from the general public is unprecedented. Curiosity, no doubt, is increased by the restricted sale of the work. Many who have not read it, severely criticise and condemn Mr. Fulton as being an obscene writer, but to use a somewhat vulgar phrase, "there is where they make a mistake."

The work is not claimed to be an original composition, but simply a compilation of extracts from the theological writings of Dens and Ligouri, which are recognized and adopted as standards of religious authority by the Romish church, and read, taught and practiced by the Catholic clergy throughout the world. So vile, so reeking with obscene teachings and suggestions is Dens's theology said to be that for translating and selling it a man in England has been sentenced to twenty years in imprisonment. Mr. Fulton has allowed only the cleanest portions to enter the book, but so interlarded with filth are even these, that he is forced to substitute many clauses with black rules and other symbols of the vile character of the terms used in the original. Besides these writings Mr. Fulton quotes passage after passage from those of such well-known authors as William Hogan and H. C. Lea, author of "Sacerdotal Celibacy," published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1884, the confessions of ex-priests, and the sad experiences of the escaped nuns, Maria Monk, Edith O'Gorman, and Miss Reed, who was once an inmate of the Charlestown nunnery, which the indignant citizens destroyed by fire August 11, 1834.

In regard to the purpose and character of the book, Mr. Fulton says: "To touch pitch and not be defiled, to write of pollution and not become polluted, is thought by many to be impossible. It were so if it were not that behind the attempt there shines out a purpose so good, so beneficent, and so ennobling, that it sanctifies the effort, and makes it a labor of love." "To tell the truth about the priesthood, is to slander them, we are told. What is slander? To slander is to injure by falsehood maliciously uttered. To injure by telling the truth, for the good of the people, is not slander, but the reverse." "The books which exhibit the true genius of Popery are written in Latin and never translated. They are to be found nowhere but on the shelves of priests. Consequently the people are kept in ignorance. It is alarming that men of brain and culture in the Roman Catholic church will consent to this state of things. For the shame and confusion of Romanists, Dens's Theology and Ligouri's Instructions ought to be translated, and placed within reach of the parents of those children now exposed to peril. The people have never given this subject proper attention. An evil thought pollutes the soul. Proofs of the result have been set forth in these pages. May God bless the truth to those who read it." "To shield Rome, history must belied, and the truth must remain untold. For, be it remembered, I do not make facts, but quote them. Every line in the book, so stoutly opposed as improper, is taken from publications, which, with the usual restrictions, may be obtained in our larger and best libraries." "The facts in the book deserve resurrection. They are bound now to have it. It is not an obscene book. A book is obscene which is immoral in purpose, indecent in language, causing lewd thoughts of an impure tendency."

To deny the statements of the book,it can be clearly seen, the existence of the teachings of Dens and others must first be denied. The book is a terrible wedge driven into Romanism, which must assist in splitting it in twain.

D. P. MATHEWS.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Last Thursday evening the First United Presbyterian church of Brooklyn celebrated the fortieth anniversary of the pastor, Rev. D. J. Patterson. On the wall back of the pulpit was the United States flag. On the right side, in green, "1848;" on the left, in gold, "1888." The house was filled with interested guests. Rev. Shaw opened with prayer. Revs. Harshaw and Biddle made addresses. Mr. Waters, a student of the third year in Union Theological Seminary and a member of this congregation, presented the pastor with a purse of $100—forty ten dollar gold pieces—one for each year. A poem was read by one of the ladies. After singing a Psalm, and prayer by Rev. Crosby, the audience adjourned to the lecture room, where a collation was served by the ladies of the congregation. Bro. Patterson has done a good work.

On Friday morning I addressed the students of Union Seminary on National Reform. The deepest interest was manifested, and after the address many asked questions as to the practical bearings of the movement. It seemed to have struck a responsive chord.

On Sabbath evening I preached in the Puritan Congregational church on Marcy Ave., Rev. Dr. Ingersoll, pastor. This congregation numbers about 600 members, and we had that number in the audience. "Puritanism means the Reformation reformed." These reformation principles took hold here. The marked attention made me feel that I was talking to friends. The time has come for plain, fearless, truth-telling utterances. "Cry aloud and spare not; tell my people Israel their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins."

Commend us to the courage and fidelity of the wife of Rev. John Welsh, the daughter of John Knox, who, when the judge tried to persuade her to advise her husband to renounce his principles, held out her apron and said, "I would rather kep his head there." We want men of the John Knox type, of whom Hamilton said, when his casket had been lowered, "There lies a man who never feared the face of man."

Dr. Sloane began his Boston lecture thus: "It is related of the illustrious English philanthropist, Howard, when visiting Italy for objects connected with the grand work to which he had consecrated his life,that hedid not turn aside to view her noble galleries of art, her magnificent ruins, 'sublime even in decay,' or any of those historic scenes where the fate of empires and the destinies of the world have been decided. The great Genevan reformer, John Calvin, spent his life amid the most attractive and transporting natural scenery; yet he has left behind no descriptions, and I believe no direct allusions, even, to the sublime tumult of the rushing Rhone, the mist-enshrouded Jura, or the snowy grandeur of the 'monarch of the Alps.' Intent upon his great work of organizing the spiritual and social forces of the Reformation, he had neither time, feelings nor energy to be expended upon lighter interests. No one standing where I stand to-day can be unmindful of those hallowed memories that cluster around this honored city of the Puritans. I do not forget that we are assembled almost within hearing of the waves that break upon Plymouth Rock, beneath the shadow of Bunker Hill and Faneuil Hall; that these shores heard first the roar of the enemies' cannon, and these streets drank the first blood in that memorable struggle which gave independence to the American colonies." Let Puritanism be revived in America!

J. M. FOSTER.

—During a special week of prayer called by the National W. C. T. U., meetings, under the auspices of the National Society, will be held in Washington, in the general interest of the organization and of the work the District Union is doing to secure a prohibitory statute. These meetings will be addressed by Miss Willard and other leaders of the National W. C. T. U., and will consist of parlor and mass meetings, with Bible readings by Mrs. Hannah Whittall Smith. They will close on Saturday, March 24, and on Sunday, March 25, will begin a week's meeting of the Woman's International Council to celebrate the fortieth or jubilee year of the woman's movement. This meeting will open with a sermon by the Rev. Anna Shaw, superintendent of franchise for the National W. C. T. U., and many of the white ribbon leaders will be in attendance. It is meant to pass in review the achievements of women in industry, education, professional life, philanthropy, politics, and religion.

NOTICES

THE N. C. A. NATIONAL CONVENTION.

OFFICIAL CALL.

The Seventeenth Convention of the National Christian Association is hereby called to meet in the Central Congregationalist church in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, at 7:30 P. M., February 17th, 1888. An interesting programme has been arranged, able speakers have been secured, and three sessions will be held daily, closing with the evening of Feb. 20th. Seats are free and the public are most cordially invited to attend.

REV. J S MCCULLOCH, D.D., Pres.

RATES TO NEW ORLEANS.—Regular round trip tickets from Chicago to New Orleans $30, good till June 1st During the present week, Feb. 6th to 11th, a special excursion ticket is sold, good to return till March 1st. Special rates are generally made from all parts of the country this week, and it is a good time to take the trip. Special excursion rates can also be had for colonies in parts of Louisiana near New Orleans. Advantage may be taken of these low rates to attend the convention.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

DOORS OPENING IN NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Jan. 30th, 1888.

I preached in two colored churches yesterday to attentive audiences. Bro Butler of Shiloh Baptist church followed with a strong endorsement of all I had said, and especially my words of warning against the secret lodge. Bro. Davidson followed with a stirring testimony from a personal knowledge, and then distributed tracts which were eagerly received by the audience.

I visited the M. E. Conference this morning. The Bishop gave me an opportunity to give notice of our approaching convention and explain its object. I did so briefly and the Bishop endorsed the object and said substantially, "I desire, brethren, to commend this subject to your most prayerful consideration. I have long been of the opinion that the multiplication of these secret lodges is injuring the church and greatly hindering the cause of Christ I belong to one which has just two members, my wife and myself, and I never have and never shall belong to any other. There is of course a difference between societies that are strictly benevolent and those that are social, but in my opinion the church is sufficient. The church needs the time, the thought and the money which goes to these societies and I hope you will give to the Bride of Christ what justly belongs to her."

The Bishop's remarks, though brief, were pointed and received with marked approval. I had with me a supply of tracts which were eagerly received, and when they were exhausted I promised to return later with a supply. Thus we see the good hand of our God opening the door and pointing the way into the midst of the churches where we had least expected to find a welcome and friends of our special work.

I sincerely hope our friends at the North who have had better opportunities will make an effort and if need be a sacrifice to attend the convention; and there may be some who cannot attend in person who can nevertheless contribute of their means to help defray expenses of speakers and other expenses incident to a thorough canvass and tract distribution of the city and points within reach. Let me entreat the brethren and sisters to be instant in prayer for the descent of the Holy Spirit upon the convention.

J. P. STODDARD.

AN ODD-FELLOW CHAMPION AND NATURAL-BORN MASONS.

SOME EXPERIENCES OF THE OHIO AGENT.

SHARPSBURG, O., Feb. 2d, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—While waiting for a train to Athens county, I will note a few events of the recent past. During the past nine days I have addressed nine audiences, ranging in attendance from 50 to 200. The best of attention has been given, and much interest awakened. An Odd-fellow, named J. G. Carter, attempted a reply at Mountville. His speech was composed largely of loose, random talk, with seemingly no regard for truth. To illustrate: He stated that no Odd-fellow claimed theirs was a charitable institution; that the candidate was told as soon as he entered it was not a charitable institution. When he had proceeded a little he waxed warm, and, very much excited, he went on denouncing the churches for not being as charitable as their order. "Why," said he, "we paid $142,000 last year in this State for charitable purposes," etc., etc. He stated that "Wm. Morgan, whom the Anti's supposed to be murdered by the Masons, came down to Athens and Amesville lodges and tried to borrow money under false pretences." Having read the Grand Lodge report for this State I knew there were no lodges at either of these places till long after Morgan was murdered. I, of course, called the attention of the audience to the untruthfulness of many of his statements, and he, evidently thinking discretion the better part of valor, did not attempt another reply, but took a back seat.

Much of my time has been spent in and around Chester Hill, a Quaker town some ten miles from Mountville. Here I addressed three United Brethren audiences at churches known as Liberty, Otterbein and Fairview, the latter at the special request of Bro. Jacob Zumbro, who became so interested in the work that he walked some fifteen miles to see trustees and advertize the same.

On Tuesday evening I addressed an audience composed largely of infidels and worldlings in Funk's Hall, Chester Hill. The more I proved that Freemasonry was a Christ-excluding religion, the better it seemed to please them. About two-thirds of the Masons of this place are avowed infidels. The owner of the hall told me he was teaching his children infidelity as fast as they could learn it. Mr. Patterson, the Worshipful Master, endorsed all that I said except my reference to initiation, which he did not deny. He took Mackey as authority and said his religion was deism. In short, they were the most honest set of men controlled by the devil that I have ever met.

As a result of this trip thirteen more families will have the weekly visits of the Cynosure. Some books and tracts have been ordered, and over a thousand have listened to the subject discussed. Financially I have not been as successful as at times. There seems to be a general depression in finances all through this section. But I have a good deal of faith in our Captain, and in the friends interested throughout the State. The command is, "Sow beside all waters for we know not whether this or that will prosper, or whether they will be both alike good." I am sure from the great interest manifested among the United Brethren, and the expressions of some, that it will help them to stand loyal. I go now to Shade, Athens county, and from thence home.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE BLIZZARD IN IOWA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From New Sharon I went to Colfax, in Jasper county. I visited some friends of the reform here, but as a revival meeting was in progress in the M. E. church, I went on to Bethel Chapel. four miles from Baxter. Here I found my old friend, Squire R. B. Dawson, a staunch friend of our reform. The pastor of Bethel Chapel had begun a series of meetings before I arrived. He invited me to preach, and for several successive times I preached Christ and his Gospel, as opposed to the false philosophy of the lodge. The Lord was pleased to bless our efforts. The interest increased, and some began to turn to the Lord.

I asked Squire Dawson who I should call upon to aid the Iowa Association in carrying forward the anti-lodge reform work. He referred me to A. B Altman, who is thoroughly enlisted in the reform, and who is both able and willing to help. Said the Squire, "You tell Bro. Altman that I think we can each give $5 to help on the work." Mr. Altman is not the man to disappoint the confidence his friends repose in him as a generous helper in good works. He accordingly subscribed $5 to be paid in a short time to Squire Dawson, who will remit his own donation and Bro. Altman's to James Harvey, the State treasurer at Pleasant Plain.

I left Bethel just as a storm was beginning to rage, that soon made the railroads impassable. I had become attached to the pastor, who is an earnest friend of our cause. He took me to Baxter. Before we reached there the storm was raging violently. Finding that I could not make my railroad connections as I desired, I concluded to enter a club of three and hire a liveryman to take us fifteen miles to Newton, which I expected to reach in time to take a train for New Sharon. But the storm increased so that we were hindered by having to shovel to get through drifts and by upsetting, so that when I reached the station I found that my train had been gone half an hour. As it would be twenty-four hours before another would go on that road, if they went on time, and there was a prospect of a snow blockade (which really occurred, so that it was five days before another train ran over that road), I went to Grinnell on the Rock Island to connect with the main line of the Iowa Central for New Sharon.

I reached Grinnell at 6 P. M. A train which was past due from the north was said to be four hours late. I waited in the depot until 11 P. M., but no train. At 4 A. M. the train came. I with others went on board. We waited all that day and into the following night before the train got fairly under way, so as to reach New Sharon at 11 P. M.

In this trip to Jasper county I took cold. A severe cough set in so that I was in poor condition for labor. I found a hospitable home with Henry Cope and family, who, in addition to the kindness he showed me, generously subscribed $5 to aid the Iowa Association. I spoke twice in the Friends church on the Sabbath, and spent the following week in visiting, distributing literature and securing subscribers to the Cynosure. Thirteen copies of the paper will come to New Sharon office instead of two, as heretofore. The following Sabbath I went six miles into the country with friend Cobb, and preached to a congregation he had gathered. In the evening I preached again at New Sharon. I continued my visitations for a day or two longer and then took my departure, feeling still that there was more work for me to do at New Sharon, both personal and public.

Rev. Lambert, the pastor of the M. E. church, was holding a series of meetings for the promotion of a revival, for which reason I thought not best to give a lecture on Freemasonry at that time. The severity of my cold and cough also constrained me to do the least possible amount of public speaking. On parting the Friends minister said, "I am glad thee has been with us."

I would suggest to those who have subscribed to the Iowa Association work, and to those who are owing me for the Cynosure, that you remit as fast as you can consistently, to the State treasurer, James Harvey, Pleasant Plain, Jefferson county, Iowa. Those who are back on last year's subscription will confer a great favor by remitting as promptly as possible. The work, dear friends, is an arduous one. Give it a generous and prompt support.

C. F. HAWLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SAVED BY THE TRUTH, NOT BY THE PREACHER.

DADEVILLE, Mo.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The popular churches of our village have within the last few weeks been engaged in a revival effort. During which meetings the Gospel in all its saving power was most fully and clearly set forth. In which some present, notwithstanding their exceptions to the position of said religious bodies on the popular evils of the day, were made to rejoice with joy altogether unspeakable, and full of glory, even. Amen. Now the question may arise in the minds of some, how is it that these "Antis" cannot only join in with these sworn secretists (for, by the way, the two most prominent preachers, and three officials of the church now under consideration, are Freemasons) in religious work, but appear to enjoy the same very much? Have patience, dear readers, and I will try to solve the secret. As for myself, I wish to say, were it not for the twenty-third of Matthew, and possibly other passages to the same effect, I could no more hear a Freemason preach than I could any other character whose relations in life clearly contravene the plain teachings of God's Word.

But for my opposition to the lodge and its nefarious work. In the first place, I predicate my faith upon the testimony of a class of witnesses whose evidence in any other case would no more be called in question than is the emanation of light and heat from the sun. I refer to that class of holy, good men who, sometime in an unguarded hour, became entangled in this great masterpiece of ungodliness in the world, but who, on becoming experimentally acquainted with the institution itself, in view of its inherent wickedness, were compelled, in order to retain their moral integrity, to abandon the whole thing forever. And I do thank God for the "cloud of witnesses" there are on every hand ready to attest to the same thing. But waiving all this array of incontrovertible evidence, letting it all go for the time being, pass to another class of witnesses.

I now refer to their own standard writers—their own learned expositors. And their testimony, though startling it be, is simply that the lodge, i. e, Freemasonry, saves from sin, purifies the heart and qualifies for heaven (the Grand Lodge above). And all this, too, without a Christ. The truth is, this last class of witnesses know not whereof they affirm; otherwise, all devotees of the lodge worship at not only two but at rival altars. Now, what does the eternal God say as touching this point? Simply it is an IMPOSSIBILITY. "Ye cannot serve God" and the lodge, no more than you can "God and mammon." "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils." Ye cannot honor Christ and reject him at the same time.

This being the case, how is it that the labors of such men are blest of God in the salvation of the children of men? "To the law and the testimony." Man is not saved by pinning his faith to any mortal's sleeve—by the character of any instrumentality, whatsoever; but by "repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ." "Christ is the end of the law, for righteousness, to every one that believeth." "By sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." And thus it is from Genesis to Revelation. Whenever and wherever the honest inquirer after salvation hears and complies with the conditions thereof, he is a saved man, entirely independent of the character of the channel through which the truth came to him, or the instrument by which he was directed to the great Fountain of cleansing. And the Apostle carries this solemn truth farther yet, Philippians 1: 15, 16, wherein he says, he gloried in that the Gospel was preached, though done in envy and strife, not sincerely, but for contention's sake, from sinister motives, and yet he rejoiced. Not that he commended the characters, or their course, who did so. Why then? Simply in that the truth was proclaimed abroad, and it would accomplish good—that whereunto it was sent; the salvation of a lost world, irrespective of the character of the instrumentalities employed in bringing about such great and glorious results. Praise the Lord for his unbounded goodness to the children of men. True, this is an awfully serious subject to reflect upon, i. e, the possibility of men offering life and salvation to their fellows, see them receive it—behold them rejoicing in its blessed acquisition, and at the same time their connection with Christless systems, such, that from a Bible standpoint, it is utterly impossible to accord to them what they claim.

Now, while we attempt not to sit in judgment on any man's soul—that is exclusively God's prerogative and not man's—we do propose to "let God be true, but every man a liar." That is, poor fallen man may profess just what he pleases, yet that will not and does not effect anything as long as the life, the acts, of the individual contradict his or her profession. The blessed Jesus seemed to anticipate precisely this difficulty, i. e., how hard it would be to conceive the idea that it were possible that men would assume to be even teachers of righteousness while they are all blackness and darkness within—wolves in sheep's clothing. As evidence of this fact we have only to refer to his ever-memorable sermon on the mount, wherein it is twice recorded, "By their fruits" (or associations) "ye shall know them." Wherefore, since this is the unfortunate state of things in this wicked world of ours, in this age of compromise and sin, the proper and appropriate place of the true reformer is ever to be found where he can not only rejoice at the spread of the truth, but to the extent of his abilities help on the glorious work of bringing back an apostate world to its Maker—God. The twenty-third of Matthew has been referred to as justification of the position vindicated above. "All, therefore, whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works; for they say and do not." Now it is an utter impossibility to do as "they say," without going to hear them. Hence not only the propriety, but even the duty of attending the ministrations of men who fail to walk as they talk. Yet, it is painful to admit the fact that while the truly pious man can and ought to assemble as above indicated, he is grieved to witness the ignoring of the application of the truth to any and all the popular evils of the day. God help, for Jesus's sake! And may a better day and state of things be speedily ushered in, is the ardent prayer of the very unworthy author of the above thoughts and reflections. All, all for Christ's sake. J. W. THOMPSON.

FROM A WESLEYAN PASTOR.

DEAR EDITOR:—You doubtless are aware that I joined the Kansas Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist church on my return from Illinois. This year I was appointed pastor of Little River circuit, and am engaged in the conflict as never before, for the very knowledge that I am a seceded Master Mason seems to turn some away. But God has promised to help me, and there shall be no compromise with the "unfruitful works of darkness." Never before in all my life have I felt more the importance and force of D. L. Moody's utterance: "Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave the churches than their lodges," let them go. "Better one with God than a thousand without him."

To-night I begin another protracted meeting. I have been preaching constantly for about six weeks and have not failed to use the "setting maul" on "Hiram" and "common gavel" on jacks. When I can spare time I am promising myself the satisfaction of writing you a letter respecting the condition of the country as regards reform. Suffice it to say that the dragon teeth are producing a crop. Yours in Christ, G. T. DISSETTE.

LOCAL OPTION IN OHIO.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In my letter dated Dec. 22, 1887, I reported a remark of Dr. Leonard that, with one exception, "in not a single village where local option has been adopted are the saloons closed." Some one signing himself "Prohibition Republican" replies thus: "This refers to Ohio. My knowledge is limited to three villages that have adopted local option, Mount Victory, Hardin Co., O., and Rushsylvania and Belle Center, Logan Co., O., and the reverend correspondent can not find an open saloon in any of the three villages." I wrote Bro. Huston for the facts and here is his reply:

"In reply to your questions I would say that so far as I know Dr. Leonard's statement is true. In regard to our own town we have no licensed saloon inside the corporation, but just outside there is one, and it is well patronized. I am also confident that there are one or two drinking-places in town, but could not prove this. There is one place that receives box after box of "Stomach Bitters." They have a pool table and two men run it. The question is, how do they make a living? Mrs. J. R. Day of Rushsylvania told me several months ago that liquor was sold in their town. Mr. Ferguson told me this morning that Mt. Victory found out that the local option clause of the Dow law did them no good. I believe the Dow law is doing Belle Center some good, as it makes drinking disgraceful and unpopular, but our drunkards have all they want. The Dow law will not decrease the number of drunkards very fast. Respectfully, J. J. HUSTON."

So it seems that Dr. Leonard understood what he was talking about. Our "Prohibition Republican" friend will have to look into the matter more closely. J. M. FOSTER.

A NOBLE ARMY.

SENECAVILLE, O.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been reading your advice in the Cynosure, "Best of all is the noble company" that we are in. You invite all friends of the past to honor themselves by remaining in it. You claim that we can hardly afford to forsake this company. I for one truly feel that way. My name has been on your list from about the first. I had from one to two clubs on that list about all the time. I believe this is the most effectual way to work in this good cause. Although I feel myself to be one of the humble ones I feel proud to be in this company of reformers, and am willing to bear the reproach with my brethren. I feel much encouraged at the stand our leaders have taken against the secret fraternities. This is the time to strike.

At the State Convention at New Concord, Ohio, I felt that I was in grand company with God's people who were laboring to put down the works of darkness. I would like to be with them at the National Convention at New Orleans. My humble prayer is that God will direct his people in that great Convention to his great glory and to the overthrow of the works of the devil. I want to help some in sending the Cynosure to ministers in the South and also getting others to help in this good cause.

JOHN LEEPER.

PITH AND POINT.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIANS AND THE G. A. R,

I am glad that you wrote of the action of the Allegheny Presbytery on the G A. R. I look with alarm upon its advances upon our (U. P.) church.—PROF. J. R. MILLIN, Knoxville College.

OUR SACRIFICE OF PRAISE.

I see that some one in a late number of the Cynosure has complained in regard to our hymns and songs, and in particular to the new ones. I think he is right, for I have for a long time been giving the hymn books of the leading churches a critical examination. Some of the hymns are at least half made up of fables or fiction, and at least two thirds of the hymns have more or less of fiction in them. The fault is in the effort to make the lines rhyme. Now the question is this, can we worship God in spirit and in truth by singing his praise with songs that are a mixture of truth with fables. The Scriptures teach us that a sacrifice must be without "spot or blemish." Let any friend that desires to know for himself make a thorough examination of his hymn book and he will be astonished to find so much fiction in it. I am in favor of striking out everything that is not "the truth." —N. B. BLANTON.

ONE WITH GOD A MAJORITY.

Almost all our ministers in East Boston are Freemasons. I stand here alone apparently on this reform question. I do so wish that Bro. Hinman or some good lecturer could come to this place. There is quite a revival of religion going on in the various churches; but I fear for the younger part of the converts when afterwards they are caught in the man traps of infidelity. Why would it not be well to issue a tract to distribute, especially to the young, to awaken them to this alarming feature of the lodges, to fix in their minds a proper idea of the Christian life, and thereby keep them from the snare of the adversary.

I would be glad to add my testimony in the Cynosure from time to time of my experiences which I often encounter in opposition to secret societies. I believe Satan never invented a more complete system to draw men from Christ than Freemasonry. We have many people here and in other parts who I believe would readily embrace the truth as it is presented in the Scripture, if a leader could come among them and give them an idea of the work now going on by the National Christian Association.—STEPHEN GROVER, East Boston, Mass.

UNITED WORKMEN.

Are the United Workmen to be regarded as an oath-bound secret society?—C. H. ROHE.

The "Ancient Order of United Workmen," so-called, have not yet sent a copy of their obligation to the Cynosure, so we do not know whether they invoke the name of God or not, to help keep their trifling secrets. They probably, however, like Good Templars, Odd-fellows, etc., exact a "sacred pledge," or promise on their "sacred honor," or use some other word referring to Deity, the object being to impress the candidate as solemnly as if an honest oath were taken, but trying to make it appear less objectionable to outsiders.

D. V.

Please answer in the Cynosure what is the definition of the letters D. V. which are sometimes used.—A. G. MANSFIELD.

They are the initial letters for the Latin phrase Deo volente, which means "God willing."

BIBLE LESSONS.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VIII.—Feb. 19.—A Lesson on Forgiveness.—Matt. 18: 21-35.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.—Matt. 6: 12.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

The question of the extent of forgiveness has arisen among the disciples. The Rabbinical law was to pardon a man for three offenses, but not for the fourth. Peter, as usual the spokesman on this occasion, had begun to conceive that there was need for a much wider reach of mercy, one toward another. So he asked the Lord a question, suggesting at the same time an answer by way of inquiry: Will it be a sufficient reach of charity if I pardon my brother twice as often as the Rabbis allow? Even Peter, who recognized his Master as the Son of God, had not yet conceived the measure of grace that was in him, and needed to learn that we should exercise that grace to an extent that never before entered into the heart of man. It is no wonder that, in answer to our Lord's reply, Peter should have said, as recorded by another evangelist, "Lord, increase our faith!"

In further elucidation of this matter, Jesus speaks to them by a parable. We should not attempt to press all parabolic details into service, but to have regard to the great outlines.

1. THE CASE OF A SINNER BEFORE GOD.—The following truths may be mentioned as suggested by this parable: 1. God will and does reckon with all men on account of their sin. We are subjects to whom the King of kings has given in trust great moral responsibilities. He has given us spirit, soul, and body with our being, and appointed us to his service; and any failure on our part to render to him whole-hearted service brings us in defaulters. Some men are greater debtors than others, but all are debtors (Rom. 3: 23), and none may escape the reckoning with God. 2 Human sin is reckoned as an enormous debt before God. "Ten thousand talents;" according to the best reckoning, about ten million dollars. An awful sum for an officer to have embezzled! And yet our sin against God is greater than human comparison could describe. But our Lord designs to illustrate the fullness of God's forgiveness and mercy to man. 3. Every sinner is a bankrupt. "He had not wherewith to pay." Neither have we. We are helpless. No works or righteousness of ours will meet the case (Rom. 3: 20). 4. Every sinner is amenable to the law (verse 25). "The drapery of this parable," says Dr. Morrison, "is borrowed from the customs of olden times. The idea behind the drapery is that the man was exposed to suffer the extreme penalty of the law for his enormous defalcations." But this would be as nothing to the "death eternal," the "banishment from the presence of the Lord," which is the penalty under God's righteous law of moral government. 5. Every sinner has recourse to mercy at the hands of God (Ps. 130: 4; 145: 8). What an unspeakable blessing that God's heart is set on forgiveness rather than punishment. The declaration of the debtor in the parable, "I will pay thee all," has no counterpart in the doctrine of grace. It has in the movement of the human heart, which seeks forgiveness on the plea of a promise to do or be better. 5. Every sinner who comes before God is met with full forgiveness. Jesus Christ is his proclamation of it (Acts 13: 38). It is not commonly understood that God's first and last word to this sinful world is, "I forgive you." Whosoever, therefore, comes to God as did the publican, does not have to bargain with the Lord nor wait for him to consider his case. To forgive is to set a man free from the law and remit his obligation. This is what the Lord did to this servant; this is what he does for us.

2. THE UNMERCIFUL SERVANT.—The whole moral sense rises up in indignation at the subsequent action of this servant (verses 28-30). It is intended to set before our minds the horrible ingratitude and sin on the part of Christians in not forgiving each other. What are the offenses of our brother against us? They are but as the twenty-five dollars to the ten millions. If God has so fully forgiven our sins, we ought to forgive those of our brethren; and even then we shall not approach the measure of forgiveness we have ourselves received. 1. The unforgiving man summoned into the presence of God. The reckoning made with the man for his original defalcation was no more sure to come than the reckoning which God will make with the forgiven sinner who does not forgive. The end of forgiveness is not immunity from sin, but to induce a spirit of forgiveness by bringing us into personal relations with God. We shall be called upon to give account for the abuse of grace, as we were of the breach of law. 2. The unforgiving man is delivered over to the jailor till his debt is paid. His Lord had a right to be "wroth." The question may arise whether there was or not a breach of word on the part of the king in recalling his forgiveness. The end of forgiveness was reconciliation and mercy; the abuse of that grace was a worse sin than that which comprised the original sin, and so it was recalled. He judged himself unworthy of his Lord's gift, and so lost it. (See Matt. 25: 28.) God is not mocked in the administration of his grace. 3. The conclusion of the whole matter (verse 35.) We are not to understand that our forgiveness of our brother is the meritorious ground of God's forgiveness. But the lesson teaches us that abused grace is no grace—that is, to those who seem to have received it. If God's forgiveness does not produce forgiveness in our hearts, it is like the good seed in thorny ground. We are to understand, further, that divine forgiveness may be forfeited. God's gifts and callings are without repentance, but there is nothing in the economy of grace that prevents a man from flinging away the gift of God. "Counting the blood of the covenant an unclean thing, trampling under foot the Son of God, and doing despite to the spirit of grace." Well may we close our lesson with the prayer already alluded to—"Lord, increase our faith!"—Words and Weapons.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

Gerrit Smith, in an address, 1870:—Masonry murdered Morgan. If it could not conceal his murderers, it nevertheless protected them. It overrode the laws of the land and ruled the courts and the ballot-boxes. Moreover, it is capable of repeating the crimes. Why then should we not dread secret societies, and do what we can to bring them to an end?

William Wirt: "If this be Masonry, as according to uncontradicted evidence it seems to be, I have no hesitation in saying that I consider it at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man, that ought to be put down.

Joseph Ritner, governor of Pennsylvania, 1837:—"If it be true as the lamented Colden (himself one of the initiated) declared that many a Mason became a great man but no great man ever became a Mason, how nearly does it concern the youth of our country to pause and reflect before they commit their present standing and future reputation to the keeping of a society, which for its cold-hearted and selfish purposes could immolate even the fame of Washington at the shrine of its abominations."

Lewis Tappan, private journal, 1814:—"Dr. Dixwell gave me lectures on Masonry at his house." "In September left the lodge." Letter, Jan. 21, 1829:—"I am free to say that I henceforth renounce Freemasonry, considering it a useless and profane institution."

George Washington, to friends in 1794, quoted by Myron Holley:—"The real people occasionally assembled in order to express their sentiments on political sentiments, ought never to be confounded with permanent, self-appointed societies, usurping the right to control constituted authorities, and to dictate to public opinion. While the former was entitled to respect, the latter was incompatible with all government, and must either sink into general dis-esteem, or finally overturn the established order of things."

Horace Greeley:—Many persons were brought to trial on account of the murder of Morgan, but no one was judicially found guilty of murder. It was established by seceding Masons that the oaths—at least in some of the highest degrees—that were administered, and taken by those admitted to Masonic lodges, disqualified them from serving as jurors in any case where a brother Mason of like degree was a party, and his antagonist was not.

Charles Francis Adams: "A more perfect agent for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived."

Thaddeus Stevens: "By Freemasonry, trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

Judge Pliny Merrick (a seceded Mason).—If ever a Chapter or a lodge shall establish laws in conflict with those of the state the Masonic requisition is obedience to the lodge and conflict with the state; and if a member hesitates at this humiliating obedience, his heart must be "torn from his bosom," his "vitals plucked from his body," and Masonic vengeance, not satisfied with this bloody immolation, denies a resting place to the motionless remains, but they are to be "burnt to ashes and scattered to the winds."

Samuel C. Pomeroy, in an address, 1883:—"There may be a broad distinction between the good and the bad in secret societies, but as they all alike have oath bound obligations to complete oblivion of all they do or say, I have no means of judging the good from the bad. So I turn away from them all to the great Teacher who said, "In secret have I said nothing."

Judge Daniel H. Whitney, (renouncing Mason): While professed ministers of the Gospel and members of churches are permitted to associate themselves with these organizations, the task to apply a remedy will be a hopeless one; and just so long will the declaration made to me not long since by a high Mason and a worthy man prove true, that "a Masonic lodge is the strangest medley of priests and murderers—deacons and whoremasters—church members and gamblers—decent men and loafers—drunkards and rowdies, that the All Seeing-Eye ever looked down upon."

Hon. Samuel Dexter, in an open letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

William H. Seward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow-men."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

Daniel Webster: "All secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government. Under the influence of this conviction I heartily approved the law, lately enacted in the State of which I am a citizen, for abolishing all such oaths and obligations."

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1888

THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION FEBRUARY 17 TO 20, 1888.

THE THOUSAND COLORED PASTORS.

SHALL THEY HAVE THEIR PAPER?

Week by week generous friends of the colored race answer, YES. The fund for this purpose reaches $656.-06, as reported on page 13, and cheering letters show the enthusiasm in this enterprise of all who realize the nature of secretism. Every letter from the South justifies our efforts, and approves the judgment that no expenditure of an equal sum will bring so great returns.

The $900 contributed for this purpose in the two years and a half after June, 1885, placed the Cynosure in the hands of huudreds of colored pastors, but few of whom could have paid for it themselves. Note the grand results which have followed, chiefly because of this work:

1. The Louisiana Baptist State Convention, representing 70,000 church members, has voted against the lodge.

2. The Texas Baptists will probably take the same stand at their next meeting.

3. The Methodist Episcopal church in Texas is nearly ready for like action.

4. So are the Arkansas Baptists, a prominent Association having already so voted.

5. The same churches in western Tennessee are coming out against secretism.

6. So in Alabama the Good-will Association is standing against the orders.

7. The Congregational churches all through the South are opposing the lodge, encouraged by the American Missionary Association.

8. Two schools for higher instruction have been organized within a year which maintain this principle, while nearly every institution for the education of the Negro is open for instruction of the students on the dangers of the lodge.

9. Christians at the North should hasten this work with all zeal, because the reflex influence upon their churches will soon be powerfully felt.

The Cynosure has proved the best agency in accomplishing this work in the South. A fund to send a thousand copies to as many colored pastors is being raised. Dear reader, has not the Lord given you means to help it on?

CASTE IN CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

The Presbytery of Cincinnati has adopted the following by a nearly unanimous vote:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this Presbytery, the General Assembly, which is over all sessions, presbyteries and synods, and where all are represented, should have the liberty, on petition of a sufficient number on the ground, to organize or continue presbyteries or synods on the same territory of colored or white churches, with their pastors and such other ministers as are laboring with or for them or might be received by them."

The Presbyterian "Book" is explicit that the Bible and the Bible alone is the only rule of faith and life—church faith and church life as well as individual. But it would be difficult to find any passage of Scripture on which the above resolution is founded, or, indeed, on which the General Assembly itself is founded. In 1837 we heard Robert J. Breckenridge say, "Nobody pretends there is any Divine warrant in the Bible for this General Assembly."

But the Bible forbids caste and schism. In Christ Jesus there is neither "Greek nor Jew, bond nor free:" and "Mark them that cause divisions." In Asia the chief obstruction to Christianity is caste; in America, sect. Both are decidedly forbidden.

In a district where there is ample room for two churches or two presbyteries it would seem that no General Assembly has ecclesiastical jurisdiction over any portion of United States territory to prohibit or permit Chrisitans to unite in church work according to their convenience or taste. But caste based on color is of all kinds most unreasonable and sinful.

While slavery existed the most delicate white ladies would employ the darkest Negro drivers and sit beside them if room was wanted in the carriage, and no one thought there was anything amiss. Black nurses suckled white children, and colored cooks were the rule in the slave States. But when we claimed that a man whose skin was black had any right to be free, it was amusing and amazing how horrified people, North and South, but especially at the North, were at the thought of white and colored people meeting and associating together. As long as the black man had a five dollar bill left, the first-class gambling houses in our cities treated him like a gentleman; but when he went into our churches, as one of them said, "The nearer heaven I get, the more of hell I am made to feel."

This caste feeling does not depend on color. During the slavery agitation we found persons who had grown up in slavery who were Irish, Spanish, and Dutch children with no drop of negro blood in their veins. They had been turned into the slave quarter and treated as property, and their owners knew, but cared nothing for their descent till the Abolitionists objected. John Bunyan was despised as a "tinker" till his popularity as a writer and preacher placed him high above those who had despised him. In Asia people of low caste are colored like the upper castes, yet this same aversion to associate together prevails, for all kinds of association but that of vice. Moses had an Ethiopian wife; and if one begins at Washington and travels south to Cape Horn, he will meet more persons whose lineage he cannot tell by their complexion than those whom he can. It would seem, therefore, sound wisdom as well as sound principle, for Christians to follow and keep close to the Word of God. Any attempt to keep up a distinction of races in the church of Christ is not only expressly against the instruction given by Paul, but also against the atonement itself, which saves men by the same blood. Let every such effort be left to the lodge, as John B. Finch united the Good Templars at Saratoga a year ago by establishing white caste Grand Lodges; and attempted to sanctify the deed with a lodge love-feast.

IN PRISON FOR THE TESTIMONY OF JESUS.

The aged and beloved John, from his banishment in bleak Patmos, has sent, in the Book of Revelation, many messages of comfort to the faithful witness of Boston, our dear brother William F. Davis, now in Charles Street jail for the "testimony of Jesus" on Boston Common. No less cheering to him, perhaps, was the meeting of the Evangelical Ministers' Association in Tremont Temple building on the 9th of January, which is said to have been one of the longest and most interesting in the history of that body. The subject before the Association was the report of a committee of seven pastors and lawyers, headed by pastors A. J. Gordon and A. H. Plumb, appointed last November to report on free preaching of the Gospel in the public places of Boston and especially in the case of Rev. William F. Davis, then in Suffolk jail for obedience to God and conscience in this matter, rather than to the wicked men who made or administered the laws of the city. The report is most exhaustive and able, and would occupy seven or eight columns of the Cynosure. It covers a most interesting part of the religious history of Boston, showing how the Common has from the earliest times been free for public preaching, and some of the most revered Christian evangelists, like Whitefield, have proclaimed Christ to the multitudes in that spot. The history of the present case and the laws under which Bro. Davis is held are stated, and the situation at the present time reviewed. "What can be done?" asks the report: (1) do nothing; (2) take a half-way course that will leave the matter unsettled and open for future trouble; or (3) agitate for a repeal of the law and secure a decision of the Supreme Court which shall settle the question, as the committee and Association seemed to believe confidently, in favor of freedom and righteousness.

We find this long and able report, as interesting for its historical statements as for the great principle it defends, in the Morning Star of the 19th ult., which says editorially that the approval of the report was practically unanimous, and resolutions were adopted appointing a strong committee to ask of the authorities a repeal of the offensive ordinances, and also to secure the release, if possible, of Bro. Davis.

This whole case is of interest to every reader of the Cynosure, not only for its relation to the principles of Gospel liberty which we hold to be the steadfast foundations of our Republic, but because the men most prominent in the matter are with us on reform questions. Bro. Davis is an able volunteer lecturer against the lodge, and in Boston has assailed the orders in the public press. H. L. Hastings is the author of some of the most widely circulated and popular of our tracts. Joseph Cook and Dr. Gordon approved the Congress of Churches last spring, and the former never fails of a good testimony when asked. In this meeting of ministers Dr. A. H. Quint appeared and seemed to be the only man or Mason who raised a voice of objection. He was very effectually answered by Mr. Pickering, a lawyer, who had been at first in favor of the city ordinance. Mr. Cook, says the Star, referred to the imprisonment of Mr. Davis, and declared that all Christian preachers were virtually in jail with him. He also said that in this local contest is involved a great national right, and it should be carried to the national courts for decision. It is becoming a question whether evangelical Christians in this country are going to be ruled by rum, Romanism and red tape. He quoted Austin Phelps as saying that the grip of the Jesuit could be felt under the velvet of the policeman's glove. Cities under the rule of Catholic and rum—controlled city governments, have very little open air Christian preaching. The right of free speech should not be abridged by any such government.

We cannot forbear to quote also the following just and noble encomium given by Mr. Cook in the great mass meeting in Bowdoin Square Tabernacle last November:

"Last summer, Mr. Chairman, it was my fortune to see a Boston jail bird in the presence of the representatives of ninety one colleges at Northfield, and to hear the young men from all quarters of the land cheer him to the echo in a house packed to the doors. Mr H L Hastings, once incarcerated for preaching on the Common, was that jail-bird. If he be in this audience, I pray that a light from the sun behind the sun may burst upon his soul's soul, while we bless him for his heroism in resisting an unjust ordinance. (Long applause.) I say precisely the same of that other martyr of this ordinance, who has lately been sent to jail for action intended to secure agitation and to bring this matter to a test Mr. Davis was my college mate. I have known him for more than twenty years. Very tender associations connect themselves with our common experiences in college. He was then what he is now, a man of supreme conscientiousness, great courage, and most incisive straightforwardness.... I knew him later in the theological hall. I knew him when he took his life in his hands and went into the North End of this city to work for the poor. He lived in the misson house among the livery stables, breathing their foul air and the miasma of the drains I have traveled constantly, and I know Mr. Davis's reputation in the West as the lumbermen's missionary in those vast forests in Northern Michigan, preaching the Gospel to those whom the churches in the West neglect. Some of the noblest souls on earth are in those lumber camps. I know more than one wealthy man in the West who has contributed to his mission work there largely. You say he is not quite discreet or he would not run squarely against the city ordinance. Perhaps he is further-sighted than some of us. Perhaps he is more courageous! (Applause.) I know his wife, and if there is a braver man than Mr. Davis it is Mrs. Davis. (Applause). I do not know that any who are dear to Mr. Davis are here, but I cannot repress this tribute to a most excellent authoress, whose books are well known to the Baptist denomination and far outside of it. Now this man is throttled by the city government, and thrust into jail and trampled on by a clique at the City Hall, for opposing an ordinance, denying what we have always thought to be our rights under both our State and our national constitution."

FASTING AND PRAYER.—Let all whom the Lord moves by his Spirit to fast and pray for the New Orleans meeting observe, if possible, either the 10th or 17th inst., or both, and unite in calling down a blessing upon that meeting.

THE N. C. A. FOREIGN WORK.—In this we are cheered by a letter just received from Bombay, in which the brother, who will be our correspondent in India, and who is distributing tracts and pamphlets widely in that Empire, expresses great encouragement at the responses of friends in America to his appeals.

—The brief comments from our exchanges in this number are worth a special reading, not alone for their intrinsic value, but because they are from unwonted sources. The endorsement of the Conservator must cheer the brethren who stand for a Christian testimony and discipline in the United Brethren church; while Miss West's judicious yet earnest protest against the Knights of Labor must check the assurance of some members of this order, who presume to thrust their offensive lodge in the face of Prohibitionists at every opportunity. It is safe to say that Miss Willard will send no more requests to her co-workers to join this order to help on a Christian work; if otherwise, such an appeal to the Word of God as the national organ of the Y. M. C. Association has made should make an end of them.

—Bro. Fenton has issued another number of the Christian Liberator from St. Paul. Many thanks for his kind words on the Cynosure. The Liberator is vehement and courageous against the lodge worships. A Baptist conference opposed to secretism is suggested by one of his correspondents.

—The Wesleyan and College churches of Wheaton united in the evening service last Sabbath to listen to a Bible reading by Pres. J. Blanchard which had been requested by some two score citi, zens. Though in much weakness he gave an address of unusual power to most attentive and earnest hearers, whose prayers will follow his journey and be "instant" for the New Orleans meeting.

—The College Church, Wheaton, appointed five delegates to the New Orleans Convention on the Sabbath, all of whom we hope will attend. The names are Pres. and Mrs. J. Blanchard, Rev. A. J. Chittenden, pastor of the church, Dr. A. H. Hiatt, and Mrs. J. P. Stoddard.

—Word from Bro. Hinman, Monday morning, tells us that Secretary Stoddard has succumbed to the malarial influence of New Orleans and is sick with a neuralgic attack. We hope it will be but temporary,and that none will be deterred from attending the Convention for fear of a like experience. Bro. Chittenden's case is the rule. All are to go by that and be benefited in body and spirit.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold is one of the "livest" of Yankees. While giving his illustrated lectures he has conceived the idea of publishing a pamphlet giving a brief story of the principal gods worshiped among ancient heathen, showing their relation to the central pagan system of sun worship, and following the subject carefully until the reader finds himself all at once in the Masonic lodge. The copy is in the hands of the printers, and we hope to see the pamphlet in the hands of thousands of readers in a few weeks.

—Howe Institute of New Iberia, Louisiana, was generously remembered last Sabbath. Rev. Byron Gunner, president of its Board of Trustees, preached for the College church, Wheaton, and received a collection of $55 27 in addition to some $20 or more paid last year. In the evening he addressed the Congregational church at Prospect Park, near by, of which Prof. H. A. Fischer of the N. C. A. Board is pastor. The church is a small one, but it has "grit and grace." In a few minutes the noble sum of $55.54 was raised, and all went home singing the Doxology.

—The Christian Weekly of Mobile, the leading paper of the colored people of that city and numbering five thousand readers among them, gives a faithful testimony against the lodges in a late number. "We have in Mobile," the editor says, "nearly one hundred societies, and, strange to say, not one of them is doing anything for the help of the race as they should. Some of them own very nice halls, and charge big rents for balls, festivals, etc., or for worship. This is as far as they go. Such powerful organizations as Love and Charity, Good Samaritan, Odd-fellows, Knights of Tabor and Knights of Labor might do great good by beginning some kind of enterprise—a grocery store, shoe store, or dry goods store could be set up by one of these organizations, or by all of them jointly, and a thriving business done. Up to this time these societies have been simply burying their money. They pay more for funerals than for anything else except excursions. More money ought to be given to the sick and less to the dead, and perhaps there would be fewer to bury. It is hoped that some of the leaders of these societies will wheel them into the right channel and begin to do something for the good of the race. Mobile, as far as colored enterprises are concerned, is far behind any other city of its size in the United States. Let us be up and doing."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—The editor of the Cynosure and Mrs. Blanchard expected, as we went to press, to start for New Orleans Tuesday evening. His health has been quite infirm for several weeks, and it is hoped the Southern visit will be beneficial.

—Samuel W. Small, the revivalist,is about to return to his early profession, journalism. He will soon start a prohibition paper in Washington, and will match his wit and wisdom against the National organ of the liquor dealers.

—Rev. N. Wardner, editor of the Wesleyan Methodist, may attend the National Convention at New Orleans. He tells his readers that he is going South for a short visit and will make his journey as far as Lake Charles, La., some 200 miles west of New Orleans.

—We regret much to learn of the sickness of Mrs. Hodgman of Princeton, Ill., one of the "honorable women," of whom there are some in that town who are ready to follow Christ and minister to him even at the cross. She has been six weeks prostrated by severe illness, but is now recovering.

—While pastor Chittenden is rapidly recovering his usual health in the warm Gulf breezes, Secretary Stoddard and his wife do not find them so congenial. Both were more or less indisposed last week on account of the heat, to them unusual and unseasonable. They express a hearty desire to come North when their work is done in New Orleans.

—Bro. Hawley wrestled bravely with drifts and blizzards week before last. Though finally victor over old Winter, the ice King left a severe cold and cough to keep Bro. H. in a humble spirit. He writes of his desire to attend the National Convention, but as the Lord does not favor the trip, his prayers will be given for a blessing on the meeting.

—Blizzards and zero weather were not too severe to keep Rev. Byron Gunner of New Iberia, Louisiana, in his Southern home. He reached Chicago Saturday morning to assist in raising a fund for a dormitory for Howe Institute. This is his first visit North, and our dull, gray weather does not give a favorable impression of our climate. We hope his success in his particular mission will not take its complexion from our skies.

—Bro. Harry Agnew, who went from Minnesota to undertake a faith mission work with Rev. W. W. Kelley at Inhambane, East Africa, is to be joined by a band of six who start about March 1st from this country. They are Rev. J. D. Bennett and wife of Kansas; A. Y. Lincoln and wife of Kimball, Mich., Miss F. Grace Allen of Kansas and Miss Ida Heffner of Nebraska. They go out under the care of the Free Methodist Foreign Mission committee, and during this month are visiting the churches from Kansas to New York.

—Elder Boring, an aged and prominent M. E. minister, now retired, said in a late meeting of the ministers of that denomination that he did not like the creed of the Evangelical Alliance "because it excluded Universalists." Elder Boring, it will be remembered, is the Freemason who preached the funeral sermon of an old Christian who left the M. E. church in Wheaton because of his opposition to the lodge, and over the coffin Elder B. belied the convictions of the mute dead, and misrepresented them grossly. Such a condemnation of the Alliance might be expected from such a source. Another voice raised to denounce was that of C. G. Truesdell, a Freemason and presiding elder.

PRESS COMMENT.

But good is being done. In one strong Mormon town an evangelist held a series of special meetings, and as a result twenty-three persons united with the Presbyterian church with which he was working Going to another place even greater numbers were hopefully converted. The Christian work is taking hold in Utah. If Congress does not give Statehood to this people, there is great hope that Christian influences will work great changes some time.—Rev. A. J. Bailey, in the American.

Only the other day we were in the home of one whose husband had passed from this life into the life beyond. For years he had been a member of a certain lodge. He thought he was providing for his wife and children. After his death it was found that one assessment, or rather his last dues, amounting to two dollars and twenty cents, was not paid. About eight or nine hundred dollars were in this way kept from the widow and her fatherless children. Charity! Charity!! Charity would have paid the $2 20 and provided for the widows and orphans. Go on, Christian Conservator, in your opposition to the lodge. Give us all the light you can. God declares there shall nothing be hid that shall not come to the light. In this day of organitions Christian men and women must know with whom they "yoke" and fellowship. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."—Highway of Holiness.

Another peril "among false brethren" which besets the churches of to-day is the membership of professed Christians in the anti-Christ secret lodges which pall the land, and shade the very heavens with their darkness. It is a source of cheer that some Christian churches have come to incorporate in the constitutional law of the church non-fellowship with these demon works of corruption. One of the imminent perils of such reformatory churches is the tendency of some to a weakness of moral principle, which does not scruple to let themselves down to the level of anti-Gospel brotherhood of tyled and curtained seclusive worldliness, and to the defense of those who, in defiance of church discipline, enter into such intrinsically ungospel and unchristian associations. Since the Gospel of Jesus Christ neither teaches nor tolerates secret societies, the church of Jesus Christ should neither teach nor tolerate secret societies, and, in fact, the church cannot enter into such forbidden fellowships without forfeiting her claim to legitimate relation to Christ as the embodiment and exponent of the pure truths and principles of Christ's holy Gospel.—Wesleyan Methodist.

We honor the noble men and women connected with the Knights, Mr. Powderly, Mrs. Bryant, Mrs. Rodgers, and many others, and bid them Godspeed in their grand work for humanity. But we cannot help realizing that they are so far in advance of the order they cannot be taken as its representatives. Mrs Rodgers, confessedly the ablest "Master Workman" her assembly ever had, was voted down and out by its socialistic element. Only last Sunday, when as representing the Woman's Assembly, she attended the semi-annual meeting of the Trades Assembly, and protested against the turbulent action of the socialist majority, she was insulted, after the manner of communistic mobs. "Are you politicians or are you men?" she indignantly asked. They showed themselves to be the lowest kind of saloon-trained politicians by the tyrannous use they made of their majority power. Treatment differing in degree, not in kind, is sapping the very life force of their grand leader, Powderly. Do not these things prove that we cannot accord to the organization the honor our hearts gladly pay to some of its leaders? In the East it seems to have made itself particeps criminis with the coal barons, in causing suffering around every poor man's hearth—the barons being principals in the crime by advancing the price of coal, while refusing to advance the pay for mining it, the Knights becoming accessory by ordering 65,000 men on a strike in the dead of winter. These things ought not so to be, and being so makes us pause before indorsing the claims of the organization to being the friend of humanity. That these things are so leads to the writing of the many letters we have received against the organization or against its indorsement by the W. C. T. U.—Union Signal.

A short time since the Watchman, representing the Y. M. C. A. Associations, answered a questioner on the matter of secret societies so tenderly that we felt that the cause of Christ would be injured by it. But in another answer in the last number Bro. Van Arsdale wields the sword of the Spirit with a good courage, thus:

"Will connection with a secret society interfere with Christian work?".

Many a good Christian belongs to a secret society; many a better and happier Christian does not. The majority of men in secret societies are unsaved. "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" Amos 3: 3. How do we read?

"The friendship of the world is enmity with God." James 4: 4.

"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." 2 Cor. 6: 14–18.

Mr. Moody says: "This idea of yoking oneself up in that way with ungodly men is abominable."

One great reason urged in favor of secret societies is the help derived for the member and his family in case of sickness or death. Shall the Christian join the world to get protection for himself and family? Again, what says the Word? "Woe to them that go down to Egypt for help." Isa. 31: 1–3. "No good thing will be withheld from them that walk uprightly." Psa. 84: 11. "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. 6: 33.

From personal experience and wide observation the writer unhesitatingly declares that membership in any secret society is injurious to the highest spirituality, and thus to the greatest usefulness of the Christian worker. "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." Col. 3: 17. "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth....for whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Rom. 14: 22, 23.

—A dispatch from Louisville to the Inter-Ocean says that the evangelist Moody has decided to continue his meetings there till Feb 12. Feb. 13 Mr. Moody will leave for Iowa, accompanied by Mr. Sankey, and join the well-known evangelist, Whittle, who has been at work there some time. Later Moody will probably go to the Pacific coast. The tabernacle, which seats 5,000 people, has been crowded every afternoon and night for three weeks. Mr. Moody had addressed, up to that date, at least 20,000 people. Since Sankey's coming hundreds have been turned away every night and overflow meetings have been held.

—The Armenian communists in Turkey are having difficulties with the Sultan, as well as the Protestant Americans. In consequence of the obstacles put in his way the Armenian Patriarch, Mgr. Vehabedian, has resigned, and persists in having his resignation accepted. He has held the office three years.

—Rev. Edward F. Miles, pastor of the Church of the Reformation at New York, who disappeared last December, has written that he is in a Memphis hospital, suffering from nervous prostration.

THE HOME.

THE STARS ARE IN THE SKY ALL DAY.

The stars are in the sky all day,
Each linked coil of Milky Way,
And every planet that we know
Behind the sun is circling slow;
They sweep, they climb with stately tread,
Venus the fair and Mars the red,
Saturn engirdled with pure light,
Or Jupiter with moons of white.
Each knows his path and keeps due tryst;
Not even the smallest star is missed
From those wide fields of deeper sky
Which gleam and flash mysteriously,
As if God's outstretched finger must
Have sown them thick with diamond dust;
There are they all day long, but we,
Sun-blinded, have no eyes to see.

The stars are in the sky all day:
But when the sun has gone away,
And hovering shadows cool the west
And call the sleepy birds to rest,
And heaven grows softly dim and dun,
Into its darkness, one by one,
Steal forth those starry shapes all fair—
We say steal forth, but they were there!
There all day long, unseen, unguessed,
Climbing the sky from east to west.
The angels saw them where they hid,
And so, perhaps, the eagles did,
For they can face the sharp sun-ray,
Nor wink, nor need to look away;
But we, blind mortals, gazed from far,
And did not see a single star.

I wonder if the world is full
Of other secrets beautiful,
As little guessed, as hard to see,
As this sweet starry mystery!
Do angels veil themselves in space,
And make the sun their hiding place?
Do white wings flash as spirits go
On heavenly errands to and fro,
While we, down-looking, never guess
How near our lives they crowd and pass?
If so, at life's set we may see
Into the dusk steal noiselessly
Sweet faces that we used to know,
Dear eyes that like stars softly glow,
Dear hands stretched out to point the way—
And deem the night more fair than day.

BIBLE EVIDENCES.

External proofs, however irrefragable, cannot be always available. They imply education and reading, or the instruction of others; something outside the Bible itself, and not open to all. Historical facts, questions of argument and probability, discussions more or less abstract, are beyond many, and, where within reach, may be unsatisfactorily put, or may fail from the very idiosyncrasies of the enquirer. Wm. Pitt used to say, even of Butler's Analogy, that it raised more doubts in his mind than it settled; and there is a tendency in us all to think that what takes much defending is far towards indefensible. To find a sufficient evidence inside the Bible is, then, the great point: something within every one's mental grasp, requiring no scholarship, appealing to our own consciousness rather than to external facts; speaking the universal language of our moral instincts. The lonely settler, far off in the wilderness, has no means of knowing how prophecy has been fulfilled, or how Christianity made its way at first. The sailor, far off on the ocean, opens his chest at some rare moment of leisure, for the Bible his mother put in it, and reads that he who believes will be saved, but he who does not, will be condemned. On what ground can belief be asked? Either on none, or on some which he will find as he reads. If outside proof be indispensable, the Bible must be imperfect, and, instead of being supreme, must hold its authority from that by which its claims are established. A Bible, in that case, sent out by itself, would be simply a warrant without a signature, a commission without the seal. But there is no hint of such a state of things in the Scripture. It makes no allowance for ignorance; suggests no exceptional cases; but demands acceptance on its own merits. Not a word is said of supplementary proof to induce belief; it claims to carry the grounds of conviction with it. Its whole tone and language waive off any officious support. External proofs, it, as it were, says, "are well in their place—lamps to guide to my gates; but, even without them, light fills my temple, and streams out into the darkness, for truth shines with a heavenly brightness, and the Bible is her peculiar shrine." Scripture, in short, must be its own proof. To have to go outside for its warrant would be fatal.

In what does this inherent, universally patent evidence consist? Universally patent, that is, to the mind open to hear, for deafness must blame itself, not the summons that suffices for others. It must be something in the Bible that has its corroboration in our own consciousness, and, as such, can be nothing but the support of our moral sense and natural instincts. To feel a thing true is a higher security than any labored argument; it endorses it with the assent of our inmost being. If, then, there be in man an echo of Christian truth, catching up its doctrines and counsels, and whispering them back as its own voice, there needs no more, for either peasant or prince. To have our own nature bear witness is as if God himself had spoken, for the instincts within us are of his creation. The truth written on the heart had the finger of the Almighty to trace it, as much as the tables on Sinai.

It was a favorite argument of the Fathers, when disputing with heathenism, that there was just such a concurrence between the breast and the Book. They used to speak of the testimony of the soul, naturally Christian, urging that our religion was no new invention, but only the expression of the long pent up, inarticulate voice of humanity. They were right. The chimes lie slumbering in the bell till the stroke awakes them; and what is harsh clangor at hand comes back from distant echoes in sweet music. Christianity is the tongue that gives our wishes fitting voice; the soft return, in articulate clearness, from the eternal hills, of the wail of cries and prayers that rises, bewildering, round us.

The Bible doctrine of God is, I think, sufficient of itself to prove a divine source for the documents that embody it. Compared with either Pantheism or heathenism, Jehovah alone meets the cravings of the human heart as to its God. The religions of the East have presented both in their most elaborate completeness, but neither satisfies the instinctive ideal of the breast. To confound the creature and the Creator, and deify nature by transfusing the Divinity inextricably through the vast fabric of the universe, turns him into mere force and motion, impossible to realize as intelligence, or as in any sense a personal object of worship. Still more: it is, in fact, a deification of man himself as supremely divine; for if the living power astir through all things be God, then man shows most of it, by adding to mere vital energy the higher province of thought and will. The highest manifestation of God is thus human thought—and man is his own deity. This is Hegelianism and modern German Pantheism generally; the creed which Emerson openly preaches, and which, I fear, Carlyle, noble, true-hearted and grand as he is, endorses. You have it in part in the words of Vishnu, a member of the Hindoo Triad: "The whole world is but a manifestation of Vishnu, who is identical with all things, and is to be regarded by the wise, as not differing from, but as the same as themselves." Emerson puts it,—"I am nothing, I see all; the currents of the Universal Being circulate through me; I am part and parcel of God." Hegel's formula is—"Being and thought are the same;" and thus God is a process continually going on, but never accomplished; our thought and God are identical—and man is the highest manifestation of God. A doctrine of the Divinity which ends in finding no better God than man is a poor result of so much philosophy. To leap at the stars, and fasten in the mud, in such a way, does not commend itself.

Contrast this with the Scripture doctrine, and the infinite difference is apparent. Take any part, there is still the same All-wise, All-powerful intelligence; no mere electric or magnetic current pervading all things, but a Being endowed with moral qualities, of which our own nature is a faint, because injured, copy. There is no confounding him with his works for a moment. Drawn in simple metaphors in the earlier books, as was natural in the childhood of the race, there are still the same grand lines in the sublime ideal: the God of Abraham is the God of the New Testament: the same purity, justice, controlling authority and tender Fatherhood, show in the one as in the other. The mighty, keystone truth of the unity of the Godhead, that God is not only one, but the Living God, is a gift from Abraham, through the Bible, to the race.—From Entering on Life, by Dr. Geikie.

Harper's Bazaar has the following on the "Mind Cure." "It appears to us a hopeful sign of a more wholesome life that large classes of women take time and spend money to hear this theory of the reality of a spiritual existence expounded. After the poet, they are discovering that 'soul is form, and doth the body make.' They are semi-invalids. They have suffered. They have allowed their thoughts to dwell upon their pains and limitations, until these have come largely to fill their mental horizon. Their talk is of sickness. Even young girls, among the well-to-do and idle classes, compare symptoms and suggest diagnoses as staple topics of conversation. Nothing could be worse, it seems to us, on the score of good taste or of good health. As dwelling upon one's griefs magnifies them, so dwelling upon one's pains magnifies them. If the mind cure can be made to work upon these morbid subjects, it must restore to activity, energies worse than wasted; it would save time and money; it would make a grave world into a joyous one; it would multiply past calculations the sum of human happiness."

PRESENCE OF MIND.

Boys and girls, have you presence of mind? Perhaps you think you have. Many of us think we have, too. But, after all, it is not what you and I think we would do if our house should take fire, or our boat begin to sink, or a highwayman confront us, or an earthquake yawn beneath us; it is rather what we actually do when we are in the thick of such peril that determines our presence of mind. There are no persons so remarkably level-headed as those who are free and easy, out of the reach of danger.

The other day I heard a story of unusual presence of mind. It was told me by one who had himself received it from an officer of one of the great railroads that cross the Allegheny Mountains.

"There," said the officer to my informant, as both were going about a great, central station, where cars and locomotives were made, repaired and kept, "there is the very man. If he wants any favor of the road he has only to ask for it. The rest of us come and go; but he stays, and may stay, service or no service, till death removes him. The road is grateful to him and will always hold him in honor."

Many years have elapsed since the incident happened; many more since the telling of the tale to my friend. The details and the coloring vary somewhat as they pass from mouth to mouth. No doubt, when you have finished the story, you will say, "Why, that was the very thing I would have done myself." But would you have done it? Here is the story:

Puff! puff! puff! It was hard work, for the grade was steep and the train long and heavy. The engine panted as if its strength were failing. And no wonder! For miles and miles up the slopes of the Allegheny Mountains it had been tugging its precious burden, and there were many miles more before it should reach the summit and tarry awhile to regain its strength.

Much of the way was little more than a shelf cut into the mountain sides, with rising walls of rock on the one hand and deep ravines on the other. And far up among the mountains, often on the opposite sides of huge and gloomy chasms, the observant traveler would catch glimpses of what seemed to be the curves and embankments of another road. Later he would be himself borne over these very curves.

These changing scenes kept the passenger in a tremor of half-joyful, half-anxious excitement.

"How beautiful that wooded slope!"

"Shall we ever get to the top of the ridge?"

"Down here among the trees! See this silvery cascade!"

"Ah, here we go through a tunnel!"

"That great bowlder looks as if the slightest jar would bring it down upon us!"

"What if the roadbed should give way here like an avalanche!"

"Oh, here comes some trestle-work! How frail it looks! And what a dizzy height! If it should break under us—oh, dear!"

Just then a quick, sharp whistle was heard. To those that understood it, it said imperatively: "Down brakes, and be quick about it, too!" Instantly the brakemen were straining at their posts as if every life were threatened. Indeed, it was their duty, on these hard, treacherous grades, to stand by the brakes and use them at a moment's warning. People thrust their heads out of the car windows, and some hurried to the platforms, and there was a deal of nervous questioning. What was the matter? Had an accident happened? Was there any danger? Nobody seemed to know. Not even the brakemen were informed. And it was the gift of a blessed Providence that the cause was not revealed, else that moment of uncertainty and subdued alarm would have been one of anguish and disaster.

Far up the road the engineer had caught a glimpse of an awful peril. It was a train of runaway freight cars. For a moment it was in plain sight dashing around a curve; then it was lost in the woods. No engine accompanied it; there was no sign of life anywhere about it. Nowhere on the grade at that time was a down train due. The cars were without control; there was no doubt about it, and there was nothing to check their descent. Already they were running furiously, and every second their speed was increasing. A collision seemed inevitable. The destruction of life would be frightful.

What should the engineer do? To stop his train would not mend the situation. To reverse the engine and go the other way—there was hardly time for that. Besides, it would only postpone the certain result, and make it more dreadful because of the increased headway of the runaway cars.

The engineer viewed the situation on every side. Plan after plan rose before him; plan after plan was dropped. But it was all done with that wonderful speed which the mind shows when under the stress of a swiftly-nearing danger. In that brief time the engineer lived hours. Suddenly there was a ray of hope, a possible plan of safety. "Down brakes!" he whistled. This was the signal to which we have already called attention: the one that sent the tremor through the hundreds on the train.

"Free the engine from the train!" he shouted to the fireman. The engine was uncoupled, and the train was left lagging behind. "Now jump for your life!" There was no time for parley. The fireman leaped, fell, and scrambled to his feet again. Then the engineer put on full steam. Freed from its burden of coaches the locomotive responded at once.

"Now fight the battle for us!" exclaimed the engineer, as he sprang from the steps. His quick eye had chosen a favorable spot on which to alight. Though thrown headlong with some force, he was on his feet promptly enough to see his train roll by at a lessening speed, under the full control of the faithful brakemen.

That something serious had happened, or was about to occur, began to be clear to the passengers. One or two had seen the fireman jump,two or three, the engineer; and larger numbers from the car windows had caught snatches of men that, soiled and bruised and dazed, were trying to rise to their feet by the side of the track. All was excitement and tumult. Some began to leap from the cars. Fortunately there was little danger now, for the motion of the train had nearly ceased.

Upon the track, meanwhile, went the iron monster to meet the foe alone. Down the track, into full sight, came the wild freight cars with a speed so great that they almost rose from the rails as they rounded the curves. Nearer and nearer, the speed of each increasing. Then they flew at each other in a mighty, tiger-like rage, as if there were blood to be shed and nerves to be torn asunder.

The crash shook the hills. A great roaring cloud of steam burst into the air, while another of dust and debris boiled up and mingled confusedly with it. Then the shattered ends of cars shot out here and there from the smoke, and a grinding, crackling mass rose up. Quivering in the air a moment, it reeled, and then went crashing down the embankment into the ravine below. When the steam and the dust cleared away, there were the deep, ugly furrows in the roadbed, and the splintered ties, and the bent and broken rails, and the nameless fragments of an utter wreck, to mark the scene of the fierce encounter.

The gallant engine was a hopeless ruin, but it had done a noble service. It had fought a battle in which hundreds of lives and untold interests were at stake, and it had won it. Not a life of that precious company was lost, not a member of it hurt by so much as a scratch. Before they saw their peril, they were rescued from it; and yet their rescue had hardly been completed before the full and awful nature of that peril burst upon them, and stirred them in their inmost being.

With tears of joy and gratitude they blessed the engineer, whose quick wit and daring plan and instant execution had saved them from a fate that at one moment it seemed beyond human power to avert. And to the poor locomotive that lay dismembered and useless on the rocks below, there went out a kind and tender feeling, as if, in giving its life to save others, it had shown something akin to the love and bravery and sacrifice of a noble human soul.—Frank H. Hill, in Congregationalist.

TEMPERANCE.

AN APPEAL TO GERMAN AMERICANS

TO INVESTIGATE THE BEER QUESTION.

The anti-saloon Republicans are doing some work, the value of which all the friends of temperance cheerfully acknowledge. Their first appeal to the people was a terrific arraignment of the saloon. And,now, in their zeal to save the Republican party by inducing it to adopt a position of thorough, uncompromising hostility to the saloon, they have issued an elaborate document with the foregoing title.

Starting with the premise that the mass of German Americans are ignorant of the facts and arguments upon which the progressive portion of the American people condemn the use of beer and the saloon where it is publicly dispensed, the appeal proceeds to set forth with great fulness and clearness the essential facts of the argument as it relates to the beer question. The importance of the document will justify some quotations:

DOES BEER PROMOTE DRUNKENNESS?

The corner-stone of every German argument against temperance ideas and anti-saloon legislation is the assertion that "beer is substantially a harmless drink," and that "there is very little drunkenness in beer-drinking countries."

What are the facts? The last report of the National Bureau of Statistics gives the per capita consumption of liquors in four nations (in gallons) as follows:

	Spirits.	Wine.	M'lt. Liq.
United States,	1.24	.38	11.18
Great Britain,	1.01	.37	32.90
Germany,	1.14	———	23.78
France,	1.32	36.88	———

Although the figures are not given in this report, it is known that less beer is drank in France than in the other countries, and more wine in Germany than in either Great Britain or the United States. But, while Great Britain uses less spirits than the other nations and leads them all in beer, it is well known that there is more drunkenness within her borders than anywhere else in the world—Russia possibly excepted. Germany, which uses almost as much spirits as we do, and more than twice as much beer, is called a "temperate nation," but, if it is, alcohol must be less potent there than anywhere else. It is well known that, in such countries as Germany, the sober take more care to keep their intoxicated friends out of the clutches of the police. Moreover, beer stupifies at an earlier stage of intoxication than spirituous liquors do, and, consequently, those who become drunk upon it are less likely to become disdisorderly and unmanageable. Nevertheless, prison and asylum records and the reports of honest travelers tell sad tales of misery resulting from drink in Germany. It is generally supposed that beer drinkers consume very little alcohol, but many of them take as much or more than whisky drinkers do. Saloon keepers estimate that there are sixty-five drinks in a gallon of whisky. Several specimens of whisky purchased in prominent New York saloons and analyzed by Prof. Draper contained an average of about forty per cent of alcohol, at which rate there is a pint of alcohol in twenty drinks. According to G. Thoman, the brewers' writer, there are twenty-six glasses in a gallon of beer. At that rate fifty-nine glasses of average American beer contains one pint of alcohol, and is equivalent to twenty drinks of whisky—three ordinary glasses of beer containing a trifle more alcohol than one drink of whisky. While the tendency is to make beer stronger, it is the reverse with whisky, which is diluted more and more, drugs being used to cover up the fraud, so that the present strength of the whisky drank is probably less than I have put it at.

"The Effect of Beer on Those Who Make and Use It," by G. Thoman, published by the United States Brewers' Association, gives the statement of physicians who attended the employes in several large breweries, the object being to show that beer is beneficial instead of hurtful. It says of these workmen: "The average daily consumption of malt liquors is 25.73 glasses, about ten pints per capita," which makes 456 gallons a year. Ten pints of beer contains two-fifths of a pint of alcohol, equivalent to one pint of straight whisky taken by these men every day. The figures are startling to me, but Mr. Thoman and the brewers appear to look on them as "a matter of no consequence;" and to suppose that they show that "the way to promote temperance is to encourage the drinking of beer."

DOES BEER INDUCE DISEASE?

For a long time the assumption that beer is almost, if not quite, harmless, and often really beneficial, was generally accepted as true,but latterly proof has been called for with astonishing results. A couple of years ago the Toledo (Ohio) Blade had eleven prominent physicians in that city interviewed, and the testimony of all was in substantial accord with that of Dr. S. H. Bergen, who said, "to compass my idea in a few words, I think it kills quicker than any other liquor." In its comments on these interviews, the Blade says:

"It should be borne in mind that Toledo is essentially a beer-drinking city. The German population is very large; there are five of the largest and most extensive breweries in the country here, and there is probably more beer drank in proportion to the population than in any city of the United States!

"The practice of these physicians is, therefore, largely among the beer drinkers, and they have had abundant opportunities to know exactly its bearing upon health and disease. Every one of them bears testimony to the fact that no man can drink beer safely; that it is an injury to any one who uses it in any quantity, and that its effect upon the general health of the country has been even worse than that of whisky."

The Blade further says: "Life insurance companies have no sentiment; they are as cold-blooded as banks. They do business upon strictly business principles. Their business is one based purely upon experience, from which certain inexorable rules have been established. A life insurance company will not insure the life of a confirmed beer drinker. Why? Because it is a certain fact, as certain as a thing can be, that the beer drinker cannot live long enough to make insurance profitable to them.... These institutions dread beer more than they do whisky, for its effect upon the system is even worse. A non-beer drinker at forty is considered a good risk; a beer drinker at that age can get no insurance at all. As we said, there is no sentiment in life insurance companies. They act entirely upon facts which are the result of experience. Their figures never lie."

MORAL EFFECTS OF BEER.

In addition to sowing the seeds of disease and death in the physical system, beer, in large quantities, is said to sodden the brain and paralyze or vitiate the moral natures of its votaries. Careful observers assert that it is more brutalizing in its effects than either spirituous or vinous liquors, in partial proof of which they point to the disproportionately large number of German names among the perpetrators of especially atrocious crimes published in the daily papers. While these facts are very suggestive they are not sufficiently definite, but court records certainly give solid grounds for serious reflection. According to the census of 1880, there were 198,595 Irish in this city, and 163,482 Germans, an Irish excess of 35,113; and the proportion is probably about the same now. Table F of the report of the police justices of New York city, from 1881 to 1886, charges against the Irish, who are generally whisky drinkers, 91,548 offenses, and against the Germans, who are mainly beer drinkers, 26,349, which is a bad showing for the Irish. But these offenses have been divided into two tables, hereto annexed, with singular results. In the first is put homicide, manslaughter, assault, cruelty to children or animals, disorderly conduct, intoxication and vagrancy, which are, in nearly all cases,presumably the result of sudden anger or of indulgence in drink, without premeditated intention to injure or interfere with the rights of others, or to violate law. In this table the Irish furnish 87,300 cases and the Germans 20,407. Table two contains forty offenses, in which sudden anger is not the presumable cause, and which necessarily imply a deliberate disregard of the rights of others or a contempt for law, and of these the Irish committed 4,158 and the Germans 5,942. The Irish have never been cousidered an especially law-abiding people, but the Germans have. The former have had much to depress them, and are proverbially reckless and improvident, while the latter are equally noted for general intelligence, prudence and thrift. Under these circumstances, the Germans ought to be especially strong where the cold facts show that they are not. While the masses of the Germans are unquestionably upright and law-abiding citizens, there is no getting around these court records How can they be accounted for? I do not believe that the Germans as a race are naturally more criminally disposed and law-defying than others, and I am strongly of the opinion that at least a part of the reason for the facts cited is to be found in the beverage they consume so much of. This idea is still further supported by the equally undeniable fact that anarchism in this country is a German fungus, born and nurtured in beer saloons, and nowhere else. Is anything further needed to stimulate inquiry?—Christian Statesman.

LITERATURE.

THE BEGINNINGS OF CIVILIZATION. By Charles Woodward Hutson. Pp. 242. Price, 50c. John B. Alden, New York.

The author of this compendious volume is Professor of Modern Languages and acting professor of History in the University of Mississippi. This book appears to be the result of class lectures, and displays a thorough but prejudiced study of scraps of history of the early nations which does credit to the diligence of the author. Failing to find for the purposes of instruction, a book that should briefly yet widely review the beginnings of civilized life, he has made one. The result of early prejudice is unfortunately seen in every reference to the descendants of Ham, whom he declares to be inferior and fit for slavery; and he sums up all with the conclusion that the teaching of the Bible that all men are of one blood and from one pair is a fable. It must be regretted that the author should in this and other places put a low value on Scripture authority or reject it altogether.

It is claimed by some that people in moderate circumstances are prone to buy the higher priced grades of food, which do not by any means contain the most nourishment for the money. The editors of Science are anxious to gather as much information as possible on this point, and will be glad to hear from any dealers or others having information to give. This excellent weekly keeps constantly at work on live issues. An electrical department is among the improvements expected in the immediate future.

What to do in the sudden emergencies of childhood, is a question often asked by anxious mothers Babyhood for February answers this question in a comprehensive medical article, which says what to do in cases of convulsions, bruises, burns, cuts, foreign bodies in the ear, nose, etc An equally important article is that on "Contagion and Disinfection," by Dr. Chapin, which clearly describes the source and character of the poison of scar let fever, diphtheria, measles, etc., and gives most valuable directions concerning the disinfection of the sick room, of the person, and of food and drink.

In the February St. Nicholas, a bright number opens with a touching Russian story by Amelia E. Barr, entitled "Michael and Feodosia." Mr. Charles Henry Webb contributes a stirring account of the "Diamond-backs in Paradise," telling of the rattlesnakes encountered during a winter in Florida In "The Story of an Old Bridge" will be found a historical sketch of London Bridge and the great events with which it has been connected, illustrated with drawings by Peters and Brennan, and by other pictures. The high tides in the Bay of Fundy are explained in an amusing story, by C. F. Holder; Lieut. Schwatka, in "How a Great Sioux Chief was Named," gives the origin of the name "Spotted Tail," and, incidentally, of other similar appellations among the Indians.

The Connecticut Commissioner of Labor Statistics reports of 46 families for October, 1887, in different parts of the State, and embracing 29 different occupations and 225 persons, that the average monthly income per family was $55, the daily income $1 74; the average monthly expense was $60 01, or $1 96 per day. The expenses for groceries and vegetables was $928 07. On the above startling text, Mr. Charles Barnard, the well known economic writer, is publishing in the American Garden Magazine, of 751 Broadway, New York, a series of articles ON THE HOME LOT, for the purpose of showing how a family of even so small an income as the above may easily become independent by simply living within their income. It is a most instructive and valuable series of articles on home gardening for all working people of every degree.

While the February Century will attract many by the variety of its contents, American history is represented in two important papers to which a large number of readers will turn first of all, viz: (1) General Sherman's study of "The Grand Strategy of the War"—in which there are interesting comparisons with foreign military operations, and characterization of the relation of the different Union movements throughout the war; and (2) The Lincoln History, in which the narrative deals with the Confederate Commissioners, the Cabinet opinions on the re enforcement of Fort Pickens (given from unpublished MSS), and Lincoln's correspondence with Seward, in which it was decided whether the Secretary of State or the President should be first in the Cabinet councils. Mr. Kennan's series, which is important enough to be torn by the Russian censor from copies of the Century sent to that country, receives a notable addition in the study of "A Russian Political Prison," a terribly pathetic description written from personal investigation and inquiry. This series not only helps one understand the Russian situation, but it is likely to take a deep hold of the reader. Theodore Roosevelt writes, also in a popular vein, of "Ranch Life in the Far West," with intimate knowledge of his subject, which is largely the cowboy. His article tells just the things one wishes to know of the subject, and is fully and vigorously illustrated by Frederic Remington, who himself has had experience as a cowboy. Mr. Roosevelt says in conclusion: "The present form of stock raising on the plains is doomed and can hardly outlast the present century." "The European Craze for Decorations" is a timely article by Ernst von Hesse Wartegg which explains somewhat the American rage for secret societies. The badges and thundering titles of the lodge are as attractive to weak-headed people here, as to a lordling of England or Germany.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—A week of prayer, beginning March 18 and continuing until March 25, has been called for by the general officers of the National W. C. T. U. An afternoon prayer meeting for women will be held each day, with two evening mass meetings during the week.

—Batavia and Geneva, two beautiful towns adjoining on the Fox river in this State,are experiencing the most remarkable revivals in their history. The work in Geneva is about closed, in Batavia it is in full strength. Catholics, infidels, drunkards, thieves—nearly all impenitent classes have been reached and persons from their number been brought into the number of the saved.

—From a number of Wesleyan pastors the Wesleyan Methodist is able to report gracious revivals, in which churches are quickened and many souls brought into the kingdom.

—Mr. Moody opened the fifth week of his stay in Louisville on the Sabbath by addressing a meeting especially for ladies in the afternoon, and one for men alone in the evening. The aggregate attendance was between 12,000 and 15,000. Lately the tabernacle has become so crowded, thousands being turned away nightly, that it has been necessary to hold overflow meetings in several of the different churches. The meetings close with special services next Sabbath.

—Rev. George C. Needham is now at work with the Memorial Baptist church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D. D., pastor. Dr. Hoyt has received a call to St. Louis at a salary of $10,000,and his Philadelphia parish fear that he will accept.

—Dr. L. W. Munhall has been laboring in Baltimore, Md. He began in Buffalo Feb. 5, at the call of five leading churches, a four weeks' campaign.

—Rev. Jeremiah H. Good, founder and president of Heidelberg College, Tiffin, Ohio, and a leader of the German Reformed church in the West, died at Cleveland, Jan. 25, aged 65.

—Rev. Theodore W. Haven, pastor of the Congregational church at Battle Creek, Mich., who is supposed to have left New York city Jan. 11, has not been seen since, and no clew to his whereabouts can be discovered.

—Rev. S. J. McPherson, pastor of the Second Presbyterian church, this city, has been called to the vacant pulpit of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, New York city, the next to the largest in the State.

—From March 1 to Jan. 1 the missionaries of the American Sunday-School Union have established 500 Sunday-schools in new settlements or neglected communities, and induced 1,804 teachers and 15,213 scholars to become members of these schools. They also aided 1,914 other schools which have a membership of 8,259 teachers and 74,404 scholars, held 3,774 meetings, made 12,194 visits to families, distributed 4,219 Bibles and Testaments, put into the hands of these people $5,478 worth of religious reading, and traveled 174,801 miles.

—Mr. Frank H. Long, the Chicago evangelist, concluded a two-weeks' meeting in the Presbyterian church in Mt. Vernon, Ill., last week, and as a result the meat shops have been closed on Sunday, and there have been eighty-five conversions and seventy-five accessions to the church, mostly of young people. This has been the greatest awakening this church ever experienced.

—In New Mexico and Utah there are at least 2,600 scholars in the schools of the New West Education Commission. This organization had its origin in 1879, in the belief that the establishment of Christian schools would be the most powerful defence that could be brought to bear against the evil influences invading the Western Territories. The Commission has to-day seven academies and twenty-three schools. Its receipts last year were $61,318.

—The McAll Mission has opened several new halls at Paris, and also at St. Germain-en-Saye,Nantes, Antibes, Thiers, and Sainte-Florence. The church at Rheims has opened two popular halls for evangelistic and social work, the whole expense of erection being borne by the church.

—In France a movement is on foot which seeks the enforcement of the laws against the sale of immoral publications. A petition to be presented to the French Senate praying for the interference of the national legislature is being numerously signed The Protestant journals and the various church conferences are lending their influence to the movement, and a strong appeal is made to women—mothers especially—to join in the crusade. The situation has been aggravated by the large sale of Zola's novels.

—A deputation of the English Baptist Union held a conference with Mr. Spurgeon on the 13th ult., with reference to his withdrawal from the Union. Mr. Spurgeon declared that he must still maintain his resignation. He suggested that the council should adopt a simple basis of Bible truths, such as are accepted evangelical doctrines. He considered that the constitution of the Union did not contain sufficient powers to enable it to deal with members who disclosed heretical tendencies. He declined to formally accuse anybody, but said that when he had spoken of that which looked like the beginning of a confederacy in evil, he referred to no special association in connection with which deviations from the Gospel truth could be discovered. He would continue to support the departments of the Union in which he was specially interested.

—Late letters from Bishop William Taylor, says the Independent, show that his scheme of self-supporting missions in Africa is substantially a colonization scheme. He writes from Vivi, at the head of navigation on the Lower Congo, where he has been waiting the arrival of a traction engine from Liverpool, and the passing of the wet season to begin the work of transporting his iron steamer, and the stores accumulated at Vivi to the Upper Congo. The steamer which arrived at Vivi some time ago was much heavier than he anticipated, consisting, as we understand him, of about 3,600 man-loads. As Stanley took all the carriers with him to the interior on his way to relieve Emin Bey, the Bishop could not procure transportation for his steamer, and ordered a traction engine from Liverpool, with the idea of using a steam wagon on Stanley's road as a means of transportation. While waiting for the engine a wagon was built at Vivi, and the Bishop and his assistants erected three adobe houses for the use of the missionaries at points on the Congo above Vivi, the Bishop himself making the brick. The new stations opened are on the north bank of the Congo, a short distance apart. It is the Bishop's intention to extend this chain of stations to Stanley Pool. He will make Vivi a base of supplies, having erected a warehouse there and appointed a missionary as storekeeper. All goods sent from Europe or America for the mission will be received at Vivi, and distributed among the stations on requisition. The Bishop says nothing about evangelization, but he mentions in one of his letters that he had ordered "an outfit for six new schools." He has, we understand, eighty missionaries, men and women, in his force.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP AND PROGRESS.

Dr. Dorchester, who, some six years ago, published a book upon the problem of religious progress,in which the most elaborate statistics up to that time given to the public were presented, is about to publish another volume upon the history of Christianity in the United States, on which he has spent much labor. In advance of the appearance of this work he gives, through the Christian Advocate, the following table of the numbers of communicants in the various denominations at the close of 1886:

Adventists under various names	134 577
Baptists under various names, including 985,815 colored Baptists	2 909 245
Disciples, Mennonites, Dunkers, etc	820,500
Christians and Christian Union churches	267,000
Congregationalists	436,000
Episcopalians	423 605
Friends	82 000
Lutheran and German Evangelical churches	990,830
Methodists under various names, including 1,012,729 colored Methodists	4 265 855
United Brethren, Evangelical Association, etc.	335 561
Presbyterian and Reformed churches	1,431,249
Bible Union and other small bodies	35,859
Aggregate church membership	12 132 651

While absolute exactness is not attainable in such statistics, Dr. Dorchester's reputation is a sufficient guarantee that he has come as near the correct figures as it was possible to get.

Another table gives the total number of communicants in these bodies in 1800 as 334,872; in 1850, 3,529,988; in 1870, 6,673,396; 1880, 10,065,963,and in 1886, 12,132,651.

The average annual gain for the first 50 years was 63,302, for the next 20 years 157,170, for the following 10 years 339,258, and for the last 6 years 344,449.

The proportion of communicants to population, which was only one in 14 5 inhabitants at the beginning of the century, rose to one in 6 5 in 1850, one in 5 7 in 1870 one in 5.0 in 1880 and one in 4.8 in 1886.—New York Witness.

LODGE NOTES.

For the first time in twenty-four years the Chicago Times has become a "union office," and only members of the Typographical Union will be employed there.

A report from the Knights of Labor headquarters in Philadelphia says the order is again gaining financial and numerical strength. But from every part of the country we have word of its losses.

The Roman Catholics of Chicago have a "court" of their order of Foresters called McMullen, which for the good of the order dined and danced with its friends till 2 o'clock one morning lately.

Clarke & Co.'s Solar Iron Works, at Pittsburg, resumed operations Friday with non union men. The furnaces and mills were closed several weeks ago, owing to the trouble with the Amalgamated Association.

The members of the Knights of Labor are laying the foundation of an Opera House. They will have an assembly hall in the basement of the building, and the first floor will be fitted up for an Opera House. This must be a hightoned lodge of laborers.

The executive council of the Modern Woodmen of America concluded its annual session at Fulton, Ill., Feb. 3. The report of the head officers shows 16,000 members, an increase of 8,000 during the year, of which 9,000 reside in Illinois. This is a kind of insurance lodge.

At the recent annual assembly of the Masonic Veteran Association of Illinois the following were some of the elected officers: John Carson Smith, of Chicago, venerable chief (Smith is Lieutenant Governor and aspires to the Republican nomination for Governor); Rev. Clinton Locke and Rev. Henry G. Perry, chaplains.

The Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, Knights of Pythias, was suspended from membership by a court of high officers held in Cincinnati, Jan. 22. The charge against this lodge was that of ignoring and refusing to obey the mandates and laws of the Supreme Lodge of the United States. At the last meeting of the Supreme Lodge held in Toronto, Canada, some time ago, certain amendments were ordered in the laws governing lodges in general. These amendments were to be made immediately, and a copy of the same be sent to the "supreme chancellor of the world," Howard Douglass. The Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania refused positively to make the amendments as required. The result was that the lodge was suspended from membership. This action will cause a sensation in Pythian circles, as the Pennsylvania lodge has 40,000 members. The matter will be carried to the legal courts.

An injunction has been served by the Sheriff at Cleveland, upon W. B. Hillman, Grand High Priest of the Royal Arch Masons of Ohio. The order was issued at the instance of Anderson T. Speer, to restrain Hillman from preventing the installation of the recently elected officers of Warren Chapter, of Newark. The action arises from the conflict between the Northern and Cerneau Scottish rites jurisdictions, because of the assertion of the Most Worthy Grand Master at the last meeting of the State Grand Lodge, that the Cerneau Scottish rite was "illegal, clandestine, and un Masonic." This assertion he succeeded in getting the Grand Lodge to indorse. Hillman claims that the Cerneau Scottish Rite Masons are not recognized by legitimate Masons, and were introduced as a disturbing element. The Grand Commandery, and the Grand Lodge have issued their edicts that members who affiliate with the Cerneau Scottish Rites Masons shall not be allowed to hold office.

There is a revolt among Canadian Knights of Labor over appointments made by General Master Workman Powderly to the Parliamentary Committee of Canada. The three appointees are prominent political opponents of Sir John A. Macdonald's government, and any possible good to be derived from the appointment of such a committee will in consequence be blocked. The Toronto District Assembly, at its last meeting, passed two resolutions, one requesting the General Executive Board to tell why their letters on this subject had been disregarded and why the Canadian order had been constantly neglected, and the other demanding that the order in this country be always consulted with regard to any appointments made in Canada. It is expected other Canadian district assemblies will take action similar to that of the Toronto district, and therefore the General Executive Board will either have to cancel the appointments already made or Powderly's appointees will go to Ottawa in direct opposition to the organization they are supposed to represent.

A MAGNIFICENT WATER-POWER.

The water-power at Minneapolis, since developed to its present capacity, has only 32,000 horse-power. At the town of Great Falls, Mont, the Great Falls of the Missouri furnish over 250,000 available horse power. With an extensive grain and stock country rapidly developing on one side; an abundance of timber, coal, and magnificent quarries close at hand; and extensive mining districts only a few miles away with their great quantities of ores to be reduced, and large population requiring food, heat and shelter. Great Falls seems beyond question destined to soon become an industrial center of magnitude, now that it has secured railroad communication with the rest of the country. A new map just issued, and other information may be secured free by applying to C. H WARREN, General Passenger Agent, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry., St Paul, Minnesota.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND:

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE DOMESTIC DOCTOR.

CROUP.—Slice onions, and put sugar on the slices in layers—the sirup being administered. A sovereign and almost instantaneous remedy.

BLEEDING.—To stop bleeding take the fine dust of tea and bind it on the wound—at all times accessible and easily obtained. After the blood has ceased to flow, laudanum may be advantageously applied to the wound.

REMEDY FOR EAR ACHE.—Take a bit of cotton batting; put upon it a pinch of black pepper, gather it up and tie it; dip it in sweet-oil and insert it in the ear. Put a flannel bandsge over the head to keep it warm.

BUNIONS.—To cure bunions use pulverized saltpeter and sweet oil. Obtain at a druggists five or six cents' worth of saltpeter; put it into a bottle with sufficient olive oil to dissolve it; shake it up well, and rub the inflamed joints night and morning, and more frequently if painful.

TO CURE CORNS.—Take the substance which sticks to the side of a soft soap barrel after the soap is used out, and mix with pulverized white chalk to the consistency of a salve. Apply every twelve hours in a rag until the corn is removed. It will cure every case of corns in six days.

AN ALLEGED REMEDY FOR HYDROPHOBIA.—When bitten by a rabid dog bathe the wound with warm vinegar and water, and when this has dried pour a few drops of muriatic acid upon the bite, which will destroy the poison of the saliva and relieve the patient from all danger. An old German forester discovered the remedy, which he said had been used successfully for fifty years.—American Rural Home.

A celebrated physician has remarked that every house ought to be pulled down at the end of the sixtieth year, as it has by that time absorbed all the diseases of those who have lived in it, believing that wood and plaster absorb gases, foul air and feverish exhalations as readily as milk or water does. But as it is not practicable to tear down houses every half century or so, it is to be considered if all the wood used in their interior construction and all the plain surfaces of plaster should not be so thoroughly oiled or varnished that the power of absorption should be almost entirely destroyed, and the character thus so changed that destruction would no longer be desirable.

An absolute non-conductor, insensible alike to heat or cold, and absolutely fireproof, has at last been discovered in pulverized paper. I tried the discovery last winter by packing the drain and water-pipe of my residence with it, and all the pipes are on the outside of the building, and the season was the severest of many years. My plumbing did not cost me twenty-five cents. As a covering for steam-pipes it acts equally as well. Pulverized paper, I repeat, is an absolute non conductor.—Globe Democrat.

SCALLOPED POTATOES.—Cut up cold boiled potatoes until you have about a quart. Put in a pan a generous cup of milk, one teaspoonful butter. Set on the stove and let it thicken, then put a layer of potatoes in a pudding dish, season with salt and pepper, and pour on a little of the gravy. Continue until it is all used. Cover the top with rolled cracker crumbs and bits of butter. Bake twenty minutes.

The above seems a nice variety in the cooking of potatoes, and the following is apparently a very good recipe for bread-sauce, which ought properly always to accompany roast fowl, as well as game and turkey:

DRESSING FOR FOWLS.—Take as much stale bread as you will need, pour boiling water over and cover closely until soft. Beat up well until fine, then add a lump of butter, the size depending on the condition of the fowl, whether fat or lean; add an egg for each fowl, salt and pepper to taste, and put in enough onion cut fine to give a nice flavor.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their EXPRESS and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequaled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS.

Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century."

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religions Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Int resting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time"
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

IN BRIEF.

A. N. Alward writes to the Inter Ocean from Crow Lake, Dakota, of the experience of a searching party after the late storm: "As we passed on and saw other little mounds in the snow, we approached them with a fecling of awe and horror, fearing that they too contained the remains of some other unfortunate fellow being. We next came to a country schoolhouse, with a teacher and fifteen scholars, who had all saved their lives by remaining inside all night. In an adjoining district, the teacher, Miss May Hunt, started from her school house during the storm with eight scholars, thinking they could reach a farm house about forty rods away. They soon lost their way, and after wandering about for some time they fortunately ran against a straw stack. They dug into the protected side of this and remained there all night, thus saving their lives, but the hands and feet of some of them were badly frozen. In Charles Mix county, a lady teacher started out with eighteen scholars. They were all found dead the next day, with their frozen hands clasping the wire of a fence, which they had doubtless attempted to follow as a guide to the nearest farm house. It is impossible to make anything like a definite estimate of the amount of live stock that has been lost. The storm was much more disastrous in this respect than it would have been had it not come on so suddenly and in the middle of the day, when most of the farmers had their stock out for water. Animals of all kinds became entirely unmanageable when the storm struck them. I know of several herds of which not a single one was saved, and in some cases they were only a few rods from their stables, but it was impossible to turn them against the storm. In spite of the combined efforts of men and dogs, the cattle drifted along with the wind, and soon froze to death. The prairies are everywhere dotted with their carcasses. Many of our settlers will be severely oppressed by their losses."

The first report of the Inter-State Commerce Commission, beyond giving a statement of the work done, which has been largely tentative, embodies important information and data respecting the sphere of its operations. The railroad mileage of the United States to close of 1886 was 133,606. The number of corporations is 1,425, but of these only 700 are carriers. The cost of these roads is estimated at $7,254,995,223, and the funded debt of the companies at $3,882,966,330. Interest was paid to the amount of $187,356,540, and the aggregate payment to stockholders in dividends was $80,094,138. This gives only a partial idea of the magnitude of the interest which the act undertakes to regulate. The service rendered by the Commission promises to be widely beneficial. The Commission contents itself with reporting what it has done, and abstains from suggesting at present any changes in the law where principles seem to be sound.

Three years after date, the floating islands of pumice, thrown up into the sea by the stupendous volcanic eruption at Krakatoa, in the Java seas, are found to be drifting along the Indian Ocean, in the last twelve months, 1,676 miles, in a direction west by south, from where they were one year ago, or about five miles a day. This accidental help to hydrographers, and all who study ocean currents and drifts, is probably the best they have ever had; because the origin of the pumice is well known, the floating expanse of it is so large that it cannot escape notice, and the dates and other particulars about it are all matters of record.

Combs enough to take the tangle out of the locks of all New York were sold Jan. 19 at auction. By order of the United Seylonite Company, 10,500 gross of combs of all styles and sizes were auctioned off. There were pocket combs Siamese, barbers', dressing, round, fine-tooth, and infants': white combs, amber combs, tortoise shell, pink, blue, and canary combs. The gross receipts of the sale were between $40,000 and $50,000.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen. $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents, per dozen. $3.50.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted is a book for the times. The design of the ____ is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan, "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 304 pages.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Senate has passed the joint resolution of Senator Hoar proposing an amendment to the Constitution. It provides that the term of office of the President and of the Fiftieth Congress shall continue until the 30th day of April, 1889, at noon; that the Senators whose existing term would otherwise expire on the 4th of March, 1889 (and thereafter), shall continue in office until April 30 succeeding such expiration; that the 30th of April at noon shall thereafter be substituted for the fourth of March, as the commencement and termination of the official term of the President, Vice President, Senators and Representatives in Congress. The Senate took up the Blair education bill last Tuesday and was addressed by Mr. Evarts in its favor. The people of this country, he said, had made up their minds that there should be no ignorance where it was within the power of the State and within the proper limits of the United States to prevent it. If ignorance could not be lifted from the low level where it now rested, it would not stay there, but would become lower and lower and would become brutal, savage and hostile. The House has adopted a resolution to investigate the numerous "trusts" under which monopolies in all sorts of business are hiding and appointed a committee to undertake the matter.

GENERAL.

The Mississippi House has reported a memorial to Congress protesting against the passage of the Senate bill having for its object the prevention of the use of cotton-seed oil as a substitute for hog lard and proposing to tax the oil and the privilege of manufacturing and dealing therein. The memorialists express the opinion that cotton-seed lard is a perfectly wholesome article, and should not be discriminated against in favor of any other article of American manufacture or commerce

The exodus inaugurated at Topeka to move colored people to Central and South America had its origin in Washington county, Texas. The father of the project is S. A. Hackworth, for many years a prominent Republican of Brenham Texas, but now residing in Topeka. Hackworth left Washington county two years ago account of the race conflict culminating at the election in November, 1886, when three negroes were taken from the jail and lynched by a mob. Before leaving Texas, Hackworth related the details of his plans for a great exodus as recently divulged at Topeka.

Professor Asa Gray, the eminent botanist, died at Cambridge, Mass., Monday evening, aged 77 years, of paralysis.

Resolutions protesting against the passage of the Blair bill in Congress, and declaring it to be an iniquitous measure, have been adopted by the Kentucky Legislature.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin Tuesday decided that the Legislature of 1885 extended to women the right to vote on school matters only, and not at general elections.

All letters, petitions, and other papers bearing on the case of the anarchists are being classified at Springfield by Governor Oglesby's clerks, after which they will be placed in a strong trunk and be stowed away for safe keeping in the vaults of the State Department.

Lansing, Mich., gave a majority of 369 for prohibition at the local option election Tuesday. The majority in the whole of Ingham county reaches about 3,000.

A sensation has been created by the report of the special commission appointed to examine into the safety of the Assembly Chamber ceiling in the $16,000,000 State Capitol at Albany. The commission declare that the massive stone ceiling, weighing thousands of tons, must come down at once. The State engineer, who is one of the commission, says that it is completely shattered and may fall at any moment. It is probable that the lower house will make haste to secure other quarters.

Two car-loads of potatoes, corn, and food were sent to the Kansas sufferers Thursday from Pierre, D. T., the Chicago and Northwestern Road furnishing free transportation.

The granulating mill of the Austin Powder Works, near Cleveland, Ohio, was blown up Friday morning. One man was killed, and not a vestige of the structure remains, its site being simply marked by a hole in the ground. Windows in stores and dwellings for a mile and a half around were shattered.

The works of the American Paint and Oil Company at Cleveland were destroyed by an explosion followed by a fire, Friday morning. The workmen jumped from the windows to save their lives, and many persons had narrow escapes. A policeman was blown across the street and seriously wounded.

The Belgic, the fourth successive steamer from China with small pox on board, was quarantined Thursday at San Francisco.

An examination of winter wheat in Western Wisconsin shows a small but healthy growth, well protected by the snow, and as the acreage sown was unusually large farmers are hopeful for a heavy yield.

The Merced Canal in California, twenty seven miles long, and built to irrigate over 250,000 acres, was formally opened Tuesday.

At Barnesville, Ohio, Thursday the boiler of a portable saw mill on Lafayette Bolan's farm exploded, killing John Arnold and Charles Sullivan and dangerously injuring Benjamin Travis, Samuel Stubb, Joseph Stubb, and Frank Warwick

Five years ago the 5 year-old son of Captain W. E Dickinson, of Commonwealth, Wis., mysteriously disappeared. It is now reported that negotiations for the return of the boy for a ransom are pending, and that $10,000 has been demanded by the kidnapers.

FOREIGN.

The wheat blockade on the Canadian Pacific is causing great dissatisfaction in Manitoba, as is also the announcement that the road has been carrying wheat from Minneapolis to the seaboard for 25 cents per hundred weight, less than one half the rate from Manitoba.

L'Opinione in an editorial on the position of the Vatican in regard to Ireland says there is small probability of the Pope having any serious intention of intervening in the Irish question in the interest of the present British government. If the Duke of Norfolk really has an official mission to the Holy See, nothing justifies the hope that it will succeed. At most the Pope will give counsels of prudence and moderation to the bishops. He can do no more, the Irish question being not a religious but an economic and national one.

The Duke of Norfolk's mission from the Queen to the Pope is being subjected to severe criticisms north of the Tweed. Scotchmen give loud expression to their disapproval of the whole business.

The newspapers in St. Petersburg discuss the Austro-German treaty tranquilly. Most of them aver that Russia is equally desirous of peace, and wishes to attack nobody.

The treaty between Italy and Germany stipulates that if France attacks either country the other shall send an army of of 300,000 men to the French frontier.

Some French papers advocate an alliance of England, France and Russia against the triple alliance. The Temps says that there will be no security in Europe until it is known whether Austria would regard Russian intervention in Bulgaria as a casus belli, and whether Germany would permit Austria to settle such a quarrel single-handed. Le Paris says that neither Russia nor France will ever declare war.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.

There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000 000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.

This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.

No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.

No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.

Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.

The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

Several million voters breathed easier Monday morning when they read the letter of James G. Blaine saying that he will not be candidate for President. The letter is sent to B. F. Jones, chairman of the Republican National committee, and is dated at Florence, Italy, Jan. 25. While most Democrats and many Republicans wished Blaine to run again, there is no doubt a majority of the latter party looked upon his candidacy with misgiving. The letter will open the gate for a score of aspirants, who could do nothing while Blaine was in the way, and for a few weeks there will be a stir in all sorts of politics.

Last Friday after listening to the arguments of A. M. Powell and other temperance advocates, the Senate Committee on Education unanimously instructed Senator Wilson, of Iowa, to report favorably the bill providing for the appointment of a commission of five to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to the revenue and taxation, and its general, economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects; and also to inquire as to the practical results of license and prohibitory legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States of the Union. Six times this question has been favorably received in the Senate only to be shelved in the House. But the political hacks and wire-pullers in the lower body will soon find themselves in the same defunct condition, if God will help us.

Before the House Committee on the Liquor Traffic there was also a strong representation of the same cause. Hon. Hiram Price, of Iowa, Governor Dingley, of Maine, A. M. Powell, Mrs. LaFetra, with a strong contingent of W. C. T. U. ladies, appealed to the committee to submit a bill or to approve the Senate measure for the official and national investigation of the liquor business. This measure has been urged for fifteen years. Six times the Senate passed it and as many times has the House defeated it. The present House committee was established through the agency of Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania, and there is much hope that an investigation so long demanded by a respectable portion of the nation will be undertaken.

It is encouraging to read in the Republican papers, every time the "Grand Army of the Republic" holds an important meeting, the positive assurance that the order is not political. Thus from the Chicago Evening Journal: "The Grand Army of the Republic is not a political body, and those who speak of the Illinois Department Encampment, next week, as a place where anybody's boom will be started or promoted, do not know what they are talking about." Sometimes the words are varied and the G. A. R. is warned to be careful not to let politics interfere in its affairs. These frequent and constant notices and warnings make us certain that the two poles are not farther apart than the G. A. R. and political wire-works. But you must not question the politicians too closely, or they will tell you what the G. A. R. is worth to them.

Dr. Talmage's Friday evening lecture of the 3d inst., in which he entertained some rhapsodical ideas, quite of the Talmage quality, on the unity of nations, is sharply criticised in the Boston Record, by the hero of Boston common, Rev. William F. Davis, now in Suffolk jail, Boston, for preaching Christ in the public places of that city. Talmage paints in triumphant colors "the marriage of this land to Christ," with the marriage altar on the Rocky Mountains, whose "tops shall be covered with vineyards and orchards and green fields" through artificial irrigation, and then Christ "will take the hand of his bride of nations." Bro. Davis shows this a perversion of Scripture which in some men would be called wicked; but in the present case it may be but a little greater extravagance than trumpeting the advantages of Freemasonry and life insurance societies, instead of preaching the Gospel.

The Masons have their troubles, comments the Christian Conservator, on receiving from some unknown friend a pamphlet on the row among high-degree Masons of the Scottish rite, part of whom have control under Albert Pike claiming descent from the infidel Frederick the Great through Dr. Dalcho; another party fighting for first place under the Cerneau charter given by the French infidel Grand Lodge or Orient. The Ohio Masons are in much distress because the leaders of the Grand Lodge of the State have put their hand upon the Cerneau business to choke it. The pamphlet quotes as authority from the Grand Lodge of Illinois, which is an annihilator of conscience in lodge matters: "Liberty, to be governed by the dictates of one's own conscience, is not allowable in Masonry. A true and faithful Mason is to be governed by the laws and usages of the order. And if he cannot conform to these laws and usages, he can withdraw from the order or be expelled. A plea of 'conscience' will not accepted."

The address on "Christian Education," by Pres. C. A. Blanchard in the First Congregational church on the Sabbath, was afterward printed in the Inter-Ocean. The following was one of its striking paragraphs: "Intemperance, fortified by the greed of the seller, the appetite of the drinker, the idolatry of party and the indifference of the church; tobacco, its twin, making such inroads on the health of the young men that Germany, simply to save the army, forbids its sale to boys under 16, yet used to-day by ministers, teachers and parents, swallowing up millions of money and injuring body, brain and heart; secret societies, monopolizing offices, liberating criminals, stopping railroad trains, murdering men who want to work without joining a lodge, and threatening newspapers, banks, churches, and court houses with dynamite, yet supported by ministers who attend their dances, drinking festivals, and ride on their conclave trains which go thundering over the broken law of God; the social evil, hidden in its operations, protected from mention by its very monstrosity, yet coming to light in divorce courts and statistics of murder and suicide, beginning with a vile word and ending with a leap into a blazing hell;—all these; and the desire to get riches, but not by right, to make a display, careless of the means by which it becomes possible; the concentration of money power in the hands of a few, a gigantic devil-fish throwing a hundred arms about the industrial world, careless as to the suffering of thousands so that greed is satisfied,—here are the enemies which this generation must fight, and our leaders are to be trained in the Christian schools which are and are to be."

THE SITUATION.

BY BISHOP MILTON WRIGHT.

It may be worth while to inquire, What is the situation of the nation and the church as to secrecy? There is no question that the lodge controls millions of men and millions of money. Some of its orders have had and still have national recognition. Though perhaps less rarely they have also had church recognition. But, by the Government and by leading statesmen, anti-secrecy has no recognition. The press of the nation, and sometimes of the church, toadies to the lodge. The pulpit, if less obsequious, is not less subject to its power. Few politicians dare say nay to its behests, and many a preacher of the Gospel would turn pale at the thought of any collision with its operations. It indirectly and secretly officers both the body ecclesiastic and the body politic. Preachers denounce other forms of conformity to the world and boast their courage "to declare all the counsel of God," yet with the mental reservation that they let the lodge alone!

Secretism is on the alert to capture every popular movement, and generally is successful. And it is wily and cunning and relentless and powerful in its proscription of all who oppose its domination. And among its captured battle flags are the colors of many a host of Christians, taken while they slumbered, or as they yielded in shameless surrender. And while, to-day, there is more emphatic opposition, and with better organization, than a quarter of a century ago, the lodge-power has a greater membership and more outside support than ever before. Well, then, may the friends of light and truth ask what is to be done. Much has already been done, done in the right direction and well done. Much is now being done. But all is too little—it is inadequate to the great work before us.

It is quantity, rather than quality, that is lacking in anti-secrecy work. It is scarcely necessary to say what needs to be done. Convention after convention should be held. Lectures should come like the voice of doom to secrecy in every town and in every community. Sermons full of love of righteousness, and just as full of hatred of iniquity, must be preached from every faithful pulpit in the land. Anti-secrecy books should form circulating libraries, giving solid knowledge on the evils of darkness. Anti-secrecy periodicals should become household visitors wherever there are minds open to the reception of anti-secrecy truth. Tracts should speak to the thousands and millions, in season and out of season. And with all, and above all, more and more, fervent prayer should go up for the help of the Lord God. It is light and life only that are wanting to bring the reign of secrecy to an end. The Lord will help those who are zealous for him and for the salvation of Zion.

What more is to be done? We must deliver many of those now led prisoners by secret orders. Many such may be released. But we must also prevent the capture of thousands for whom secrecy, like a beast of prey, now lies in wait. But as essential as is the direct reduction of their numbers, it is equally essential that we checkmate them. We should break their control, make them unpopular, and the mass of their members will forsake them as a sinking ship is forsaken. Just as Christianity, if it can not gather every soul into its fold, or even the majority, can by its merits exert a mighty influence over a nation; so the anti-secrecy friends, the true friends of light, may, even before they obtain the majority, exercise an influence which will measurably control in the government and in all the better ranks of society. In many places it is already felt. We should go forward with courage. Truth, light and the right are on our side; and, blessed be God, we know that we are on Lord's side. Every inch gained is just so much of an eternal victory.

Dayton, O.

AN OUTSIDE VIEW OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

BY PROF. W. J. COLEMAN.

III.—THEIR BENEVOLENCE.

In presenting themselves to the world these societies call themselves and like to be called "benevolent societies." In the directories of cities, we find them arranged under the heading of "Benevolent Societies." Harper's Weekly, in an editorial some time ago commenting on John Quincy Adams, remarked it as one of the mistakes of his life that he was led off by the popular prejudice against a purely benevolent society, i. e., Masonry. One of the main arguments used by her orators to exalt Masonry is her benevolence. On this account she is styled by some admirers "the handmaid of the church." Men are many times led to join such societies because of their boasted benevolence. Let us examine this claim of benevolence.

How far does the benevolence of secret societies go? Does their charity end as well as begin at home? Does this good Samaritan give his care and his money to the neighbor who is not of his order, or nation, or religion, like the one we read of in the Bibles, or does this particular Samaritan drink his own wine, rub his oil on himself and pay out his money only for his own entertainment? And the facts, outside facts which everybody may know who cares to look, prove that these so-called benevolent societies are benevolent only to those in their own order. If the Samaritan in the Good Book had been of their persuasion, he, too, like the priest and the Levite, would have passed by on the other side. If they have anything of light that is of value, they keep it to themselves. No great benevolence there! Do they ever send missionaries to other and benighted lands with the precious truth of salvation? Do they ever send schoolmasters to the ignorant, as to the neglected Negroes of the South? When ignorance, licentiousness and crime make a hell of the lower sections of our great cities, do these orders ever make any effort to lift them up to light, purity and honesty? When Ireland moans with famine, when Kansas is eaten up with locusts, when Boston or Chicago is burned with fire, do these orders go down into their pockets to relieve the sufferers outside the lodges? When slavery and rebellion strike at the foundations of the Republic, do the orders even pass resolutions of loyalty? If they have, I have never heard of it. Had they done any one of these things, it would certainly have been published. They do not seek to hide their benevolence under a bushel, and are not in this matter anxious to keep their right hand from knowing what their left hand doeth.

Then we must conclude that their only benevolence is to themselves, and some would deny altogether that this is benevolence. But without taking up that point let us look for a moment at the benevolence that is found in the order, and that we may be fair, we will choose for our examination the largest, oldest and most mature of all the secret societies, that of Masonry. A philosophical writer tells us that no plant, man or institution should be judged in its growing state; but that the right time for judgment is when the thing judged is mature and is brought to something like the perfection of its kind. To take the oldest, largest and strongest of these societies for our study is therefore the part of common fairness. Let us look at the conditions of membership in this Masonic order, and consider as we do so the benevolence that is manfested.

In the first place, no one can get into the lodge without paying a good round membership fee—about twenty-five dollars. The man on the bottom round of the ladder in life, the man who needs a lift the most, will not have the money to give, and as he cannot get in, there is no benevolence for him. No man who has not enough of money to keep him for some time and a good deal to spare, need apply. Neither will any one be admitted unless he is quite likely to be able to earn his own living. He must not have lost an arm, a leg, or an eye. Such losses might tend to make him a burden, so into this benevolent society he cannot enter. An exception is made in favor of maimed soldiers, but as such receive a very fair pension from the government while they live, they also are inexpensive objects of benevolence. Then a youth under twenty-one is not received, and with him may stay out the old man who is no longer able to support himself. Last, but not least, the women are left out of this benevolence. They are workers, but it is at home where they do not take in money from the world. They are the weaker vessels, but the benevolence of this society does not shield them as a class from breakage by the shocks of adversity. No. They go out into the highways and hedges and gather in the rich, the strong, the mature, who are amply able to take care of themselves. They leave out the poor, the halt, the blind, the young, the old, and the women. They confine their charity to their own membership and those immediately dependent on them. Then they conclude that their peculiar and distinguishing mark by which they are to be known from all other associations is their benevolence. Well, it does seem as if there were a good deal of signboard up over the front door, for the amount of goods that are found on the shelves.

But there are societies that are more benevolent than the Masons. Yes, but they are not so much of secret orders as Masonry. Those societies with the least secrecy, as the Good Templars, the Grand Army of the Republic, or the Royal Arcanum, are the most benevolent of all secret orders. But these again do not come within speaking distance of the Christian church in benevolence. It appears, therefore, that organized secrecy and benevolence are antagonistic the one to the other, and that the more secrecy there is in a society the less benevolence; the less secrecy, the more benevolence, and where is no secrecy, there is the most benevolence. We see then how absurd it is to classify secret orders as benevolent societies. Their good offices are restricted to their own membership, and, so far as possible, all are kept out of that membership who will be likely to require the exercise of benevolence. What would become of the world's needy classes, if left to the tender mercies and benevolence of these benevolent societies?

"FAITH CURES."

BY ELDER N. CALLENDER.

Only a few months ago a case in which I feel the deepest interest came under my observation. A lady, a sister-in-law, of middle age, was afflicted with the worst form of dyspepsia—cancer in the stomach was the diagnosis of the doctors. After being given up by them as hopeless she went with a few praying friends and one of her attending doctors to the Great Physician, and was "made whole." In September I saw her hale and happy as a girl. It was a veritable cure by simple faith in God's promises.

If God's people have, as a rule, lost faith in divine healing, the misfortune, as well as the fault, is their own. If there is only one cure where there should be scores, it argues only the faithlessness of the people. No faith and weak faith are no new things under the sun. "And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief," will apply to too many places and too many ages.

My first position is that we cannot look for the cure of all who are sick. That God is able to heal all and to raise the dead also, is not to be doubted. There never was an age since man became mortal that all classes did not die, and yet we presume in every single age of the world God has healed thousands in answer to prayer. God never surrendered his sovereign power over sickness and death to human importunity and volition. God answered Hezekiah's prayer and added fifteen years to his time. He heard the prayers of Nineveh and saved the lives of a million people, who humbled themselves before God. The holy Paul, however, besought the Lord thrice that the thorn in his flesh might be taken away from him and obtained the answer, blessed answer, "My grace is sufficient for thee." Full of faith as was Paul, yet he failed of the faith cure sought with such importunity. Even Jesus sought with submission the removal of "this cup" and "was heard in the thing which he feared." The thing which Jesus embraced in "this cup" was probably included in God's answer to that prayer. The point of all loyal prayer is, Thou canst if thou wilt. To thousands of such prayers, God responds, "I will; be thou clean."

Not long ago I gave in public the fact at the head of this article, with some comments on faith cures. Soon after a young lady said to me, How is it, elder, that you believe so strongly in faith cures, and still are so afflicted with neuralgia? My answer may, in substance, be gathered from the above lines.

My second proposition is, that though all ailments are not curable by faith, yet many cases are and should be so healed. To hear a Christian deny the correctness of this position would greatly surprise us. Yet the way the subject is generally treated shows a measure of unbelief, which will account for the fact that there are solitary examples of faith cures where there should be hundreds, because the facts of faith cures are held in doubt. We are told that the age of miracles is gone by. Were I informed that God has withdrawn his supervision and his power from this earth I should confidently deny it. Has the Great Physician withdrawn his "power on earth to forgive sins?" His power to heal souls, of transforming souls, raising them from the dead, creating them anew, is as much a miracle as raising Lazarus—yea, to raise the soul is the greater work, and God is this hour doing this all over the world.

All Christendom recognizes the fact of divine healing, both in theory and in practice. Where is the Christian who never prayed for the recovery of sick friends? And how many times God has heard that prayer, offered "with strong crying and tears," you may not know. But that there are now living men, women and children spared in answer to submissive supplication, there ought to be no doubt. What kind of a Christian would he be who should see his child or the mother of his children go down to death's gate and never ask God to heal the sick? Even those who never prayed till then will, in such an emergency, ask God's people to pray, and pray themselves for the recovery of their loved ones. The same spirit that carried the "impotent folk" by the most inventive and urgent means into the presence of Jesus to be healed, would to-day, under proper instructions, do the same thing, with similar results. God has the power of life, and the devil the power of death. Shall we accept Satan's alternative without even an appeal to the court of life?

That unbelief can and will file many subtle objections to all this we clearly see. Even Jesus had to meet the polemics of hell with the argument, "It is written." Let us follow his example. It is written, down in our heart, so indelibly that even Satan can not entirely obliterate the truth, that the Father of Life will, in answer to prayer, heal the sick. Accepting the general facts that all people will pass from this world either by death or by being translated, and that God may not always restore the sick through the prayers of faith, our position remains unimpeached, that "the prayer of faith shall heal the sick." God has never recalled this remedy from this sin-smitten earth. Why should any think he has? While there is no intimation of this there are both divine pledges and facts to back their fulfillment covering all the ages. It is said there ought to be facts enough to settle the question. How many would settle it? The atheist cannot find facts enough to settle the question of the existence of the God of the Bible. There are enough to convince demons, and while "they believe and tremble" "the fool says in his heart there is no God."

Many, like a New York anarchist lately on the witness stand, believe in a philosophical god, who is the "Grand Architect of the Universe"—too far off to be interested in the concerns of this world. Are not many religious leaders getting hyper-philosophical? If our philosophy were in harmony with scientific truth we could not have too much of it. God's philosophy is in his books of nature and revelation, and the two are in sweet and eternal harmony. No fact can be found that is not in harmony with every other fact in the realm of nature, revelation and grace. There are no great religious principles that cannot be assailed by unbelief. A blind heart can rule God out of his dominions in no time—simply by refusing to see and hear.

My next argument is that thousands suffer untold miseries and many of these die before they should, for want of a Bible faith in the great Physician. If men may by folly and wickedness shorten their own lives, (and who will dispute this,) then the same may be done by staying away from the Divine Healer, and failing of the right treatment. Right here let the Bible speak. Asa, one of the very best of Judah's rulers, after demolishing idolatry, fell by trusting men. God kindly sent a "seer" to set him right. He shut him up in prison, in his rage, and "oppressed some of the people at the same time." (2 Chron. 16). Like all Bible accounts, the story is short. See verse 12: "And Asa, in the thirty-ninth year of his reign, was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great: yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians." See also verse 13. In his wars, he fell by trusting in men instead of the God of battles, and then repeated this fatal error by turning from God to the physicians, "and Asa slept with his fathers," etc. Why not take to the best Physician first? In substance, the story of the woman in Mark 5: 25-35 is that of thousands. Only a few of these ever get near enough to Jesus to "touch the hem of his garment," and be healed, see verses 27-34.

In conclusion, allow us to say that "faith cures," though not in circumstances the same as in the introduction of Christianity into the world, are not changed in the grand principles and facts. If we call the family doctor at all, better take to the Great Healer first. He is near, and no time need be lost, even if the family doctor must be sent for, as a part and a condition of the cure. His prayer may be the condition, if a Christian physician.

THE INFLUENCE OF TRUTH ON THE SINCERE HEART.

BY REV. G. M. ELLIOTT.

Bishop Watson says: "Whosoever is afraid of submitting any question, civil or religious, to the test of free discussion, is more in love with his own opinion than with truth."

Apply this statement to members of secret orders. Every one that has ever talked with Freemasons, or with members of secret societies about the lodge, knows how unwilling they are to discuss the subject. Freemasons, in particular, often become very angry when you attempt to consider with them the principles of the lodge, and seek from them arguments to support their position. We have known them to fly into a rage and refuse to talk any longer on the subject. Why is this? Is not this rather a proof that the position they assume is not tenable?

As a rule Christians are willing to discuss in a friendly spirit their different convictions with regard to the truth they profess. They are ever ready to explain and make clear all the doctrines and principles of the particular faith which they prefer and which they have adopted as expressing their interpretation of the Scriptures. Further, they are willing to use every lawful argument that will make every principle which they profess perfectly clear to those who may not be fully acquainted with the doctrines of their belief. Why is this? Because they believe they have the truth. They feel that they have accepted the truth. They are willing to bring their deeds to the light that they may be made manifest that they are wrought in God. They are not ashamed of the truth. The truth makes them free. But with members of secret societies it is quite different. They are unwilling to argue the principles of the lodge. They know they will not bear discussion and ventilation. They are convinced that they love their own opinions more than they love the truth.

Herein is a moral obtuseness. Paul would have God be true though it made every man a liar. But Masons would make God a liar and his truth false, in order to support the lodge. Let men get clear conceptions of truth and let them be inspired with a love for the truth and they cannot cleave to the lodge. A sincere lover of the truth cannot forsake it for that which is false; neither can he forsake it for that that is even questionable. Men whose minds are enlightened by the Word of God, and whose hearts have been operated upon by his Holy Spirit, will hardly be more attracted by the empty and unholy ceremonies of the lodge than by the truth and ordinances of the church.

The conclusion then is that these orders cannot abide discussion. They cannot stand against argument supported by Scripture. When those who call themselves Christians, and, unfortunately, have been entrapped by the lodge, begin to argue and discuss the question, drawing their weapons from the armory of the Scriptures, if they are sincere, and are faithful lovers of the truth, they are bound to quit the lodge. We have known persons to leave the lodge, when they became Christians. We have known persons to quit the lodge as they grew in grace, and thereby attained to clearer views of truth. There is a power in truth. Where Christ reigns in the soul, this power is irresistible in its influence.

It is then with the success and triumph of truth that we may hope to see the lodge power wane and go down. It cannot stand before truth. It is built on falsehood and deceit. These cannot dwell in a sincere heart, and hence cannot form a basis on which the fabric of Masonry can rest. Let truth prevail; let its power be felt; let its influence reach every heart and how grand the church, the Gospel of our Lord Jesus, will appear in the eyes of all, to meet all the demands of souls!

THE JESUIT LODGE IN AMERICA.

The steady and stealthy encroachments of Popery in political matters, and of late in educational affairs, we earnestly denounce; and the interferences in these and other matters by the ambitious, unscrupulous, and unsanctified horde of foreign and American Jesuits we detest more than we have language to express.

Before reaching the school question we may speak a few words in general as to these ecclesiastical intriguers.

In many respects they are a remarkable order of men. They dress in all garbs, speak all languages, know all customs, and are everywhere present, yet not always recognized. They are in South America, in Cuba, in the Canadas, in every state of Europe, in the Indies, in China, in Japan, in Africa, and on the islands of the sea, everywhere stealthily at work. They are despotic in Spain, constitutional in England, bigots in Rome, idolaters in India; they study Confucius in China, and are Democrats in America. They are Democrats here, because they share or expect to share the emoluments of Democratic victories. The dexterity with which they can make political somersaults is both amusing and astonishing. France, which has afforded the best of opportunities for this kind of accomplishments, having been successively monarchical, democratic, and consular, again monarchical, and now being republican, in her form of government, has found Papacy under her political leaders, the Jesuits, changing with every political change. Under Philip II., St. Louis, Louis XI., Charles VIII., Henry IV., Louis XIII., Louis XIV., who had each bowed before the papal power, the Jesuits were on the side of monarchy. In the Republic of 1792 they were republicans. Under Napoleon they were monarchists; and now again they are republicans. They are anything whereby they can the better control the people and the government. And their oath of allegiance to any country or to any government, as can easily be shown, is worth no more than the paper upon which it is written. These men accept papal infallibility, and with it the ultramontane interpretation of the power of the Pope over the world; they hold that if one offends the Pope one offends God. Their theory, as stated by Dr. Orestes Brownson, a Roman Catholic, is this:

"No civil government, be it a monarchy, an aristocracy, a democracy, or any possible combination of any two or all of them, can be a wise, just, efficient, or durable government....without the Catholic church; and without the Papacy there is and can be no Catholic church....The state is only an inferior court, and is bound to receive the law from the supreme court." (the Vatican).

The following quotation from the Unum Sanctum of Pius IX. is their political creed:

"The spiritual sword is to be used by the church, but the carnal sword for the church. The one in the hand of the priest, the other in the hands of kings and soldiers, but at the will and pleasure of the priest. It is right that the temporal sword and authority be subject to the spiritual power..... Moreover, we declare, say, define, and pronounce that every human being should be subject to the Roman pontiff."

James Anthony Froude, under the heading, "What a Catholic Majority could do in America," shows clearly the political and educational intentions of Roman Catholicism when in the ascendency:

"We agree that the spiritual part of man ought to rule the material; the question is where the spiritual part of man resides. The Protestant answers that it is in the individual conscience and reason; the Catholic says that it is in the church, and that it speaks through bishops and priests. Thus, every true Catholic is bound to think and act as his priest tells him, and a republic of true Catholics becomes a theocracy administered by the clergy. It is only as long as they are a small minority that they can be loyal subjects under such a Constitution as the American. As their numbers grow they will assert their principles more and more. Give them the power, and the Constitution will be gone. A Catholic majority, under spiritual direction, will forbid liberty of worship, and will try to forbid liberty of conscience. It will control education; it will put the press under surveillance; it will punish opposition with excommunication, and excommunication will be attended with civil disabilities."

The United States are to-day the paradise of this most dangerous order in the papal church, the Jesuits. They have been and are excluded from some countries which are nominally Catholic; but here they have the same freedom as that of our most patriotic citizens. There are no positions from which they are excluded. There are no national movements with which they are not familiar. They seem to have eyes within and without. They are in our marts of business; they are in our army and navy; they are in our halls of legislation; they are upon our school committees, the most sacred office in this Republic, and we do not know who they are. Priests and Jesuits in league are already assuming the government of our largest cities.

And it is freely talked—we do not know what foundation there is for the talk—that Puritan Boston has in its government Roman Catholics who are Jesuitical lay workers, and who are sworn to carry out the commands of this ecclesiastical craft which is inimical to every civil government on earth. We should breathe easier if we thought these charges were untrue.

Under the leadership of this Jesuitical order the Roman Catholic church will be found to side with one party, then with another, until each is so weakened that she can rule both.

She will join hands with infidels against Protestants, but having gained her object, she will consign both allies and foes to contempt or to flames.

She will make contracts and compacts, any number of them, but when she believes herself powerful enough to trample them under foot, if for her advantage, she will do so without hesitation or scruple.

We said a moment ago that the Jesuits were Democrats in the United States because of real or expected patronage in some form from the Democratic party. They hold the entire church membership in support of that party. But the day is coming when the Democratic party will feel that it has been a great fool, the chief of fools, in selling itself to Popery and the Jesuits. The day is coming when these Jesuits and the church which is under their tyrannical dictation and domination will no longer need the support of the Democratic party, or when they can make better terms with some other party. On that day these intolerant ecclesiastics with consummate and merciless coolness and dispatch will cut the throat of the unsuspecting and now triumphant Democracy.

Without difficulty we can imagine, should a certain prominent Republican who shows much tenderness to Irishmen and papists, be the next Republican nominee for the Presidency, as seems likely to be the case, that then the Democratic party, to no purpose, will plead and gasp for papal support, but will find her heel on its vitals. Possibly, though, a big auction sale of the papal vote to the highest bidder is in store for the Republic at the next Presidential election.

Why cannot the two great political parties in this country unite, or rather why cannot loyal citizens in all the different parties unite in unfurling this political banner: There shall be no further compromise with these enemies of the Republic. Let nothing more be talked as to Democratic or Republican measures and victories until questions relating to the independence from ecclesiastical dictation of hundreds of thousands of our citizen voters, and questions relating to the education of our future voters, are settled, and until it is known whether the American people or the Pope at Rome is to rule the United States of America.

Though the ultimate object in this paper is to show the character of the parochial school movement under Jesuitical management, yet we have deemed it necessary first of all, in this general way, to show what are the instincts and intents of these crafty ecclesiastics with whom the Republic has to do. Enough has been said to justify the statement that to thoughtful minds it is well nigh appalling that these most pronounced, unscrupulous, and relentless enemies of Protestatism and of free institutions are taking in hand the education, or rather the training (it is not an education), of hundreds of thousands of our future citizen-voters.

MARDI GRAS.

The carnival, which is filling New Orleans this week with uproar and folly, is fitly described and characterized by Rev. B. A. Imes of Memphis in the Living Way as follows:

Whence comes the Mardi Gras festival?

The name literally signifies "fat Tuesday." The French way of designating Shrove Tuesday which precedes Ash Wednesday the first day of Lent.

It has been extensively celebrated in Rome and Paris. In the latter city, according to a writer in the Library of Universal Knowledge, it has long been the custom to lead in procession a fat or prize ox, (boeuf gras—whence Mardi gras) the ox is followed by a child in a triumphal car, the child being called the "butchers' king." The entire day and night are spent in the wildest revelry, sometimes degenerating into unrestrained license.

New Orleans and Memphis are the only American cities mentioned as imitating this foreign exhibition of clownish debauchery. It is difficult to conceive of intelligent men assuming the false attitudes and playing the fool in the manner which characterizes the performances of the carnival It is not less than a revival of heathenism in an elaborate and expensive fashion.

The Knights of Momus are leading characters, as is that fabled dignitary himself—and who was Mo-mus? In fabulous history he is the god of raillery, or the jester who ridiculed the gods and men. He is the personification of mocking censure.

The "mystic krewe" of Comus is another part of the folly revellers—and who is Comus? In Greek mythology Comus is the god of mirth and he is represented in the writings of Philostratus as a youth with wine-flushed face, the child of Bacchus and Circe. He is made like his father but more like his mother, with power of sorcery whereby he could turn the human face into the brutal form of some wild beast, and while kept in ignorance of their changed condition his victims were made to forget all the purities of life, "to roll with pleasure in a sensuality." This is Comus.

Our city and all the country round and whoever will come from abroad are to be invited to "such a feast." The day is dedicated by King Rex and his followers to these gods of heathen revelry and sensual lust, Comus and Momus!

Every Christian man ought to know that these abominations of ancient heathenism were very offensive to Jehovah. Their attractions are always an alluring combination of music and song and flowers and wine, and the scale descends by graceful steps to low and base sensuality and lust. Why should a people blessed with all the good influences which come from Christianity, the faith of our God, do anything to make popular these heathenish festivities? "But it is only for amusement" they will say. That is the pretext, but the men who subscribe money to it mean business.

As to the moral side, what I have to say may have no weight with any one interested in the festival, yet I can not avoid the conviction nor withhold the testimony that these things both in origin and character must be most insulting to God.

NOTES OF THE CRESCENT CITY.

BY REV. A. J. CHITTENDEN.

The visitor who locates on the north side of New Orleans will write of a continental city. If he chooses to room on the south (S. W.) side he will write of an American city. The two styles of civilization are nowhere so conspicuously in contrast as New Orleans. Many of the residences of the American side are beautiful and their grounds roomy and well set with trees. Wooden buildings are the more desirable for residence in the New Orleans winter, and the Yankee element have discovered the fact in time to provide relatively dry walls for their houses. On St. Charles avenue, either side is well enough built for the dwellers of Michigan avenue, or the North Side, Chicago. But Chicago cannot have the magnolia or the orange tree loaded with fruit in January.

Of course the colored man is everywhere, but he likewise is an "American." I judge that he is generally as happy as any other man here. One thing pains me, and it is their apparent effort to repress their native emotionalism and characteristic poetry in obedience to a new style of religious reserve which they have come to regard as the more polite and "high-toned." Maybe I had an African ancester way back, where Darwin explored, but I confess that the best praying and the best singing I have heard in a colored meeting was by some genuine relict of the old plantation times; and I don't believe my interest was all in the novelty of the style. The ex-slave cannot sing our songs; and we can't sing his. The nearest approach to a half-way ground is in the Gospel hymns, which the Lord evidently provided as a kind of a musical bridge between the two races.

The African Congregational church, under the auspices of the A. M. A., has refined its emotionalism out just a little too much. Now and then a genuine old-time song comes in, and then the good old mother in Israel, who might have been Moses' wife's sister, will glow all over her ebony face, and the richest tones ever uttered by stage celebrities, did not surpass in pathos and spiritual expression her unsophisticated music. I would give a week's board to one old lady to have my church hear one of her prayers. It was prayer set to music. But it was sincere, and therefore it was above cant. It was intelligent, direct, eminently simple and practical—all in an angelic wave of cadence, and with a voice utterly inimitable by any mortal who had not been born and worn to it through a history which still lingers in their music.

Last evening while the meeting at the Baptist church was waiting for the hour of commencement, I could hear an occasional timid voice on the female side of the house. But it would die away at the end of a sentence. Again it would venture to "disturb" the new order by a little stronger tone, and again it would die away. Finally some good, generous brother on the other side of the house took up the strain with a tune that seemed to announce "liberty to the children of God," and a genuine outflowing of pent-up song filled the whole place. I will try to get the music and fetch it home, only it can't be printed. "Will you go down into Jerdan and be saved?" was the song and the refrain both; only each verse commenced with a "Come brother," mother, sister, etc., "will you go—will you go down into Jer-dan and be saved?"

The entire space behind the pulpit was covered with the scene of the baptism of Christ, in which the artist had given John a somewhat better appearance than Christ himself. It was not a bad picture, though inferior to those hung in the St. Louis cathedral. And it seemed to me that a shading towards Catholic reverence for a scene and a ceremony was very discernible both in the burden of the Baptist song and in the choice of their subject for the painter. There is no protection from rude ritualism except in avoiding undue emphasis on any form or variation of custom whether in government or sacrament. Southern evangelism had become a semi-Catholic ritualism, from which some other Congregationalism must lift the people without leaving their heartiness and simplicity behind. But, with all the crudities that have attached themselves to the Christianity of the ex-slave, the lowest form of sincere Christianity in this city is sky-high above the reliquaries of heathenism that are to be displayed here next week in the Mardi Gras pageantry.

REFORM NEWS.

ATTENTION, PENNSYLVANIANS!

Some of our anti-secret friends in Pennsylvania think that we should be doing more to advance the reform in our State. And believing that with a larger State organization much more can be accomplished, I propose with the aid of existing State officers to reorganize the State Association with temporary officers, until it shall be convenient to hold a State Convention for the election of permanent officers and for any other business which it may be desirable to transact. I desire to hear from every friend of the anti-secret cause residing in the State, either by mail or through the Cynosure.

All friends writing to me will confer a favor by naming their choice for any or all of the following offices: President, Eastern District Vice-president, Middle District Vice-president, Western District Vice-president, Treasurer, Secretary, Corresponding Secretary, Eastern District Lecturer, Middle District Lecturer, Western District Lecturer, State Lecturer.

I also desire to have the name and address of every man or woman residing in the State who is competent and willing to lecture in his or her own town, city or county. Any suggestions relating to any matter connected with the State work will be thankfully received and carefully considered. I already have some very important suggestions to lay before Pennsylvanians through the Cynosure if a reorganization can be completed. All persons writing to me and requiring an answer by mail will please enclose a stamp.

Now, friends, let us hear from you; and give us some evidence that you really desire to oppose secret societies. EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

York, Pa.

BROWN HOLLOW, Lackawanna Co., Pa., Jan. 23, 1888.

DEAR FRIEND CHALFANT:—If you could, by writing to reliable men, in our State, inaugurate the work anew, I will help what I can, in any place where I have the ability to work. It is a burning shame that our great State should lie dormant on this vital question. I am grieved that it is thus. You have not only my consent, but request, to do all you can at reorganization of the anti-secret forces of the State. NATHAN CALLENDER.

NEW POINTS IN OHIO.

A SERMON IN HIGH STREET CHURCH, COLUMBUS.

ASHLEY, O., Feb. 10, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am working the region about Columbus, prior to a union meeting of the German Lutheran churches of that city, which I am to address next week. Returning from my trip to Athens county, of which I spoke in my last, I spent Sabbath with wife at home. We had the pleasure of listening to a very excellent sermon given by Dr. A. H. Hiatt of Wheaton in his son's church. His theme was the indwelling kingdom, which produces righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. In speaking of the peace and happiness produced by this kingdom he drew a very graphic picture of two men. The one poor, and working hard for daily bread, lays aside his rude impliments of husbandry, enters his humble cot to partake of a frugal meal; the other lives in a mansion in which are heard music and dancing. The one has the peace of the indwelling Saviour, the other the perplexities of the world. The angel views the two and says of the former, behold how rich; the latter, wretched, poor and blind. The two die. The man from the cabin has a simple burial attended by few. The rich man is buried with great pomp and display. All the lodges to which he belonged pass extensive resolutions of condolence, file out in grand procession, go through their mummeries, drop sprigs of evergreen, and ticket the deceased to their various grand lodges. O who would not choose the life and death of the former in the great day of reckoning!

Part of this week has been spent at Lewis Center, Africa and Delaware. In each of these places I have secured new Cynosure readers. On Wednesday evening I attended prayer meeting at Africa. (This name was given it in anti-slavery days because of the principles of the residents.) I spoke of my mission and a vote was taken requesting me to return and lecture, which I hope to do in the near future. Some contributed to the State work. Bro. Geo. Richey, a veteran reformer, is serving this church with great acceptability.

I am now at the home of Bro. L. Powers. There has heretofore been no opportunity for lectures at this point. The Friend Quakers have just erected a meeting-house toward which brethren Whipple, Powers and other reformers have paid liberally. We will doubtless arrange meetings.

So the Lord opens the way and the work moves on. W. B. STODDARD.

THE NEW ORLEANS LETTER.

BRETHREN STODDARD AND HINMAN FIND MANY FRIENDS AND FEW FOES AMONG PASTORS AND EDITORS.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 7, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I had intended to give the laboring oar of correspondence into the hands of Bro. Stoddard, while he is in the city, but his bad state of health and many pressing duties admonish me to resume my work. At no time during the winter have roses ceased to bloom in the gardens here. Since we have been here there has not been even an approach to frost, and now the broad banana leaves, which had been nipped in the early part of the winter, are unfolding and give promise of the rare occurrence here, that they will bear some fruit. Violets abound and now the white clover is blossoming by the road side.

On Sabbath Bro. Stoddard preached in the Central Congregational church to a good congregation. At night I preached at the Straight University to a full house. On the Sabbath previous, I had preached in two other Congregational churches, and during the week in a Baptist church.

Yesterday Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard and myself visited Leland University and attended a meeting of the colored Baptist ministers of the city. We listened to a very able lecture by Bro. Mitchel, after which Bro. Stoddard gave notice of our approaching convention, and explained its objects. We then visited the Freedmen's Orphan Asylum, where we met a large number of Baptist ministers from the city and other parts of the State. Here we were cordially received; tracts were distributed and the objects of our convention were stated and explained. The remarks of Bro. Stoddard were heartily endorsed by the chairman of the meeting and a warm interest was expressed in our movement.

We then visited New Orleans University, the M. E. school for the colored youth of the city. We were kindly received by Pres. Atkinson, who expressed his high appreciation of the Christian Cynosure and an interest in our work. He promised to give notice of the convention. We met here, and had a pleasant visit with Prof. Lowe, a brother of Prof. Lowe of Wheaton College, who also expressed an interest in our movement.

To-day we have been at the office of the South western Presbyterian and the South-western Christian Advocate. Dr. Smith of the Presbyterian had some knowledge of our movement, spoke of the pleasure of visiting with Pres. J. Blanchard when he was here, and promised to write an editorial notice of the Convention. The Methodist editor asked us to write a notice, which we did, and he promised to insert it in his next issue.

We then called on Col. Lewis, one of the leading Republican politicians, a candidate on their State ticket, and delegate to the Republican National Convention. Col. Lewis is a high Mason and intensely devoted to the order. Personally he was very courteous, but was surrounded by a knot of Masons whose devotion to Masonry destroyed all sense of obligation to be courteous, candid, or truthful. We did not waste much time in such company. I have found that whenever in this city you get into a distinctively political atmosphere, of either political party, it is always redolent of tobacco, whisky and beer, and intensely hostile to moral and social reforms.

It is not often, especially in the cities of the South, that I find people who are both able and willing to offer hospitality to an agent of the N. C. A. But one exception is Pres. Hitchcock of Straight University, who presides so ably over an institution now numbering over five hundred students, and who has always most kindly received and entertained me. I also found, much to my surprise, my old time friend and brother Mr. C. W. Sterry, of Pontiac, Ill., who is here with his family, and attending to a valuable property he has in this city. Bro. Sterry has been a reader of the Cynosure for many years, an earnest friend of its principles, and a generous contributor to its funds. He too gave me a cordial welcome to his home, and as it was nearer than Straight University to our place for meeting, I accepted it and have been stopping with him and his most amiable family. I went with them to the Ames M. E. church on Sabbath morning. This is the only white M. E. church in the city. The pastor, Rev. McLaughlin, preached an able sermon. He had heard of our movement and expressed an interest in it and promised to attend the convention. He has invited me to preach for his people next Sabbath evening. The outlook is good, but our trust is not in appearances but in Jehovah. Let prayer be continually offered for our success.

H. H. HINMAN.

THE FRIENDS IN IOWA.

BRO. HAWLEY AT OSKALOOSA.—WELCOMED BY CHURCHES AND COLLEGES.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From New Sharon I came to Oskaloosa. Here I found some six or seven of the churches holding revival services. I preached for the United Presbyterian and Free Methodist brethren. I found Rev. Morrow, pastor of the U. P. church, deeply interested in the progress of the anti-secret society reform, and ready to co-operate in the diffusion of literature to enlighten the people and turn them away from the snares that lodgery has set for their feet. By his co-operation the Cynosure was furnished to the reading room of the Y. M. C. A. of Oskaloosa; and I shall see that he has other literature for distribution among the people. At the Free Methodist church the N. C. A. literature is freely given to those who attend the church services.

While in Oskaloosa I attended a sacramental service at the Free Methodist church with Rev. C. E. Harroun, chairman of Oskaloosa and Fairfield districts, and preached in the evening, besides rendering what help I could to the pastor in revival meetings he was holding. Bro. Harroun is in hearty sympathy with our reform work and will aid in the circulation of anti-lodge literature and in the holding of conventions.

A united effort of all the churches and individuals who testify against the lodge is needed to save our churches from the corrupting domination of Masonry and emancipate our courts from the thralldom of a secret despotism. Let those who can distribute tracts or use pamphlets or books as a circulating library in your locality. Write me at Wheaton, Ill., as I desire to secure trusty helpers in the circulation of anti-secret society literature all over the State of Iowa.

In company with the pastor of the United Presbyterian church, I called upon the pastor of the Baptist church. He is well posted in the evils of lodgery, having spent some time in a portion of Wisconsin where the lodge system has been thoroughly discussed. We found him in the midst of a revival meeting and happy in the fact that some had been won to Christ.

I also visited the pastor of the Christian church. He is not a lodge man. I gave him the Cynosure with the understanding that he will use it not only for his own edification but also for the education of his church in the principles of reform. I also visited Oskaloosa College, which is under the control and patronage of the Christian church. I conversed with the president and found that he was not a member of any secret society, and gave him some literature with the assurance that he would distribute it among the faculty.

I also visited Pres. Trueblood, who is at the head of Penn College in Oskaloosa. Like Pres. Johnson of Oskaloosa College, Pres. Trueblood has never been a member of any secret society; and he is laboring with good success so to educate the young men of Penn College that none of them will ever become members of any secret society.

The President outlined to me some of the arguments he had used in the education of his young men against being ensnared by the lodge. To the argument that if a man is a Mason he will find friends wherever he goes, "I," said he, "oppose the fact that I have traveled across the continent and in Europe; and I have never failed, simply as a man, to find friends wherever I have gone. The logical deduction drawn by the students from this fact is: If I, as a man, can realize what is promised to another man as a Mason, why should I enthrall my manhood by becoming a Mason? Why bind myself to keep all the secrets of a Master Mason except those that refer to murder and treason, and all the secrets of a Companion Royal Arch Mason, though they refer to murder and treason? Why, for the sake of an advantage that I can have simply as a man, join myself to a clan whose covenants are a conspiracy to defeat the equal administration of justice in the courts and the proper administration of discipline in the church?" The president also spoke of the high pretentions of the lodge system to charity and benevolence; and showed that their system of giving that they might receive as much again is as devoid of the true charity of the Gospel as is the heart of an unregenerate man of the spirit of Christ.

President Trueblood spoke also of the faithfulness of the Oskaloosa Friends to the principle of non-fellowship with the secret orders as manifest in refusing membership to an Odd-fellow who professed conversion to Christ and whose wife was a member of the Friends' church. So kindly as well as firmly was this position maintained that the respect and friendship of the applying Odd-fellow was retained and he admitted that a spirit of self-sufficiency or self-righteous dependence upon their own works for salvation is fostered by Odd-fellowship.

I gathered from the President's remarks that the spirit of revival that is prevailing in the Friends' church, operating to quicken into life the long-cherished principles of Anti-masonry as held by the Friends, has resulted favorably in separating between the church and the lodge. While I rejoice in the prospect that this church is to be free from the seductive power of Masonry and its kindred orders I would appeal to the Friends, as the agent of the Iowa Christian Association, to aid, as far as possible, in freeing less favored churches from the corrupting thralldom of the lodge system, that the organized deism of Masonry and Odd-fellowship and kindred orders may not have the tacit endorsement that so many churches give by receiving to membership the impenitent devotees of the Christless worships of the lodge system.

I must not omit to mention that I found Pres. Trueblood in the midst of a cheering revival among his students in Penn College. All the members of the Senior Class are now Christians, and I think he said all of the Junior Class also. Let us all unite in prayer that everywhere the Spirit of God may be poured out and the churches purified and sinners rescued from the snares of Satan and drawn to Jesus.

C. F. HAWLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE OLD CITY OF YORK BEGINS TO READ.

YORK, Pa., Jan. 31, 1888.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In December, 1887, I scattered about six thousand tracts and other documents against secret societies in this city. They consisted mainly of Mr. Moody's tract, "Dead Horses," "Masonry in the Family," "Boys who Hope to be Men," "Sons of Veterans," and "In which Army are You?" I informed each person receiving these tracts that they were against secret societies; and I did this to give all a chance to unload their minds and bless me if they desired to do so.

Although I often go on anti-secret raids in all parts of York, it is about ten years since I stirred up the old city by such a complete advance all along the line. As the sly and cunning sons and daughters of secrecy and darkness, like the Hessians at Trenton, were enjoying life, snug in their comfortable winter quarters, I crossed the Deleware river, so to speak, and completely discomfited them, horse, foot and dragoons. The Hessians at Trenton could not have been more surprised at the sight of General Washington's ragged and barefooted Pennsylvania troops on that cold winter morning than the Hessians of the British lodges in York were when I charged through the streets with my regiment of "Dead Horses," one thousand strong, all neighing and snorting in the most ferocious manner. The truth is, there is nothing so deadly as the dead horse, or the writer who can make a terrible cavalry charge with a regiment of dead horses. Hereafter the Freemasons of York will not have the nightmare, it will be the dead horse that will disturb their midnight slumbers.

While distributing these tracts I did not forget my precious jewel, which is the most unmasonic tongue I know of. It kept wagging away about Jesuit plots and conspiracies, copperhead folly, the bloody rebellion, concealed deadly societies, the inglorious doctrines and principles of Freemasonry and all death-penalty associations, and the criminal tendencies of all secret organizations.

I think the forty ministers of York know about forty reasons why they had better fortify their churches against the secret lodge. I think I gave the battalion of York lawyers some new law points. I believe I made the regiment of York doctors understand that the secrecy quacks are even more dangerous than the medical quacks. And if the people of York generally are not as wide awake as they should be, it may be said that they now know much more than they did before I called upon them.

Hundreds of men and women spoke their thoughts freely against the lodge. Many young men told me that friends and relatives have warned them against all secret associations. Many said they were now investing their money in building associations and other legal companies. Many denounced the lodge sharpers in strong language. And only a dozen or so were abusive to me, one of these being a childish old woman.

These excellent tracts will certainly strengthen the powerful undercurrent which is now running strongly against the secret lodges; and I think it will be safe to date the downfall of secret orders in York from this successful effort. Those who are engaged in the business of hoodwinking and outwitting the people of York will have a harder road to travel than McClellan's army had in its marches through the swamps below Richmond. And "so mote it be!"

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

GEO. W. NEEDLES "GETS THERE."

OLD GENTRY COUNTY REDEEMED.

DARLINGTON, Mo., Feb. 6, 1888.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have just returned from a trip to north Gentry county. Spent some time with G. W. Needles, the veteran Anti-mason. Fourteen years ago he started the American Freeman with the declaration to run until the saloon should be driven from Albany. He did that, though Rev. J. D. Nutting was horse-whipped in the public postoffice by a burly saloon ruffian. The fight was against the lodge and the saloon—Siamese twins. Rathbun, Ronayne, Hinman, Stoddard, and the Blanchards, all have visited these parts and done noble work. They will be interested to know that the saloon power of Gentry county has met its Waterloo and that last Thursday Local Option in this strong Democratic county carried by a majority of four hundred and forty-eight votes, vindicating the years of agitation and endeavor. To-day G. W. Needles, whom the Democratic organ of the county charges with being the "Daddy of Local Option in Gentry county," finds the majority have come around to him and are moving on to State prohibition.

There are more outspoken Anti-masons in Gentry county to-day than ever before and the way is now open for increased agitation in that line. Every temperance victory cripples the lodge, so allied and sympathetic are rum and Masonry. The suppression of one means the destruction of the other. More than forty Missouri counties are under local option and the anti-lodge agitation is rapidly gaining force. The next political campaign is ominious and the old parties are fearful and the outlook is foreboding. The friends of reform are buoyant and determined and are closing up the ranks and uniting for the contest. But more anon.

THE LODGE CONSPIRACY AGAINST AMERICAN LIBERTIES.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I view Freemasonry as at war with the free institutions of the United States, and wish the Cynosure success in all its efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. Freemasonry is in co-operation with all the secret societies, and over-rules nearly all the churches. Its religion is to tell outsiders lies; and its god is the devil. They will not have any Jesus Christ to help them through death.

To have a free government requires all the intelligence and brains of the country. But when a few men of the "Royal Arch Masons" get the control of the government it always tends to despotism. This is the condition of the United States to-day. In the summers of 1880, and also of 1884, the Republican and Democratic parties had delegations from the State of California to the Chicago Presidential conventions, who were all Freemasons, without exception. All the political offices in the State to-day are filled with Masons, as I believe. I have every reason to believe that all the delegations from this coast since 1876 have been Freemasons. So they have begun now already to do the same thing over again this year. The Masons have got their agents all over the city and country, getting every man they can into clubs. When these names are on the list, they have nothing to do but vote; it is immaterial what they vote, only so they vote.

When my son worked at building the Market St. cable road there were 100 hands at work on election day, 1882. One of these Masonic agents came along with a roll of tickets and gave the men all tickets, and told them to go and vote. Ninety-seven of them voted. My son brought his ticket to me; I have it now; the names on it are all Masons. The ninety-seven that voted kept on at work, the three were discharged the second day. If any of the ninety-seven had scratched the names all off the ticket it would have been all the same, for the agent sold them by the lump. Peter says, "And through covetousness shall they, with feigned words, make merchandise of you, whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not." 2 Peter 2:3. The Royal Arch Masons have not brains enough to run a government of 60,000,000 people very long.

We can know Freemasons, on this coast, by their perversion of God's holy Word, a blasphemous use of his name, a profanation of sacred and holy things, the subversion of justice: and blood and murder are found in it all over our country. Dr. Mackey, on Masonic law, says: "In the language of the Grand Lodge of Texas, an acquittal by a jury, while it may, and should, in some circumstances, have its influence in deciding on the course to be pursued, yet has no binding force in Masonry. We decide on our rules and our own views of the facts." (page 510.) He says again: "Where one party only is a Mason, although the municipal law will not consider any words as a justification, and will proceed to conviction, still, as the offence is not infamous, nor the punishment ignominious, and the character of the order does not need to be vindicated, the lodge will not take cognizance of the act." But if the punishment is ignominious then the lodge will take cognizance of the act. (page 509.) Here we have Masonry declaring itself to be a distinct government in the United States, controlled by nothing but its own head.

We do not believe God made this land for a despotic government. This question now is very near before us. Freemasonry is church and state. "Our only hope is God." "Our prayer is that under the divine protection Americans who have been taught the lesson of freedom at the expense of the blood of their fathers and the widowhood of their mothers, will still be free." N. KEYSER.

PITH AND POINT.

HALLELUJAH!

I rejoice in the progress being made in the various reforms, and think God hears and answers prayer offered by the growing "praying band" of reformers. My heart sings hallelujahs in view of past and coming victories. I think the Cynosure may be regarded, and should be, one of the strongest agencies of power in forwarding this great work of the nineteenth century.—A. D. FREEMAN.

THIS IS WHAT THE CYNOSURE IS DOING FOR THE COLORED BRETHREN.

I was made a Mason about fourteen years ago, in Union Springs, Ala., and I thought I was all right; but when the Cynosure found its way to me I saw that I was wrong, and I have not had my foot inside of a lodge since. I was a four degree Mason and master of the lodge for five years. But when my eyes were opened I turned to the Lord for help, and I sang this hymn:

"Amazing grace, how sweet the sound,
That saved a wretch like me;
I once was lost, but now am found,
Was blind, but now I see."

The Cynosure has saved me from the power of the lodge; and from that day to this I have done all I could against secret societies, and I hope to do more. I am by myself in the fight. The Cynosure is all the help I have. When I get a number I then ask God to help me to fight against these evils. I pray God's blessing upon the brother that sent me the paper. It has been all to me in the lodge fight.—E. THORNTON, Monticello, Ark.

Such a note as this must cheer every contributor to the Southern fund. Many colored pastors could give a similar testimony. Help on this good work.

DON'T WASTE A PAPER.

When we hear of colored ministers of the South, as it were hungering for the Cynosure to warn and teach their brethren the evil of secret societies, we pray, God bless the effort put forth to raise $1,500 for the benefit of perishing souls in the South, and elsewhere. I always keep on hand Cynosure tracts. When I send a letter to a friend, or on business, I enclose from four to six pages. As it costs me nothing more than the one-cent stamp, when I have read my Cynosure I roll it up and send it every week wherever it will do the most good. The other day I received a letter from a stranger whom I had supplied with a paper and tracts, and he writes to me to give him the address to know where he could get anti-secret books or tracts. I sent him my paper and the Cynosure address. We should let no paper like the Cynosure be lost or thrown in the waste basket. I have not the means as many have, but I know that we are on God's side and secretists are on the adversary's side. I am now nearly eighty-one years old, and have been an anti-slavery man ever since Jackson was President, and an advocate of temperance for fifty years, and now I must soon go the way of my fathers, and those that have known us will know us no more.—PHILIP KRIBS.

A BLESSED UNION THAT EVEN DEATH DID NOT SEVER.

My father, F. A. Figg, departed this life December 10th, last, and my mother two days later, and both were buried in the same grave. My father and mother dearly loved their paper and were always delighted with its weekly visits, and were greatly interested in the reforms it advocated; and I believe they entertained every agent and lecturer that came to their neighborhood. They will be remembered by brethren Stoddard, Levington, Kiggins, Cook, and all who visited this part in the interest of the anti-secrecy reform.—W. H. FIGG, Reno, Ind.

A GOOD LEAVEN IN CALIFORNIA.

I think by keeping the paper in the hands of all the ministers that the sentiment will find way through them to the people; to some extent, though, the churches are mouth-locked in this country. Except a few Wesleyans and Free Methodists, I don't know of a church in this region that would allow an anti-secret lecture in it. That makes it hard keeping up a club for the Cynosure. I have a dry job of it. I feel that I am but a little leaven in a big, cold lump, but I try to work. I love our cause.—L. B. LATHROP.

STEADFAST IN THE FAITH.

I am the same Anti-mason of other years, having seen no occasion to change my convictions on the question of the lodge; though my labor has fallen in other lines than in former days, the struggle still goes on.—REV J. V. POTTS.

PRESSING ON THE SWEDES.

Please send me one copy of your best exposition on Good Templarism. These "knights" begin to press into our lines, and we must do all we can to fight them before they gain stronger ground among our people. Among the "liberal" part of our Swedish people and among Swedish Methodists and Baptists they have strong support. —L. G. ALMEN, editor Skaffaren.

THE SECRET OATHS OF JESUITISM WANTED.

The article you printed on Romanism by Rev. A Smith of New York in your issue of December 15, 1887, was worth a year's subscription. I hope Mr. Smith will continue to pound away on Romanism till be breaks down the bolted and muffled doors of the priests' harems and reveals what is transpiring within. Give us the Jesuits' oath of allegiance to the Pope, and also the oath of allegiance every priest, bishop and cardinal in this country is required to give him —JOHN W. PLUMMER.

THE LODGE A MUMMY.

Believe me, I am with you in this matter. All my influence in counsel among Christians goes this way. Daily I see its injury to the spread of vital, i. e., heart religion and experience. It is much too bad to pass off a mummy, so old as is represented, for the saving Gospel. What we want is grace, not law; the grace which bringeth salvation.—WM J. WENN, Lehigh, Indian Territory.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON IX.—Feb. 26.—The Rich Young Ruler.—Matt. 19: 16-26

GOLDEN TEXT.—Ye cannot serve God and mammon.—Matt. 6: 24.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

In this lesson we have a serious opening of the whole question of human righteousness in relation to eternal life. Following the discourse with the rich young man who came inquiring as to the conditions of entering life eternal, our Lord addresses a serious discourse to his disciples concerning salvation. The chief interest, however, gathers about the young ruler.

I. A SELF-RIGHTEOUS INQUIRER.—By this designation we do not wish to excite prejudice against those who, like this young man, call out our admiration as he did our Lord's, but who are yet deplorably deficient and out of the way in respect to righteousness and the kingdom of God. 1. AN ADMIRABLE YOUNG MAN. Our Lord's admiration (Mark 10: 21) was not alone based upon his personal morality, but because of other rare and noble characteristics, some of which we will enumerate. (a) He was an exceptionally serious man. It was a rare thing for one in his position to think of these things in a serious way, and still more rare to apply to Jesus. In our day the young, the rich, and those of high position are seldom found deeply interested concerning the things that belong to God, eternity, and the soul; abundant worldly possessions hide them from the eyes and crowd them from the thoughts. (b) He was, as far as he went, an admirable inquirer. The rich and high conditioned do not often take their places in a crowd and present themselves as others do before a great religious teacher; but this young man came running to Jesus (Mark 10) and knelt down at his feet. We find in him an extraordinary blending of humility with a proud sense of righteousness which we know him to have possessed. 2. A DEFICIENT YOUNG MAN. Upon the whole, he was as perfect to the human eye as he esteemed himself to be; still, there were grave deficiencies in his character. (a) He was a very proud young man. This may seem to be a contradiction of what we have said as to his humility; but his very humility may have been a part of his pride. It is impossible not to discover pride in his answer in verse 20. And yet it would be impossible for any human being unenlightened by the Spirit of God not to be proud of such a large measure of righteousness. (b) He was a very ignorant man. While he had an admirable knowledge of the letter of God's law, he was profoundly ignorant of its true spiritual import. He did not see that the keeping of the commandments involved much more than the mere observance of the letter. Moreover, his ignorance is seen in that he thought eternal life might be won by his doings (Rom 10: 3). (c) He was an intensely worldly and selfish man. When Jesus put to him, on his own ground, the final test of doing, he refused. He was unwilling to part with his wealth for the sake of the poor neighbor whom he had professed to love as himself. Thus do we see how much sin and selfishness may be hidden away under a fair outward show in the flesh.

II. SELF-RIGHTEOUSNESS UNMASKED.—We have already opened this topic in part by what we have said of the young man's deficiencies. Nevertheless, it is worth our while to give some especial attention to the gentle and loving way in which Jesus lifts the veil from the young ruler's heart, and shows how deceitful and false it was under all his vaunted goodness. 1. SELF-RIGHTEOUSNESS TAKES NO ACCOUNT OF GOD, the supreme Good. This is implied in our Lord's first reply: If you will truly see that which is good, you must carry your question beyond me (that is, beyond what you conceive me to be—a mere religious teacher); you must go directly to God, and get your thoughts of goodness from him. 2. SELF-RIGHTEOUSNESS TAKES ACCOUNT OF OUTWARD ACTIONS ONLY. It leaves God out, and has to do only with man's relations to man, and that in outward fashion; not with the spirit of the law which honors God's character and the eternal righteousness of his moral government. 3. SELF-RIGHTEOUSNESS TERMINATES UPON SELF. This young man kept the commandments unbroken, not because he loved his neighbor, but because he loved himself. It was all "I." 4. SELF RIGHTEOUSNESS IS OFTEN SEEN IN CONNECTION WITH SOME VERY GRAVE SIN. In the case of this young man it was love of money. We are not to understand that this suggestion of Christ is a condition of life; it was, rather, a logical conclusion put forth by him from the premises of righteousness and the way of life advanced by the young ruler. 5. SELF RIGHTEOUSNESS LACKS DEPTH OF SINCERITY. No doubt this young man thought that he very much desired eternal life; but when it came to the point he cared more for his wealth and his way; for he was not ready to part with the one and give up the other and come after Christ. Self-righteousness objects to the condition of discipleship: "Deny thyself, take up thy cross, and come after me." 6. SELF-RIGHTEOUSNESS PARTS WITH CHRIST AND ETERNAL LIFE. When his true self was unmasked he was filled with disappointment, but not a sorrow that worked repentance; "and he went away," with his self-righteousness and his riches. In coming to Christ we must be prepared to part with all that we are and have, that we may receive instead, as a gift, both a new life and new righteousness.

III. CONCERNING RICHES AND SALVATION.—The conversation with the young man evidently impressed the disciples, and Christ took occasion to read them a most impressive lesson on the sin and danger of riches. 1. A rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. We are not to consider that wealth in itself is sinful; it is the inordinate love of money which sets it up as the chief thing to be obtained. It is the spirit of covetousness that makes it so hard for a rich man to be saved; not because of the money, but because of the effect of the love of it upon the nature of man. There is hardly any sin which men will not commit for the sake of money. Therefore, is it so deadly a thing to get under its power. 2 "Who then can be saved?" Since the love of money is so universal, affecting not only the rich, but the poor man who desires to be rich, who then can be saved? "With God all things are possible." The covetous man can be saved if he is ready to come to God and choose him rather than the money. In other words, salvation is a matter of divine power and not of human effort. All this is a suggestive lesson, growing out of the interview between Jesus and the young man who was rich, and who lost his soul because he loved his money better than life. May God keep us from this and all sin, and save us by his grace who cannot save ourselves by our own effort or doings.

OBITUARY.

ISAAC J. GILBERT of Derby, Connecticut, is dead. He will be remembered as one of the most earnest and self-denying of the supporters of the reform in New England, not counting it dear that labor, money, and reputation, even, must be sacrificed that men might know the danger of the secret lodge. We find the following sketch of his life in the Evening Sentinel of Ansonia, Conn., of January 24:

Isaac Jones Gilbert was a direct descendent of Matthew Gilbert, one of the Pilgrim Fathers, who came to this country in the Mayflower, and was a member of the colony which located the city of New Haven. He was by occupation a tanner, and established his business on George street, which property has remained in the possession of the Gilbert family until the present time. The deceased was the son of the Jabez M. Gilbert, who was born in New Haven, in 1781, and who located and engaged in the tanning business in Ridgefield, Conn., where his son Isaac Jones was born in 1805. His mother, Betsey Jones, was the daughter of John Jones, who was a lieutenant in the Revolutionary war. Isaac J. Gilbert married Elizabeth Hyatt, who was a descendant of Thomas Hyatt, whose name first appears in the record of the town of Norwalk in 1671. He was a soldier in the Indian war.

The deceased removed from Ridgefield to the town of Westville, in this State, in the year 1830, spending one year there in the tanning business. The following spring he came to Derby, purchasing the tannery of Abijah Wallace, and in this town he has resided for nearly fifty-seven years. Denominationally Mr. Gilbert was a Methodist, and his father and grandfather had been before him, and on coming to Derby he united with the little Methodist society worshiping in the school house at Derby Neck. In the year 1835, soon after the village of Birmingham had been located, the society decided to erect a church, and the site was selected on which the present edifice now stands. To this enterprise Mr. Gilbert gave material aid and hearty devotion. He was chairman of the building committee, and the subscription book, which has been preserved, shows that the heading was drawn by him and contains the names of over seventy-five of the prominent citizens of the town, many of them being members of the other churches.

Mr. Gilbert was an early and earnest anti slavery man, and his house was a station of the underground railroad, where the fugitive who was so fortunate as to arrive there found welcome and shelter. In the early days of the total abstinence movement he espoused that cause with equal zeal and devotion, and the persecutions he endured, such as the burning of his tannery and the mutilation of other property, and insults to himself and his family, were proof that he gave vigorous blows to the opponents of that cause. In all the other reforms of the day in which he became interested he had the courage to be true to his convictions, and though subjected sometimes to personal reproach and unjust criticisms, he was still the relentless opponent– never wavering or yielding his cause, and those who knew him best knew that he was actuated by no motive of selfishness or policy.

He was kind and sympathetic with the poor and oppressed. He had a generous and hospitable nature, and was a loving and affectionate father. His zeal in defending the right had its source of inspiration in a genuine Christian character. His last days were full of holy joy and triumph. His faith in the promises of God's Word was unwavering. His preparations for death were made in health, and during his sickness he had not a care or a fear, and his sun set in a cloudless sky.

MASONIC OUTRAGES.

BY EMINENT TESTIMONY.

PRES. A. A. SMITH, Northwestern College:—There can be no doubt that when secrecy is adopted as a rule of action, it has a demoralizing tendency.

MATILDA J. GAGE, a leader in the Woman Suffrage movement: — Masonry excludes women, not for any great secrets it may have, but because of shame for its indecent ceremonies.

REV. T. D. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, in an address before the Pilgrim Memorial Convention, Chicago, 1870, spoke of the lodge as setting up the hollow forms and titles of king-craft and priest-craft, that those hated foes of humanity might creep back into their shells.

PROF. ROBISON.—"But not only are secret societies dangerous, but all societies whose effect is mysterious. The whole history of man is proof of this position; in no age or country has there ever appeared a mysterious association which did not in time become a public nuisance." Proofs of a Conspiracy.

BISHOP STEVENS, (Protestant Episcopal) in an address before Pennsylvania diocese, 1874, said he "had refused to receive at the holy communion young men who belonged to secret societies existing within the church, as the machinery of these organizations was used to advance the interests of ritualism and Romanism."

REV. DR. KRAUTH, President of Lutheran General Council:—They strike at the root of the three divine institutions. They bring disturbance into the family, the church and the state, claiming for themselves what God has conferred on these alone. If the church cannot break down, by the truth, the oath-bound secret societies, they will break her down everywhere.

MRS. C. B. MILLER, Syracuse, N. Y., daughter of Victory Birdseye, Esq.:—My father died in 1853. Had he lived to see the rebellion of 1861, I have no doubt that he would have said that Freemasonry in common with slavery should bear the responsibility of that terrible war; for by undermining Southern loyalty it brought about a state of things without which the rebellion would have been impossible.

PRES. H. A. THOMPSON, Otterbein University:—What a farce to think of Christ organizing an oath-bound association, admitting members by a solemn pledge, in a secluded room, in some lonely place, with sentinels outside and inside to protect from the vulgar gaze, in order to help men to a purer life; to induce them to reform and forget their past misdeeds and begin anew. If this is the best method of saving men, why did he not adopt it instead of, or make it a part of the Christian church which he himself instituted.

DR. ADAM CLARKE:–"Have no fellowship" means have no religious connection with heathens or their worship. The "unfruitful works of darkness" probably alludes to the mysteries among the heathens and the differing lustrations (symbols) and rites through which the initiated went in the caves and dark recesses where these mysteries were celebrated; all of which he (the apostle) denominates "works of darkness," because they were destitute of true wisdom; and "unfruitful works" because they were of no use to mankind; the initiated being obliged on pain of death to keep secret what they had seen and heard and done.—Commentary, Eph 5th chap.

How then could they keep up the profession of Christianity or pretend to be under its influence while they had communion with darkness, concord with Belial, and partook with infidels?—Com. Cor. 62.

Hon. Heman Lincoln, ex-Governor, Mass:—Freemasonry, as a distinct, independent government within our own government, and beyond the control of the laws of the land, by means of its secrecy and the oaths and regulations which its subjects are bound to obey under penalties of death, has occupied much of the attention of the committee. . . . We believe, in the language of the Edinburgh Review, that all secret societies are justly deemed odious, wherever the government is tolerably free, and can only be excused where the existence of arbitrary power, foreign or domestic, leaves no other means of escaping from hopeless slavery.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1888.

REMEMBER THE REQUEST FOR FASTING AND PRAYER, FEB. 17TH, THE OPENING OF THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION.

THE THOUSAND COLORED PASTORS.

SHALL THEY HAVE THEIR PAPER?

Week by week generous friends of the colored race answer, YES. The fund for this purpose reaches $704.-26, as reported on page 13, and cheering letters show the enthusiasm in this enterprise of all who realize the nature of secretism. Every letter from the South justifies our efforts, and approves the judgment that no expenditure of an equal sum will bring so great returns.

The $900 contributed for this purpose in the two years and a half after June, 1885, placed the Cynosure in the hands of huudreds of colored pastors, but few of whom could have paid for it themselves. Note the grand results which have followed, chiefly because of this work:

1. The Louisiana Baptist State Convention,representing 70,000 church members,has voted against the lodge.

2. The Texas Baptists will probably take the same stand at their next meeting.

3. The Methodist Episcopal church in Texas is nearly ready for like action.

4. So are the Arkansas Baptists, a prominent Association having already so voted.

5. The same churches in western Tennessee are coming out against secretism.

6. So in Alabama the Good-will Association is standing against the orders.

7. The Congregational churches all through the South are opposing the lodge, encouraged by the American Missionary Association.

8. Two schools for higher instruction have been organized within a year which maintain this principle, while nearly every institution for the education of the Negro is open for instruction of the students on the dangers of the lodge.

9. Christians at the North should hasten this work with all zeal, because the reflex influence upon their churches will soon be powerfully felt.

The Cynosure has proved the best agency in accomplishing this work in the South. A fund to send a thousand copies to as many colored pastors is being raised. Dear reader, has not the Lord given you means to help it on?

OUR STATE OF SECLUSION.

[NOTE.—The following was written for a double purpose: for the readers of the Cynosure and a morning lecture to the students of Wheaton College, who received it with much favor. The English writer, whose theory it expands and applies, is eminently original; there is nothing like it.]

Some fifty years ago a popular and highly original writer, whose books were widely read in England and America, wrote a thesis with the above title of very great beauty and force. The drift of it was, that we are fallen into a state of seclusion: 1. From God; 2. From other worlds; 3. From the generations before and after us; 4. From each other; and 5. From our own selves.

1. The philosophic poet uttered sense as well as Scripture when he said that in Eden,

"God walked with man, joint tenant of the shade."

It would seem that our race were destined to immortality without the intervention of death; that angels were to be their companions, and infinity their home. That we are now in seclusion from these we need no revelation to tell us. "Our iniquities have separated" between us and our God and "our sins hid his face from us," goes without proving; true, even if Isaiah had not said it (59: 2); whosoever remembers his first attempt to pray, knows it.

2. And it is equally obvious that we are shut from surrounding worlds and their occupants; if, indeed, they have occupants, which is left to probability and inference. Doubtless it had been as easy to have made, of the myriad worlds, one vast, continuous continent; and, in that case, the inhabitants, however remote, might have learned of each other's existence, the fact, if not the mode. But now our telephones do not reach them. Whether those spheres, like ours, contain minds which reason, and hearts that throb, must yet be left to conjecture. Whether even the bright angels, who, from their skyey solitudes, dart into and across our horizon, "shouting for joy" at the creation of our earth, bringing messages of mercy or wrath, hymning our Saviour's advent, comforting him in his agony, bending, by legions, over his cross, and waiting to execute his will,—whether these superior creatures have local attachments and homes, like ourselves, in any of those shining worlds, they never deign to tell us. We are "secluded" from them. They visit our world as a province in rebellion is visited by loyal messengers. Our intercourse with them is limited by their official errands, and they never tell us where they fly to when they go home.

3. And we are not only shut off from surrounding worlds by distance, moral and material, but even on this world of ours, we are secluded from the generations which precede us and which follow us. True, history brings us some straggling beams across the narrow ocean of the past, from coast lights on the other side. But these only illumine and make visible the crests of its billows, viz.: conquerers, kings and courts. How little do we, can we, know of the masses of Assyria, Greece, Rome, Carthage, or even England, Ireland and Wales, in the time of Alfred? or even of the generation on whose heels we are treading in the march of time? How few fathers tell their children of their own faults and follies; still fewer their errors, vices and sins. Children have to learn by bitter experience to avoid or escape the ten thousand mistakes on which there is a chasm of silence between their parents and themselves. Nor can history here afford us much aid. The history of the generation which is now dying is not yet written as it will stand a hundred years hence;and the generation now being born have not yet made their record.

So we are secluded from both past and future; and Pope has well said of man:

"Placed on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, or rudely great,
He hangs between, in doubt to act or rest;
In doubt to deem himself a god or beast."

4. And another great poet, more familiar than Pope with the right side of human nature, has shown that we are equally ignorant of our next neighbor, as of the people of the planets:

———"And men are
What they name not to themselves
And trust not to each other." —Byron.

Which disciple could have predicted that Judas would sell Jesus for silver, an hour before it was done? or who could have guessed the many ten thousand crimes which blacken the daily press?

5. And Peter as little knew himself as he did Judas. That was one of the most sensible prayers ever made, "Cleanse thou me from secret faults;" —that is from faults unknown to myself. So true is it that we are excluded from ourselves.

Now, if we could see, as Jacob saw, a ladder, which Masons mimic, reaching into heaven, and angels ascending and descending upon it; or if, with John, a door opened into heaven should admit us to view its inhabitants,—this would not break the walls of our seclusion and admit us to Infinity, to God! But Christ "proceeded forth and came from God." John 8: 42. He is the "Alpha and Omega" of eternity. This breaks up our seclusion. This fits him to be the "One Mediator" between God and men, and, therefore, "He is able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him," which no finite man or angel could. If the Saviour were created, he would owe all the duty he could do to his Creator, and so could not bear an ounce of our sins, without sinking eternally under a just law which eternally commands all that is right, and forbids all that is wrong. Thus he is not only the Saviour, but the only Saviour; the same "from everlasting to everlasting," "over all, GOD blessed forevermore."

We can now see why and how the spurious lodge worships of the world would eternize our state of seclusion by dispensing with Christ. They make our heavens brass and earth iron (Deut.28:23). They coop us up in this little hemisphere of space, and condemn us to worship its usurping god. And even if our visible horizon should give way and reveal to us myriad worlds beyond and their inhabitants, by none or all of these could we be restored to God. For none of all of them "proceeded forth and came from God." And "again," he says, "I go to my Father, and ye see me no more."John 16:10. There was but one being ever in the Universe who could truthfully say this, and that one is Christ. Hence the whole impious drift, tenor, and pretense of Masonry, from the first or Apprentice degree to the last,is to restore man to God, under the name of "Light," for "God is Light," or "Truth," or "the Word." But finite creatures have positively no relation to the Infinite God. A ton or the planet Jupiter is no nearer infinite in weight than an ounce or a feather. God is

"As full, as perfect in an hair as heart;
As full, as perfect in vile man that mourns,
As the rapt seraph that adores and burns.
To him no high, no low, no great, no small:
He fills, he bounds, connects and equals all."

And the Babel-builders of to-day have the same impious and vain object with those of old, to supercede, set aside, and find substitutes for the one only Mediator, Christ, by whom sinners can ascend to God: and Masonry is the latest form of these Anti-Christs. All who climb by them, Christ has said, are "thieves and robbers."

MASONRY IN THE ANARCHIST TRIAL.

The papers have all along been quite unsparing of the eccentricities of Mrs. Hortensia MacGreal Black, wife of Capt. W. P. Black, chief of the counsel for the anarchists of Chicago. Her personal interest in the condemned men, constant attendance in their trial, and aid of themselves and their friends, combined with the sixty curs which she fed and maintained at her home at Park Ridge just north of the city—all combined to make her an object of unfortunate interest.

Rev. William Fenton of St. Paul has told the Cynosure readers of his personal acquaintance with the Black family, when its head, years ago, was an elder in a Presbyterian church on the South Side, and their house was a regular meeting place for holiness assemblies. He endeavored to leaven these meetings with a little truth against the lodge, and found Captain Black a Mason, but Mrs. Black read somewhat on the subject. Whether their refusal to receive the truth at that time was the first step in their present sad decline we may not say. It no doubt had a serious effect upon their characters when they refused to accept Christ in these principles of righteousness, and follow his example when on earth.

It has not been generally known that any of the anarchists were Freemasons. All belonged to some "group" of their "International" society, some to the Lehr und Wehr Verein, Parsons had been a Good Templar, and with one other, we believe, belonged to the Knights of Labor and to some of the labor unions. These latter orders sympathized with him by a majority vote. But Mrs. Black tells it all in a letter on dogs, her ancestors, etc., in the Journal of last Friday. She closes thus:

ANARCHISTS AND MASONS.

Another thing. Some one asked the Journal if any of the anarchists were Masons, and you replied no. That isn't true. Albert Parsons was a Mason. I saw him give the "sign of distress" when he made his dying speech. I have wondered why no Mason except my husband regarded that solemn appeal to their rigid vows. But, then, Masonry amounts to very little, as a bond among men, in the North. Here it seems only a matter of feasting, shows and conclaves—a mere public affair. In the South it meant, at least in my day, a bond of brotherhood. My father was a very high Mason. I don't know if you have that order here, but a special lodge would be convened for him, and he wore a long, trailing cloak of velvet.

There! Enough for this time, but I want you to publish this, because it will be interesting to a great many people. HORTENSIA MACGREAL BLACK.

That seems to be conclusive evidence. The Masonic appeal was for once given in vain. Should not Mr. Grinnell, then prosecuting attorney and a high Mason, not be Masonically tried for not responding to it? Under the law of his order he was sworn so to do. And to how many more Masons did Parsons make the same appeal? How, too, did Mrs. Black come to know this secret sign—from books, or her father, or her husband? If from the latter, why is he not called to the bar of the lodge to answer for revealing its "secrets?"

These questions may be interesting to Masons; but to the public, since every one may know all these potential secrets for a trifle, they are a matter of comparative indifference. They prove that Masonic obligations are a rope of sand or of steel just according to the caprice of the lodge members.

—A brief note from Secretary Stoddard written Friday says that his health is improving and he is able to help in the preparatory work of the Convention. Mrs. Stoddard is busy also in W. C. T. U. work, joining the N. C. A. cause with it. Brethren Hinman and Davidson are visiting the suburban towns, and all are encouraged with the outlook.

—Bro. I. B. Shaw, editor of the Michigan Holiness Record, Grand Rapids, has invented a new block for stereotype and electrotype plates, which is well recommended for simplicity, safety, economy of cost and time and general utility as superior to any other. It will, we hope, find a wide introduction among printers. Bro. Shaw has been compelled to forego much work as an evangelist this winter because of his work in the printing office.

—A note from the publisher of the Christian Conservator of Dayton, received Monday morning, brings the good news that either Bishop M. Wright or Rev. Wm. Dillon would probably be at the New Orleans convention; also that some of the Indiana brethren have the matter under favorable consideration.

—Joseph Cook began his thirteenth season of the Boston Monday lectureship last week Monday, February 6, in the Tremont Temple, Boston. Mr. Cook, in view of various current religious perils and other signs of the times, has chosen for the general topic of this course, "God in the Bible." The preludes on leading reforms will be continued.

—The Band of Hope which has been successfully maintained for years in the N. C. A. building by Mrs. M. E. Cook continues week by week with a good attendance. Their anniversary meetings are very happy gatherings, and the Band is receiving recognition among the churches as a most beneficial agency among the children of the neighborhood, some of whom seem to be otherwise neglected.

—The trustees of Princeton College accepted the resignation of Dr. McCosh last Thursday, to take effect at the end of the present college year. He will remain at the head of the School of Philosophy. The board also elected Prof. Francis L. Patton to succeed Dr. McCosh. Prof. Patton became best known to the public in 1873–6 as editor of the Interior and prosecutor of Prof. Swing in this city. He is a learned and eloquent man, but a pitiable conservative in questions of Christian reform.

—The auditing committee of the Wesleyan church in a long report covering nearly a page in the last Wesleyan Methodist shows the circulation of the church organ to be 5180, and that the average for four years has been but little below that figure. This is a good list, which we should like to see increased as well as our own, and no delinquents in it. The brethren of the committee will suffer a word of admonition. For the benefit of the friends of the denomination let their next report be more clear in its statements. They raise rather more questions than they answer.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Pres. L. N. Stratton expects, as we write, to start Wednesday, the 15th, for the National Convention, which he will address. Mrs. Stratton hopes to accompany him.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard spoke last Sabbath morning to a large audience in the First Congregational church (Dr. Goodwin) this city, on the subject of Christian education, with special reference to Wheaton College.

—Rev. William Johnson, D.D., of College Springs, Iowa, expected to start for New Orleans early this week. He addresses the National Convention Saturday evening, on the "Real Issue between the Church and the Lodge."

—Pres. and Mrs. J. Blanchard started Wednesday instead of Tuesday evening as stated in our last. They reached New Orleans safely on Friday. Both were in rather precarious health, but in good spirits on leaving, and all had hope that the journey would be beneficial.

—Dr. A. J. Jutkins, National Secretary of the National Prohibition Executive Committee, is taking a few weeks' rest in a trip to the Pacific coast, and Samuel D. Hastings of Madison, Wis., treasurer of the same committee, is attending to the duties at the headquarters in this city.

—Bro. Parry, of the Evansville, Wis., Seminary, took his leave of us Thursday evening for New Orleans and a temperature that would not venture 20 below zero for three successive days in the middle of February. He will be a most valuable accession to the workers at the Convention.

—Dr. R. B. McDonald, the well-known temperance worker of San Francisco and president of the Pacific Bank, was lately shot at by his daughter-in-law in a family difficulty. Our San Francisco correspondence told us of the case. Mrs. McDonald was acquitted in the trial that followed, though it is said the evidence was mainly against her. She is not a Mason; Dr. McDonald used to be, though we hope he lost interest years ago in the order.

—Our dear brother Clark of Detroit declares that he will never be too old to journey, talk and sing for the Master. He could not sleep with another convention going on among the people for whom his life has been so largely given—so he was away Monday, singing as he journeyed of the "Good Time Coming" "A Hundred Years Hence" or less. He will remain in the South after the Convention, visiting the colored churches as last year with an evangel of song.

—Dr. McGlynn, in his lecture last Sunday evening in the Academy of Music, again defied the papal hierarchy. An audience of about three thousand, filling the great auditorium in every part, followed his sentences with enthusiastic applause. When the orator asserted: "They (the hierarchy) wouldn't take me back unless I made a retraction, which would shame my manhood and shame you, and injure the great cause in which we are all associated for the benefit of our fellows. And now, I don't want to go back, and so help me God, I will not go back on any such conditions," profound emotion was manifested by almost frantic applause and sobs and tears.—Intelligencer.

BRO. J. AUGUSTUS COLE of the Wesleyan African mission was detained in this country until January 4th, partly because of ill-health. He writes from England to the Wesleyan Methodist of his journey thither, and of the English Wesleyans, who as our readers probably know are more nearly like our Methodist Episcopal church than any other American sect. In the following incident we are pleased to see that he does not hide his light under a bushel: "English Wesleyan Methodism is still alive and active, and is substantially the same with the American, except that the English, or, rather, many of the pastors, believe in serving God and mammon; in belonging to the church and the lodge; in administering the Lord's Supper on a Sabbath, and the next evening drinking wine from a human skull in Masonic temples. But as a general rule there are less Masons in this connection than in other churches. I am only astonished that it is not made a test of membership. I was speaking to a brother about it this afternoon, and told him to bring up the question in the next annual conference, and propose anti-secrecy as a test of membership. He was startled, and said, 'O, no, brother Cole! you want me either to split my head or split the Wesleyan church.' I told him, 'What of that? If your head is split for truth you will only die as a martyr; and if the Wesleyan church is split on account of truth it will never split heaven.' To this he replied a hearty Methodistic 'Amen.' "

A NEW DEPARTURE IN INDIA.

Good people in America will be glad to hear of any step, even the smallest, toward reaching India's millions. Here is an "effectual door" which the Lord has opened before us during the past year. We call it our

"COLPORTEUR–EVANGELISM."

What is it? (1) An experienced and devoted man selling books and tracts from station to station and from house to house; (2) preaching to persons and parties wherever possible, and (3) scattering tracts and papers everywhere.

What books? First of all those on Christian experience and work—that is, repentance, salvation, holiness and soul-saving. Then, such special works as are most needed.

What special methods? Hard work and self-denial. C. E. takes a large box of stock, ordering more as needed. A loaded "cartridge-box" of books at his side, 10 to 20 lbs. Sells for cash only. Never travels nor sells on Sundays.

What success already? The last six months our man has sold over Rs. 900. Considering that much of this is in small books, tracts, etc., and that much has been given away besides, it means a large circulation of the best literature. But remember that the selling of books is only a part of our Colporteur-Evangelist's work. His equally important mission is to preach the Gospel directly, and this he does in every station and to hundreds of souls every month.

What co-operation and support? C. E. acts with liberty, yet in close concert with headquarters. As the books belong to the Watchman Repository, careful accounts are kept and reports made. C. E. is self-supporting, i. e, he is to earn his living and railway fare through the good he does to the people.

What profits and prospects? "Much every way," except financially. The high rates of exchange, freights, etc., also donations, losses, printing, clerk-hire, etc., make it impracticable for our Repository to depend merely upon its sales. We expect wide-awake souls to see that this is as necessary a part of God's plan of evangelizing India as any other.

Pray for us and our work, and for more workers and means, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified in India more than ever before.

THE MANAGER,
India Watchman, Bombay.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10, 1888.

Representative Hayes, of Iowa, who was attacked by some of the prominent temperance women of Washington for his course in refusing to present to Congress a prohibition petition for the District of Columbia from the people of his State, holds firmly to the position he has taken. He reiterates his belief that it is officious and meddling for citizens of the different States to petition Congress for specific action in respect to the local affairs of this District. They tell him that the national capital and the District of Columbia belong to the nation, that they are only dealing with their own. Mr. Hayes, as an Iowa judge, it will be remembered, troubled his State with decisions against the prohibitory amendment which did not stand in the Supreme Court.

On Sabbath afternoon Sam. P. Small, the evangelist, talked on prohibition in the District to an overflowing congregation in the Congregational church in this city. He declared his intention to work for prohibition here as long as he had a dollar and life. He said the Congressman from Iowa had followed in the footsteps of Mr. French, of Kentucky, who denied the right of Congress in the past to receive petitions praying for emancipation in the District, but who was fought to a finish by John Quincy Adams and defeated.

The District of Columbia is on the highroad to municipal perfection and its attainment of that end is only a matter of time if Congress will only do half what it is asked to do in its behalf. The House committee having its interests in charge has just reported favorably a bill making it unlawful for any person in the cities of Washington and Georgetown to bet, gamble or make books and pools on the result of any trotting or running race of horses, or boat race or race of any kind, or on any election, or contest of any kind, and providing fine and imprisonment for any violation of the provisions of the act.

There is a probability also of the Capital being spared in the future from any more monstrosities in the name of art. The æsthetic Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Hoar, presented a bill for the appointment of a national art commission, composed of fourteen members, whose duty it shall be to pass upon the artistic merit of pictures, statuary, monuments, etc., purchased or erected by the Government. When this much needed commission gets to work it is devoutly to be hoped that it will doom some of the bronze equestrian absurdities which disfigure the broad avenues of this beautiful city.

A gathering which filled the Bijou theatre a few evenings since was highly gratifying to the friends of the temperance cause in this city. The people had assembled to hear Bishops Keane of Richmond and Ireland of Texas discuss the temperance question. That the gathering was practically of one mind was shown at the close of the meeting, when, with the exception of about two dozen, every one pledged himself to abstain from liquor for one year. The speakers argued that the man who sells liquor is an active party to all the crime, misery and suffering produced by it. The evil needed to be handled with a force that would be used to put down a rebellion.

It is now thought there is little doubt that the Senate Committee to which the bill for prohibition in this District has been referred will make a favorable report on the same. Not that the majority of the Committee really favor prohibition, but it is being so earnestly agitated at this time that the majority deem it advisable to give the Senate an opportunity to act upon the question.

The penny postage scheme has just met with a rebuff from the Senate Committee on Post-offices. The Chairman—Senator Sawyer—stated that it was not thought prudent to attempt to reduce postage at present. The Post-office Department was still running behind, and it was thought better to wait until it was self-sustaining before any further reduction was attempted. Senator Hoar wanted to have put on record his belief that it was the duty of the Government and the interest of the people to have postage reduced to one cent. He believed the Department would rapidly become self-sustaining at that rate; but even if not the direct benefit in binding the country closer together would more than compensate for any deficit. Senator Beck, of Kentucky, who introduced the bill, said he could not understand how the Government could afford to carry bonnets and harness and merchandise all over the country for a cent an ounce and not be able to carry the people's information at the same rate. *

THE HOME.

THE FOOL'S PRAYER.

The royal feast was done; the king
Sought some new sport to banish care,
And to his jester cried: "Sir Fool,
Kneel, now, and make for us a prayer!"

The jester doffed his cap and bells,
And stood the mocking court before;
They could not see the bitter smile
Behind the painted grin he wore.

He bowed his head and bent the knee
Upon the monarch's silken stool;
His pleading voice arose: "O Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!"

"No pity, Lord, could change the heart
From red with wrong to white as wool;
The rod must heal the sin; but, Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!

"'Tis not by guilt the onward sweep
Of truth and light, O Lord, we stay;
'Tis by our follies that so long
We hold the earth from heaven away.

"These clumsy feet, still in the mire,
Go crushing blossoms without end;
These hard, well-meaning hands we thrust
Among the heart-strings of a friend.

"The ill-timed truth we might have kept,
Who knows how sharp it pierced and stung?
The word we had not sense to say—
Who knows how grandly it had rung?

"Our faults no tenderness should ask,
The chastening stripes must cleanse them all;
But for our blunders—oh! in shame
Before the eyes of heaven we fall.

"Earth bears no balsam for mistakes;
Men crown the knave, and scourge the fool
That did his will; but thou, O Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!"

The room was hushed; in silence rose
The king, and sought his garden cool,
And walked apart, and murmured low,
"Be merciful to me, a fool?"

HOW A YOUNG JEW FOUND CHRIST.

A very intelligent Jew in the city of Montreal, whose father was a wealthy banker in Germany, related his Christian experience in a fellowship meeting, the substance of which, in his broken English, was this:

"The Spirit of de Lord take hold of my heart in my fader's house in Germany. He makes me feel so bad, I could not eat my food or take my rest.

"My fader said to me, 'Why you no be happy? You mope round, just so miserable as can be. Plenty of money, why you no be happy?'

"I say, 'Fader, I find no place for my soul. De money won't buy a place for my soul. I lie down and die one day, and den what good de money to me, and where go my poor soul?'

"By-and-by I reads in a paper about one Dr. F., a Jewish Rabbi in Canada, dat find Messiah. I says to myself, 'I go to Canada to find dat Rabbi dat find Messiah.' When I come to Canada, I ask de first thing, 'Where is Dr. F.?' and dey tell me dat he live in de city of Hamilton. When I go to de city of Hamilton he not at home. I no find him for two weeks. Then one man show him me at a public meeting, and I look at him till de meeting was out, and as he come I say to him, 'You Dr. F?'

"'Yes.'

"'You Jewish Rabbi?'

"'Yes.'

"'You find Messiah?'

"'Yes."

"'Well, you give me two lessons, and I pay you.'

"Dr. F. say, 'Come to my house, and I give you many lessons, and not charge anything.'

"But I say, 'Oh, no, Dr. F.' And he talk to me and talk to me and talk to me, but I no find Messiah.

"Den I go to de Catholic church and talked to de priest to find Messiah. De priest he tell me about de baptism and de holy water, and I say, 'Go away wid you water, I wants to find a place for my soul.'

"Den I go back to Dr. F., and he say, "You Hebrew scholar? Now, take your Hebrew Bible and read what our ancient prophets say about Messiah. Take your pen and write down de exact description dey give of him, especially in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah; and when you get de prophetic directions how to find Messiah, take your Greek Testament and search, and you will find, as face answers face in a mirror, so de New Testament answers to de Old, and dat everything de old prophets say about Messiah was fulfilled in the person of Jesus of Nazareth. When your judgment be convinced, den bow down on your knees and pray to God in the name of Jesus, and you find Messiah in your heart. He save you from all your sins.'

"So I followed de instructions dat Dr. F. he did give me, and my judgment he got convinced, and I bow on my knees and cry, 'O Got of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Got of my faders, I pray to dee in de name of dy dear, suffering Son Jesus Christ; I be convinced from dy holy books of de Old and New Testament dat he be Messiah which dow hast sent into de world to save sinners. Dow knows what a great sinner I am; but Jesus comes to save de chief of sinners. I trust my soul to him; I believe he can save me. O Got, have mercy on my poor soul, and save me from my sins for Jesus's sake. I believe all dow has say about Jesus, and I take him as my Saviour.'

"While I pray I feel more and more bad, and I tot my poor soul he must go to hell. Den I say, if Jesus Christ bore my sins in his own body and redeemed my soul with his own blood, my soul he no need to go to hell. Den I give my soul to Jesus, I believe in Jesus, and just so quick as lightning I finds Messiah. He save me from my sins; he fill my soul with unspeakable joy. My soul he find a home in Jesus. He abide in Jesus now for tree years, and I know him more and more, and love him wid all my heart."

He proceeded to tell of some remarkable answers to prayer he had experienced, and such was the artless simplicity of his story, and the light and unction of the Holy Spirit shining through his broken utterances, that between laughing and weeping for joy when he sat down there were few dry eyes in that large assemblage. He was at that time engaged as a colporteur and Bible reader to his people of different languages in Montreal.—Selected.

CHOKED CHRISTIANS.

In the parable of the sower our Lord points out one class of hearers whom he likens to soil overgrown with thorns. It evidently represents rich and naturally productive soil. The seed sown in it was well received and sprang up, but brought forth no fruit to perfection. This is Luke's account; Matthew and Mark say that such hearers become "unfruitful," whether altogether, or in the sense of imperfect and shriveled, we are not careful to inquire; we suppose unfruitful in the sense that salt is not good if it has lost its "savor," and a light is of no service if it is set "under a bushel" or turned into darkness by an outward life that obscures it. At any rate, we have a picture here of a certain type of Christian life that is very sad to contemplate.

The trouble seems to be that the soil was not well prepared before the seed was sown. It was not cleared of thorns. Let us look at some of these thorns and see what they are that choke the good seed. Men and women have essayed to enter upon a Christian life without clearing their lives and hearts of the thorns that are indigenous to the flesh. They forget that God has commanded "the wicked to forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts," before returning unto him.

Forsaking and clearing them out of life does not mean that we are to bring about a complete moral renovation of our lives before we may return to the Lord and obtain mercy; but that we are to look at these things frankly, and choose between them and God, and in mind, purpose, and affection, forsake them; recognize them as things foreign to the character and thought of a child of God, and renounce them. The alien who comes to this country and becomes an American citizen, leaves his country, and then, after he comes here, he renounces his allegiance to the land and potentate of his birth; the sinner who accepts Christ and God has first to renounce his allegiance to his old life and master and then forsake them. If this renunciation of sin is not heartily attended to, the taking on of the Christian profession is much as the oath of allegiance taken by the anarchist, who seeks to engraft upon his new citizenship all the odious doctrines and practices which he failed to leave behind him when he came to this country. Such will never become good Americans. The thorns and briers which they have not forsaken will forever spring up and choke all ideas of true liberty and good citizenship.

It is in this way that so many professors of religion become unfruitful. All the good impulses and holy purposes with which they started out, perhaps in all good sincerity, to serve God have been choked by the growth of the thorns which they failed to forsake. The thorns spring up and choke them. In some cases a life that is well cleared of these upon beginning the Christian life has been choked by the after incoming of the thorns. Mark tells us, in his version of this parable, that the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful." It would seem, then, that there is a double danger of being choked by these thorns: a danger that lies in wait as we enter in—that is, a disposition to enter upon the Christian profession without deliberately forsaking all wicked ways; and a danger that threatens us—the peril of these things entering in our lives after we have entered into the kingdom.

It is a dreadful thing to be choked. Those who have, either by accident or design, suffered partial strangulation, tell us that it is one of the most dreadful experiences. It must, to the all-seeing eye of God, be a dreadful thing to behold so many of his children gasping for a breath of life, being choked by the evil weeds, thorns, and tares indigenous to the flesh or diligently planted there by the enemy of souls while they sleep.

Perhaps it will be well to suggest the things which do most choke these weedy professors. Our Lord gives a list of them: "The cares of this world," "the deceitfulness of riches," "the pleasures of this life," "and the lusts of other things." Look at this catalogued list of deadly thorns. "The cares of this world" have swallowed up many a thousand professors, who have forgotten that they were the children of God, and have given themselves to anxious care about what shall be eaten, and wherewithal shall the body be clothed; more who have "made haste to be rich," or have made riches their goal of life; while others have given themselves up to the pleasures of this life; and still others, who, in general, allow the lusts of the flesh and of the eye to dictate to them in all their earthly life. Let us be warned by these very suggestive pictures and teachings of our Lord, and look to our lives and see if there be any of these evil thorns "springing up" or "entering in," to mar and hinder the work of God and choke his good seed.—Independent.

LITTLE KATIE'S HOME.

It was snowing fast. Little Katie looked out of the window and rejoiced. There was only one pane of glass in the window through which Katie could see the snow: an old hat was crushed into one, a bundle of rags in another, and bits of paper were pasted over the cracks in the rest: still, the air crept in and made the room very cold. Why was Katie glad to see the snow? Oh! there would be plenty of work for her to do! The crossings would need to be cleaned, and she and her broom could earn many a penny. So Katie and her mother ate their scanty supper, thinking that the snow would bring them something better to-morrow. They did not light the lamp; it was so cold and cheerless in the little room; but, gathering together the few coverings they had, the mother and child hid away in the heap of straw that served as a bed, and sleep soon made them forget both the cold and hunger.

Yes, there was plenty of work for Katie, and a good many pennies were earned. Pity that some of the kind hearts passing over Katie's crossing could not have looked into Katie's dreary home: maybe the window-panes might have been mended and a good supper provided; but He who sees the sparrows saw little Katie, and sent her just what she most needed.

All day long Katie worked busily. How her eyes brightened when a five-cent piece came instead of a penny! One lady said she had no more pennies; "Would a little book do instead?" Katie took it; there were no pictures in it—just a little white book of verses. She read the title: "The Old, Old Story;" and then she put it in her pocket for the crossing must be swept. "It must be nice," thought Katie; "for the lady spoke so kindly, and said she was sure I would like it. 'The Old, Old Story.' I wonder what it is." And when nobody was passing, Katie took it out and glanced over its pages. "Oh, it's about 'Jesus and his love;' if I could see him I would ask him if he loves me. Why, here it says, 'The message is for thee'—that must be me; and here in the last verse it says, 'We shall see him soon—in our home above.'" Katie was leaning on her broom as she read, and did not notice that any one was passing until a voice startled her by asking, "Do you like the little book, my child?" It was the lady who had given it; she was on her homeward way—walking toward the Great Home all the while.

"I was wondering," said Katie, "if 'our home' means one for me, too. Mother and I would like to go there, for we haven't a very good home here. Do you think Jesus loves mother and me?"

"Yes, dear, I know he does. He has a place in his beautiful home for you both, and he will surely take you there, if you will let him."

"But I will, indeed I will!" And the child looked earnestly into the lady's face. "I wish you would tell me all about it; oh, there is some one at my crossing!" She was running away, but the lady held her fast until she learned Katie's name and where she lived.

It was growing late and there were many coming and going. Katie was kept so busy that she forgot about the little book—even about the "home," and all the new, glad thoughts. The lamps were lighted, and Katie's mother would be watching for her. A whole handful of pennies had been gathered! Katie put her hand into her pocket to feel them—the little book was there too. Back came the thoughts of "home" and "love." "I wonder where it is, and what it is like," thought Katie, as she turned away from the crossing, pretty tired from her day's work.

Down the avenue walked little Katie, peeping in at the windows where bright lights came through the open shutters. She stopped before a window that was low down—such a beautiful room she looked into! No old hat was crushed into the window; the glowing fire lighted up the rich carpet and furniture, making all look warm and comfortable. A group of children were gathered there, the father in their midst, with a golden head nestled closely to him, and little arms about his neck.

"Oh, how lovely!" sighed little Katie, from her watching-place outside. "I wish I had such a home! I wonder if the home my little book tells of is like this, and does Jesus love so? I would like to go to his home; perhaps mother and I could be as happy there as these little children are here. I'll go home and talk to mother about it;" and Katie ran on as fast as her tired feet would carry her.

They lighted the lamp to-night; they had a better supper, and they forgot the little draughts of air that came in through the broken window-panes. Katie's little book was read and re-read.

"The lady said it was all true, mother."

"Yes, my child, I know it is; why didn't we think more about this home before? I will read you about it, Katie, in the Bible;" and she brushed the dust from the long-neglected Bible, and they sat down and read together.

It was late when they hid away again in the straw bed; but they did not feel lonely to-night, for they kneeled down together—the mother and child—and told all to Jesus: asked him to take them, save them, keep them, teach them. The mean little room seemed like a home now, for he had come to abide with them.

Katie does not sweep the crossings now; she has found better work. The window-panes are whole and clean, and the room looks neat and cheery. Katie and her mother sing at their work:

"I'm but a stranger here,— Heaven is my home!"

It does not make them sad now to look in at the windows of a beautiful home. They, too, have one, only they must wait a little while for it. The lady who gave the book is Katie's true friend; but they have found a still better Friend, "who will never leave them, nor forsake them;" One who "changes not;" they know that he is preparing a home for them, "that where he is they may be also."

Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them.—Eccl. 12: 1.—N. Y. Observer.

COST OF A LEAD PENCIL.

"What does it cost to make a lead pencil?" queried a reporter of the New York Sun. "First let me tell you how we make a pencil," said the manufacturer. "See this fine black powder? That's graphite. It cost twenty-five cents a pound. This white substance is German clay. It come across the ocean as ballast in sailing vessels, and all it costs us is freight. We mix this clay and this powder together and grind them in a mill, allowing a moisture to be added during the process, until the two are thoroughly assimilated and are reduced to a paste about the consistency of putty.

"This paste we press into these dies, each one of which is the size of a pencil lead, except in length. There are four leads in one of these. After they are pressed we cut them into the proper length, and bake them in an oven kept at very high heat. There we have the lead made. Its hardness is regulated by the greater or less amount of clay we mix with the graphite—the more clay we put in, the harder the lead.

"The cedar we use comes principally from the swamps of Florida, and is obtained entirely from the fallen trees that lie there. The wood is delivered to us in blocks sawed to pencil lengths, some thick to receive the lead, and others thin for the piece that is glued over the lead. The blocks are sawed for four pencils each. They are grooved by a saw, the groove being the place where the lead is to lie.

"The leads are kept in hot glue, and are placed in the grooves as the blocks are ready. When that is done, the thin block is glued fast to the thick one. When dry, the blocks are run through a machine that cuts the pencils apart. Then they are run through a machine that shapes and burnishes them and they are ready to be tied in bunches, boxed and put out.

"The different grades in value are made by finer manipulation of the graphite. Here is a pencil that is about the average quality used in every day business. It cost a little more than one-quarter of a cent to get it ready for market. We sell it to dealers at one hundred per cent profit, and the dealer makes much more than that. Of this grade an operator and the machinery will easily make 2500 a day."

TEMPERANCE.

ANOTHER MARTYR TO PROHIBITION.

NEW CANAAN, Conn., Jan. 27.—A most heinous rum murder was committed in this town Wednesday afternoon, adding another to the list of martyrs to the cause of enforcing prohibitory laws. The town has been under no-license for some years, and the law has had energetic friends, a Law and Order Society having been formed. Contraband liquors have been seized, and saloonists are now under bonds to appear before the Supreme Court.

One of the indicted saloonists is Jacob Scheele, a German, who was one of the greatest offenders and is also a most brutal and despicable ruffian. He came from New York, where he had trouble with the police and his saloon was broken up. He was also driven out of Norwalk. In consequence of a disgraceful row in Scheele's place last Sunday a warrant was issued for his arrest, and Constable Louis Drucker went on Wednesday afternoon to serve it.

Scheele met Drucker with a double-barreled shotgun. Drucker drew his revolver and kept him at bay, and then went for assistance. Returning with four others, he again attempted to arrest Scheele. The latter, thrusting the gun out of an upper window, took deliberate aim, fired, and Constable Drucker fell dead. Scheele then attempted suicide. He was found dangerously wounded, but it is thought now that he will recover.

The greatest excitement has prevailed since the tragedy, and but for the assassin's perilous condition he would surely have been lynched.

Constable Drucker was a most faithful officer, elected to his office three years ago. He discharged his duties so well that at the last election he was re-elected, being the only man on the Democratic ticket who won. He had the vote of the Christian and temperance element, and especially the Prohibitionists, who felt that although he was not himself a temperance man he could be relied on to do his duty.—Correspondence N. Y. Voice.

HOW EDWARDS COUNTY WAS SAVED.

It is said that forty years ago in Edwards county, Ill., an old Cumberland Presbyterian minister went into every school district in the county and taught the boys and girls temperance, and pledged them to total abstinence and for prohibition. Edwards county at that time was a great drinking place, and its case seemed almost a hopeless one. But this humble and faithful soul saw a work to be done, and he did it, though he was doubtless called crank and fanatic. Ten years went by, and those children he taught and pledged were grown up, and lo! behold, it was a temperance army that said to the saloon, "Go!" and go it had to. And for nearly thirty years that county has been rid of that abominable besom of destruction. Edwards county has been blessed; her taxes are light, her paupers are few. She has sent but one man to the penitentiary in twenty-five years, and he got liquor in another county that caused him to commit the crime. Dear friends, do you go to work with the children, if you can see no other work to do, and, as in Edwards county so in other counties, the children shall drive the saloon out. Drunkards we can seldom reform, but we can save the children and stop the making of drunkards out of them, and in a few years we shall find them our best soldiers in the warfare for temperance, for God and home and native land. So to work, to work, at once. Let no precious time be wasted.—Sel.

ANCIENT LICENSE LAWS.

Forasmuch as drunkenness is a vice to be abhorred of all nations, especially of those who hold out and profess ye Gospel of Jesus Christ, and seeing any strict law against ye sin will not prevail unless ye cause be taken away, it is therefore ordered by this court:

1. No person whatever shall——sell any wine under a quarter cask——but only to such taverners as are licensed by ye court to retail wine——

2. Yt no taverner be licensed to sell wine, but shall first pay a fine to ye treasury, and a yearly rent for his said license also.

3. Yt ye constables have power——to search any house suspected to sell wine contrary to ye order; also, any taverner or other person yt shall inform against any transgressor of ye order shall have half of ye fine for his encouragement.—Massachusetts Bay Colony, 1646.

The National Prohibition Committee have issued a call for the National Convention at Indianapolis, June 6, 1888. The call says: "All citizens who believe that the traffic in intoxicating drink is a disgrace and a national scourge, that it is destitute of wealth-producing power, robs labor, destroys capital, breeds lawlessness and fosters anarchy, seeks to, and already to an alarming extent does, dominate in municipal, State and national governments, that it threatens the safety of our homes and ought forever to be prohibited; who believe that to abolish the saloon will, in a great measure, abolish poverty, assist in solving the labor question, purify politics and add to the solidity of our institutions; who believe that this desirable reform needs for its consummation the respectable agency of a political party, clearly committed thereto as a matter of principle; who favor a general and progressive system of popular education; who would amend our election laws to secure greater purity of the ballot; who stand for a free ballot and a fair count for the white man North and the black man South; who favor the elevation of American laborers; who would foster our agricultural interests; who believe that the ballot in the hands of women will be the death knell to the liquor trade, in short all citizens who are agreed upon the wisdom and necessity of a separate political action in order to secure the overthrow of the rum power, are requested to unite in sending representatives to the convention."

Gov. St. John is turning things upside down in California. The Los Angeles Times has the following to say about his address there Jan. 8:

"The lecturer entered into the subject of the evening, picturing the vice, crime, poverty and unhappiness which follows in the wake of intemperance, with such vividness and coloring that his listeners could readily recall scenes met with in their every-day life. The speaker drew a picture of the boy's first glass to the last scene at the drunkard's death, and referred to the apathy of leading statesmen to this most important question of prohibition. He felt assured that the day is at hand when this question will be the all-important question of all right minded and Christian people. The women of the W. C. T. Unions are doing a noble work, and so great is the success that is attending their efforts that the time is not far distant when the brewers and saloon keepers will no longer have any weight in the political world.

"The lecturer was applauded often during the evening and the lecture was pronounced one of the most interesting ever listened to by the Los Angeles temperance people."

In retaliation for the hard fight being made by the temperance people of Leeds county, Ontario, eleven buildings have been burned at Irish Creek, the Methodist church and a tannery have been burned at Kemptville, and five constables have been stoned and assaulted. Dr. Ferguson, M. P., and three others, one of them a minister, were assailed and threatened with murder, and two deacons of a Baptist church have been warned to dismiss their minister or have their church burned. The temperance people are undismayed, however, and have had forty or fifty tavern keepers fined, have sent three offenders to the penitentiary, and have had the assailants of the constables fined $800.

King John of Abyssinia has such a horror of tobacco that he has issued a decree according to which any one of his subjects detected in the use of the weed shall be punished by having his lips or his nose cut off.—Sandy Hill Herald.

And our own Jim Blaine classes it among the necessaries of life, and favors removing the revenue tax imposed upon the weed. Verily, how great statesmen disagree on this subject of international importance.—Saratoga Eagle.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

SHALL THE POPE RULE THE NATIONS?

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The Nineteenth Century, for Jan., 1888, has an article entitled "Leo thirteenth and the Civil Power." It is of value only as showing the alarming influence of the papacy to-day. The author, Herbert, Bishop of Salford, does not deceive us in pointing to the cat-like paw of the present pontiff. Beneath the white glove of peace is the red hand of tyranny. Here are some of his statements, "When Napoleon had incorporated Rome with his empire and had locked up Pius VII. within the walls of Savona, he declared in a memorable conversation with Prince Metternich, that it was his intention to establish the pontiff in an exalted position of dignity and independence. He then unfolded his plans. He would bring the Pope to Paris; he would give him a palace in the neighborhood of the capital with a zone of neutral territory; he would transfer from Rome, as in fact he did, the archives of the Holy Office and of Propaganda; he would surround the Pope with the sacred college of cardinals; would allow him to send forth, to receive envoys and ambassadors, and would guarantee to him a civil list of six millions of francs. He would treat him with sovereign honors. 'Placed near Paris,' he continued, 'the Pope will find himself more in the center of 'the Catholic world—nearer to Vienna, Lisbon and Madrid—than when he resided in Rome.'" Metternich saw that Napoleon, with the Pope under his thumb, would be master of Europe; and he replied: "My master will give the Pope twelve millions. Will you consent?" "The proposal which Napoleon failed to carry out has been accomplished under the King of Italy. The law of guarantees of 1871 has thrown into legal form the plan sketched in 1810." The Pope is "the religious head of 225,000,000, who form the larger part of the modern democracy." As a matter of fact, the civil powers of the world are for the most part in direct relations with the Holy See. All the great states of the continent accredit ambassadors or ministers to the Vatican. Fifteen different governments treat diplomatically with the Pope, and even distant China and Japan desire to establish relations with him. Not only Catholics, therefore, but Protestant, non-Christian and pagan countries believe it to be their interest to recognize and treat with a spiritual power which is one of the de facto phenomena of the world. Lord John Russell established relations with Pius the Ninth; Mr. Gladstone's government felt the need of renewing them. The present government is understood to recognize their importance. The papacy was never more influential. Bismarck said in 1872, "We are not going to Canossa," but he is there to-day. Premier Salisbury sends Morley and Ripon to invoke the aid of the Vatican in subduing belligerant Ireland. President Cleveland bids for the Catholic vote in America by sending "His Holiness" a jubilee present. We need a Luther to arouse the Lord's hosts against the incoming foe.

Friday evening I heard Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., lecture in his tabernacle. He is a wonderful man. Five thousand people crowd in there to hear him every Sabbath. He has been there almost twenty years. There were 500 out this evening. The moment he opens his mouth you feel the power of his wonderful magnetism. He said: "The congress of scientists at Washington settled the meridian so that we have the same o'clock the world over. Pekin, St. Petersburg and London are nearer to us to-day than Poughkeepsie fifty years ago. The German and French languages are competing for Europe. One of them will eventually swallow up the other. Then that language will compete with the English for the world. The English will gain the day. Christ's kingdom will be set up in America. When Columbus and his 120 men left Spain in their three ships, they first took the sacrament. When they landed they knelt down and dedicated the new world to God. The Huguenots in Carolina, the Hollanders in New York, and the Puritans in New England did the same. This land has been dedicated to God. Let Christ's kingdom be established here, and all the world will follow the example. This world began with a theocracy, personal relation to God. Why not end in a Christocracy, personal relation to Christ.

Sabbath evening I preached in the Summerfield M. E. church, Greene and Washington avenues, Rev. W. L. Phillips, pastor. This is a congregation of 550 members. They have a fine building. Last fall they spent $5,000 in repairing it. Some of the prominent city officials worship here. National Reform called out many expressions of approval.

J. M. FOSTER.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Frank W. Smith, the evangelist whose enthusiastic speeches were a feature of the Elgin Sabbath convention last fall, is to aid in revival services in Crystal Lake and Algonquin, Ill., beginning Wednesday of this week.

—Mr. Henry, a carriage dealer of Chicago, has been one of the leaders in the great revivals at Geneva and Batavia, Ill. Of the latter a local paper says: "The revival meetings have been most phenomenal, and the interest and feeling are unabated. Batavia has not experienced such an awakening in many years, if indeed at all. There have been upwards of one hundred conversions, and many have been reclaimed to ways of righteousness. It has become almost useless for merchants to keep their stores open after 7 o'clock in the evening, as the streets are deserted and the meetings are crowded."

—Messrs. Moody and Sankey closed their work in Louisville, Ky., on the Sabbath with meetings in the afternoon and night. Long before the hours announced for the beginning of the services the immense auditorium of the tabernacle was crowded, and thousands were turned away, unable to gain admission. A collection was taken up for the benefit of the mission in the city conducted by Steve Holcombe, the reformed gambler, and between $3,000 and $4,000 raised. Mr. Moody, in speaking of his labors, said: "I am much pleased with the results, and consider that the services have been blessed in a full degree."

—Rev. C. E. Hansen, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran Emanuel church, Rockford, Ill., has resigned his position here and will go to Denver, Col. His place has been filled by Rev. C. Roos, of Pueblo, Col.

—Rev. P. Moerdyk of Grand Rapids, Mich., has lately been instrumental in forming a ministerial union among the Holland Reformed churches of Western Michigan. Revs. Moerdyk and Lepeltak, who are well remembered for their opposition to the lodge in the General Synod of the church some years ago, are prominent members of the body.

—Pastor D. Simon of the Lutheran church at Prospect, Ohio, has been offered the position as principal of a seminary at Hickory, N. C., and while willing to accept the call his congregation refused to permit the change.

—The Baptist and Congregational churches at Kewanee, Ill., have been having gracious revival seasons. In the latter forty-three were recently received by vote into the church, thirty-three on confession. This makes 145 which have been received during three years, 116 of them on confession. The membership is now 306.

—Rev. Dr. W. H. French of Cincinnati assisted lately in dedicating a new United Presbyterian church in Delhi, Ohio.

—Rev. Dr. J. B. Lee, of Bovina, N.Y., attended a meeting of the New York State Prohibition committee at Utica where he offered and advocated two resolutions, the first expressing determined opposition to every effort of the rum traffic to deprive us of any part of the Sabbath; the second deprecating the holding of any strictly political meetings on the Lord's day. Both were adopted.

—Dr. Lewis Davis of Dayton spent several days recently at Westerville, Ohio, and assisted in the services by which the day of prayer for colleges was observed in Otterbein University. He delivered also the monthly lecture in the college chapel.

—Cheering intelligence comes to us just as we go to press, says the last Free Methodist, from brother Shemeld at Estcourt (South Africa). In a letter to brother Eby dated December 19, he writes that he intended shortly to baptize five native converts who had never been in a meeting until the mission was established at Estcourt. He also tells of a whole congregation of natives arising to say that they "trusted in Jesus."

—There seems to be a well founded hope for an early union of the Reformed church in America and the Reformed church in the United States, formerly known as "Dutch" and "German" Reformed. A meeting of the committees of conference appointed by the two Synods of the churches, was recently held in New York. While its proceedings were only initiatory, the fraternal and earnest spirit by which they were characterized, affords reason to hope that a union of the churches represented in the conference will be effected at an early day on a basis cordially accepted by both. At this meeting arrangements were made for a public convention to be held in Philadelphia some time in March next, at which carefully considered papers upon the subject of the proposed union will be read by prominent and influential men of both churches, and an opportunity will be offered for a full discussion of the various phases of the subject.

—The Kentucky Legislature has empowered the deacons of the Methodist church to elect ushers upon whom shall be conferred full police authority to maintain order during the services.

—Rev. Mr. Raber is holding a series of very successful evangelical meetings at Rochester, Ind. He is being assisted by Ed Steiner, a prominent Hebrew, who some time ago renounced Judaism and embraced the Christian faith.

—The centenary of the first General Assembly of the Presbyterians of the United States will be celebrated next May. Presbyterians throughout the country are much interested, and are making great efforts to mark the event by raising $1,000,000 to add to the fund for the benefit of superannuated ministers, and the needy windows and children of deceased ministers belonging to that society.

—While women are wanted in almost every mission field, there seems to be a peculiarly urgent call for them in Southern Europe, particularly in Italy. Evangelical schools of higher female education are wanted to satisfy the awakening desire of the nobler born Italian young women, who are beginning to recognize what such institutions have done for their sex in England and America. It is a hopeful sign that dissatisfaction with the convent system of education is growing, and an institution planted there now with the aim and spirit of Mt. Holyoke or Wellesley would be a powerful factor in the regeneration of these papal lands.

—The Japanese women of Osaka have formed a "Ladies' Christian Association," and at a recent meeting in the Y. M. C. A. hall in that place, an audience composed of ladies only is said to have numbered over 1,000.

—An association has been incorporated in St. Louis, consisting of a number of Lutheran gentlemen of that city, who propose to establish a school conducted after the German gymnasiums, and to bs called "Walther College," in honor of the late Dr. Walther whose portrait and history appeared in these columns last November.

LITERATURE.

In the death of Prof. Asa Gray of Harvard University, not America alone, but the world loses one of its great scientists. Few men have contributed more to his special department, that of botany, than he. His researches and writings cover nearly the whole field, and his text books make his name familiar to every student. For forty years he has been preparing a descriptive work upon the plants of North America, which, though scarcely more than half completed, is a monument to his industry and scientific attainments. To him, more than to any other student and investigator, is due the establishment and acceptance of the natural system in botanical science. Along with most botanists Prof. Gray early accepted the Darwinian hypothesis, yet ever held it in a form consistent with belief not only in a personal God, but in the creeds of the Christian church. Not least among his just titles to fame is the work he did in thus reconciling what so many, both among scientists and Christians, represent as necessarily antagonistic. For forty-five years Prof. Gray was a member of the First Congregational church of Cambridge, and his pastor bears testimony how reverently and faithfully he bore his part in its worship and its work. It is a high tribute to a life of nearly four score when it can be said by his pastor of many years, as is the case of this learned scientist, that "Certain as he is to live in his works, even more than for that which he has done, will he be remembered and revered for what he was."—Intelligencer.

Vick's Magazine for February is full of advice about Geraneums, Chrysanthemums, Orchids, and house plants and their culture in general; and students will read with pleasure the second part of "Botanizing on the Great Kanawha."

"Woman" very appropriately devotes much space to the Young Women's Christian Association of New York, whose work of education, improvement and charity is carried on from their beautiful building at No. 7 East Fifteenth street. The various departments are stored with useful and valuable hints for women workers of all ranks and classes.

The March Century will contain the story of "Colonel Rose's Tunnel at Libby Prison," told by one of the one hundred and nine Union officers who escaped on the night of February 9, 1864. The successful construction of this tunnel, dug from a dark corner of the cellar of the prison, through fifty feet of solid earth,—the only tools being two broken chisels and a wooden spittoon in which to carry out the dirt—was one of the most remarkable incidents of the war. Colonel Rose, to whose indomitable will and perseverance the success of the scheme was due, is now a captain in the 16th United States Infantry, and of the fourteen men who assisted him in digging the tunnel, eleven are still living. The narrative in the March Century, which is illustrated, forms one of the untechnical papers supplementing the War Series, and it is said to be one of the most romantic records that the Century has ever printed.

The English Illustrated Magazine for February is somewhat domestic in character. Harrison Weir's description of fowls is rather English than American, but is entertaining and instructive; so also is "The Weasel and his Family." "Coaching Days and Coaching Ways" is continued with its fulness of illustration of old English sights, and sketches of old incident and history. Prof. Minto's story of the Peasant's Rebellion in the time of Richard II. and of Wickliffe loses none of its interest. It gives some instructive lessons to the student of social and political economy.

Dr. Pierson's sketch of Prof. P.P. Bliss, who went down with his devoted wife at at Ashtabula in 1876, is an attractive feature of Words and Weapons for February, from whence we are borrowing Sabbath-school lesson notes during Miss Flagg's confinement. It is a truthful, pathetic narrative with an excellent estimation of the great singer's powers. Dr. Pentecost's contributions to this number are good for every Christian's home reading.

The revival of the Romish discussion by President Cleveland's ill-advised present to the Pope, finds an able advocate in Father O'Connor's magazine, the Converted Catholic. The latest phases of the discussion are considered in an original way. If all pastors would read this magazine they would find abundant material for frequent and profitable instruction of their people.

In Harris's New Seed Catalogue for 1888 there is a valuable article on the subject of Fertilizers for the Garden from the pen of Joseph Harris. There is no more reliable authority. The catalogue is free to all who send their address on a postal card to Joseph Harris Seed Co., Moreton Farm, Rochester, N. Y.

The Swiss Cross tells its youthful readers something about the productions of Gautemala with illustrations of its singular vegetation. Major J. Wesley Powell's address in memory of the late Prof. Spencer F. Baird has also a place.

Gregory's Seed Catalogue for '88, Marblehead, Mass., maintains the reputation of this celebrated seedsman. But few men in this business have originated so many valuable varieties of vegetables as J. J. H. Gregory.

LODGE NOTES.

The Royal Adelphia, a society which has Detroit for its birthplace, has extended almost over the entire country. Conclaves are now being organized in Ohio.

The annual meetings of the Iowa Departments Grand Army of the Republic, Sons of Veterans, and Woman's Relief Corps will be held at Cedar Rapids April 11 and 12.

The annual reception by the Greek letter fraternities of the State University at Madison, Wis, was held Friday evening, and was an exceedingly swell affair, say the dispatches, participated in by about seventy couple. One reason for supplanting Dr. John Bascom, who so ably presided over the University, was his dislike of the lodge.

The Mystic circle is the name of a society organized in various portions of Detroit about two years ago. It has gone out of existence in the place of its nativity, but finds people in other places ready to be duped. Its local bodies are called "rulings," and "the Supreme Ruling," which in the language of ordinary people would be a term to be used with reverence, is only a kind of grand lodge.

The butt welders, lap-welders, socket-makers, and helpers employed at the Continental, Pennsylvania, Pittsburg, and National Tube Works at Pittsburg, to the number of 1,000 have made application to the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers for a charter. At present they are connected with the Knights of Labor. They have decided to leave that organization and form a lodge of the Amalgamated Association.

At a meeting on Sunday of last week in New York of the Central Labor Union, the Maltsters' Union complained that the brewery firm of F. and M. Scharefer are using Milwaukee non-union malt. It was reported that the firm would give up the use of the objectionable malt if all the other brewers in the city do so. The matter was referred to the arbitration committee. There was received from the National Union of Brewery Employes a list of all the places where Milwaukee beer is sold in New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City. Copies were sent to all labor organizations in these cities with a request not to patronize those places. This looks hopeful to see the lodge boycotting the saloon. There are some good friends to whom we commend the item. But after all it is only Satan casting out Satan.

The Southern Guide of Hearne, Texas, seems to be one of the blind leaders of whom the Lord warns us if we follow we shall be ditched. In a late number it has this commendation of a lodge missionary, who, though a preacher of the Gospel of Christ, now appears as an emissary of the devil: "Rev. J. Harvey Jones, S. G. W. C. Templa of the Grand United order of Good Templars of the world, contemplates at the coming meeting of the Colored Men's State Convention, producing matter for the organization of an order among colored people that will concentrate our people in a good cause. As far as we can learn from Elder Jones the order is to include three important features: 1. Temperance. 2. Insurance. 3. Labor. The order will answer a great demand on part of our people in America."

The Master's Carpet.

BY

E. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 631 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 420 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

The Christian's Secret of A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

HOME AND HEALTH.

USEFUL HINTS.

Rubbing with celery is said to remove the smell of onions from the hand.

Highly-polished brass may be kept absolutely bright and free from tarnish by thinly coating the articles with a varnish of bleached shellac and alcohol.

If a bedstead creaks at each movement of the sleeper, remove the slats and wrap the ends of each in old newspapers. This will prove a complete silencer.

Never wash a jelly bag with soap, or a strainer cloth, a pudding bag or dumpling nets. The next thing that is put into or passed through these things will surely taste of the flavoring of alkali.

To tell cake in the oven, draw it gently forward and put the ear close to the loaf; if it is not done there will be a little sputtering sound; when it is thoroughly baked there will be no sound.

To brighten a Brussels, or any carpet that is faded, sponge in a mixture of one part ox-gall to two parts water. This is excellent. A lady recently bought a much-faded carpet (Brussels) at a second-hand store, and restored it to almost its original beauty in this way.

To remove "red mites" from canaries hang a piece of new white flannel in the cage at night, next the perch, so that it shades the bird from the light. In the morning you will find a few mites on the flannel; wash, or put in a new piece the following night, and continue doing so until they are all removed. It is also well to scald the cage. The perches should be of red cedar wood.

BREAD-MAKING.

Bread is the "staff of life." It has been called the "sovereign of the kitchen;" it is the most important article of food, in the eyes of a good housekeeper, for not a single meal is complete without it, and we are pretty sure, if we see good, home-made bread on the table, to find all the other food well cooked. With good judgment and proper manipulation, five large loaves of superfine bread can be made of seven pounds of flour and a two cent cake of compressed yeast. They will be sweet, light, substantial and nourishing, and will be highly satisfactory to the palate as well. The time to make it will be considered of little value, when once home-made bread has been substituted for the baker's loaf. It is very easy to make bread after the following directions. If strictly followed there is no "luck" about it, it is sure to be good. Put one-third of a cake of compressed yeast to soak in a cup of warm water for an hour or more. Into a warm pan or bowl sift two heaping quarts of flour, one large spoonful of sugar and the same of salt. Now into one pint of warm water put one spoonful of lard and allow it to melt. The lard makes the bread tender, and the sugar takes the raw flavor from the flour. Stir this pint of water into the flour, and also stir in the yeast, softened and dissolved in the cup of water. This is all the liquid required for two loaves; but do not stir it into all the flour, but into a portion only, in the middle of the pan. This is "setting the sponge." Allow three hours at least for it to rise, keeping it warm and well covered. Then mix all the flour into the sponge, put in the hands and work and knead it for thirty minutes, into a large, round mass, smooth and puffy. Add no more flour, except to keep the hands from sticking. Cover well and keep in a warm place over night. In the morning divide into two equal parts; make them shapely, but handle now as little and lightly as possible. Bake in buttered tins, five by ten inches in size, and square cornered, as then the slices can be uniform, whereas in round tins they cannot be. Set the two loaves in a warm place to rise: an hour ought to double their size. When they are ready, after scoring twice each way across the top, for a moderate oven, where they should have a steady fire and remain one hour. The scoring prevents the sides from cracking and improves the shape of the loaves. When done, remove from the tins, stand the loaves on one side and cover with a cloth till cold. If the crust has baked too hard or too brown, wring a napkin out of cold water and lay upon it and cover closely. This sufficiently softens the crust. A tin box is best for keeping bread. Stale slices make better toast than fresh bread. There are many ways of using stale bread, so there is no need of wasting any.

Potato bread is much thought of by some, and it certainly has the merit of keeping moist longer than other kinds; but bread as good as it should be is soon eaten. In order to make it the potatoes should be boiled, well done, peeled, mashed exceedingly fine, stirred into the water for the bread, strained into the flour, and then the dissolved yeast added; then proceed as with the plain bread.

Water makes better bread than milk, and milk adds uselessly to the cost.

Plain people, those who depend upon their food for health and strength for their daily labor, and women who have the care of providing the table, as well as spending the money therefor, will find that by making their own bread, besides having a more nutritious, wholesome article than can be bought, they have scored a strong point in economy, also. This is but one of the many ways of saving money, or rather, living well on a little. One would not believe how good a table can be set with a few dollars, by judicious investment of them Even pies and puddings, "fit to set before the king," do not really cost as much as might be supposed when all the items are counted up. More than the material, the way it is put together tells, and the wife who really has the interests of husband and home at heart, will spare no pains to buy the most and best for her money, and having made her purchases, in learning how to make the best possible use of them.—Katherine Armstrong, in Independent.

LOW RATES TO PACIFIC COAST.

The new agreement between the transcontinental lines authorizes a lower rate to Pacific coast points via the Manitoba-Pacific route than is made via any other line. Accommodations first-class. CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 212 East 9th St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

An Excellent Route.

Tourists, business men, settlers and others desiring to reach any place in Central or Northern Montana, Dakota, Minnesota, or Puget Sound and Pacific Coast points should investigate regarding the rates and advantages offered by this route. A rate from Chicago or St. Paul to Puget Sound or Pacific Coast points $5.00 lower than via any other line is guaranteed. Accommodations first-class. Great Helena and Benton, Fort Buford and Bottineau, Dakota, are a few of the principal points reached via recent extensions of this road. For maps or other information address C. H. "In all respects more than answers my expectations. It is very neat, of a form convenient for use, firmly bound, of large, clear type, with contents of just that general character which the popular reader requires—comprehensive, accurate, and compact. Its marvelously low cost makes it a prize eagerly to be sought in every intelligence-loving household."—PROF. HENRY N. DAY, D.D. LL.D., Yale College, New Haven, Conn.

"We can hardly say too much for the Manifold. It is a rich blessing to the man who feels unable to invest in the larger encyclopedias. We deem ourselves personally unfortunate in having invested in the higher priced works. We have to-day twenty-five volumes of the Britannica, at a cost in cash of $150, and our set is incomplete by at least six to eight volumes. Alden's Manifold actually covers every practical want in this line. The bulky encyclopedia is a piece of showy extravagance that a man will sadly mourn before he gets it paid for. If you wish an encyclopedia, take Alden's before any other."—Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, Ohio.

FARM NOTES.

THRIFTY SWEDISH FARMERS.

At Stanton, Iowa, there is a co-operative store run by a branch of the Farmers' Alliance of Scott township. The business has a manager, a book keeper, and five clerks, and is playing havoc with the trade of the old merchants of the village. The store was started last May, the enterprise of a society incorporated last winter as the Montgomery Farmers' Industrial Association. A report was made at the annual meeting of the association, which shows that the sales of the store have been large and mainly for cash. By frequent turning of the capital invested, a profit of fifty per cent on the capital stock is reported for the eight months the store has been running. Elated with their success, the Farmers' Association will add agricultural implements to the business, and are talking also of starting a bank. Scott township has a considerable population of Swedes, and nearly all the members of the association are of that nationality.

A WORD ABOUT THE CHILDREN'S GARDEN.—Let the children have a piece of the cleanest and most easily worked and dryest and earliest land in the whole gar den. Let it be well worked and got ready for them. Land that has been thoroughly manured a year or two previous is best. Do not manure it this year, but make it rich by sowing broadcast, early in the spring, four or five pounds each of superphosphate and nitrate of soda to the square rod. Such a soil will be free from weeds and much pleasanter for the children to dig and hoe and rake, than a soil filled with ordinary manure, and will produce a much more luxuriant growth.

Show the children how to prepare the land and plant the seeds. Last spring we happened into a celebrated lawyer's garden, and found the nurse and the children sowing flower seeds in a border on the side of the walk. A large quantity of fresh manure had been spaded in and the surface was rough. The nurse girl was raking the lumps of manure onto the grass and trying to make it smooth and level. She made the border hollow in the center with the sides as high as the grass and the stone coping. The children were making holes four or five inches deep and dropping the seeds into them. We told the nurse that those seeds came from us, and asked her to let us have the rake and we would show her how to plant them. We ran the rake along the edge of the grass and pulled the soil toward the center, and broke the lumps and left the surface rounding and smooth, and then made a few shallow circles and showed the children how to sow the seed and cover them with a thin layer of soil. It did not look quite so much like the work of a vigorous hen, but we could not help thinking that it was too bad to ask children and a nurse girl to do work which taxed the skill of an old gardener. The Joseph Harris Catalogue.

EASE AND BENEFIT OF DEHORNING — A Vermont correspondent of the Mirror and Farmer relates that on the 25th of April last he dehorned his bull, two vicious cows, the terror of the herd, three yearlings and four calves. They showed signs of very little pain, and when let loose went directly to eating and chewing their cuds. The cows were fresh in milk and did not shrink in the quantity at all, as he could see, but their spirits were broken and they were quiet and inoffensive. The bull had the conceit all taken out of him; he is no longer a man-killer, and is driven by the cows not yet dehorned, but which will be before winter opens. This seems strong testimony in favor of dehorning.

WARMING POULTRY FOOD —Experienced poultry breeders appreciate the importance of warming the food given to the poultry during the cold weather, but many farmers as well as novices do not seem to, as they do not practice it. Our method is to warm all the food, whether mixed or cracked or fed whole. In feeding whole corn warm it thoroughly in the oven, nearly parching it, and then let it cool off sufficiently to admit of the fowls eating it without discomfort. The cooked food which is fed from time to time should be given warm, and when necessary, warmed over from time to time. It is surprising what a difference warm food will make in the supply of eggs during the continuance of cold weather, and especially so if the fowls are well sheltered and properly cared for otherwise.

FOWLS IN COLD WEATHER.—According to good practical authority, when the cold weather begins the capacity of the hens for finding a portion of their food will be lessened; hence, they must be supplied by the poultryman. Not only will ground oyster shells and gravel be necessary, but green food and water. Green food is easily obtained by using finely chopped clover, which should be steeped in boiling water and fed early in the morning.

ONIONS FROM SEED —The secret of raising good onions is to sow the best of seed early in the spring. The land must be rich and the crop kept free from weeds. If the weeds once get the start of the onions, you will have "scallions" or thick necked onions. The Joseph Harris Seed Co., Moreton Farm, Rochester, N. Y., are large onion growers, and they recommend the use of superphosphate and nitrate of soda for onions and other garden crops. In their new catalogue for 1888 they give directions for using them. The catalogue is free.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND:

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The papers report a pitiful case of sickness and destitution in the outskirts of the city. A carpenter long sick and unable to support a family of eight was found with them in a starving condition last week. Relief was immediately furnished the unfortunate but worthy family, but not from the secret "charitable orders."

Work on a new water tunnel for the supply of the city was begun Dec. 15th. A shaft was sunk 75 feet when quicksand flowed in and half filled it. At the depth of 90 feet three tunnels will start: one to go out four miles under the lake, and two others to pumping works, one to the south and one west under the river, each a mile long.

The festival of the Music Teachers' National Association, to be given next July at the Exposition Building under the direction of Theodore Thomas, is awakening considerable interest. Rehearsals will begin on Monday evening, March 19.

The Cooke Brewery Company has nearly completed their machinery for utilizing the flow of natural gas. No doubt is entertained as to the continuity of the flow, and the gas will soon be applied for practical purposes.

The murder of A. J. Snell, a well known and very wealthy real estate owner on the West Side last week, gave a shock to the city. Two burglars broke into his house, robbed the safe in the basement, and were ransacking the parlors when discovered by Mr. Snell. They shot him dead and escaped. There is abundant condemnation of the police management which has changed hands from corrupt Democratic politicians to Republican, nearly as bad.

COUNTRY.

Dakota's lowest temperature in five years was reached yesterday—56 degrees below zero at Pembina.

The packing-house of Dupont's powder works, near Wilkesbarre, Pa., exploded with a terrific shock this forenoon, demolishing the building and killing four men.

Mrs. Sarah J. Robinson, charged with having caused the death of several members of her family with poison, who has been on trial in Boston, was to day declared "guilty of murder in the first degree."

Four frame dwellings at Kutztown, Pa., were totally destroyed by fire Thursday morning, and John Hopp and his daughter, aged fifteen years, and a son aged nine years, were burned to death. The houses were occupied by four families and several were severely burned. All of them suffered intensely from the extreme cold while seeking shelter. It is thought that the fire was caused by Hopp, who was intoxicated.

An explosion in the Dupont Powder Works at Wapwallopin, Pa., Friday forenoon, blew four men to pieces and wounded forty others, a dozen of whom are not expected to recover. Nearly every building in the place was wrecked, and for miles around the effect of the detonation was felt. Chimneys fell from houses at Nanticoke and Wanamic, and children ran shrieking from the school buildings. Almost every window in Shickshenny was smashed, and citizens were thrown to the ground by the shock.

Concerning the loss of life in the recent storm, Railroad Commissioner N. T. Smith of Dakota says: "As far as learned the following is an authentic summary of the loss of life in the recent storm: Beadle county, 9; Bonhomme, 19; Codington, 3; Jerauld, 6; Clark, 2; Edmunds, 6; Brown, 5; Haud, 7; Kingsbury, 3; Lincoln, 29; Spink, 4; Turner, 18; Yankton, 3; total, 114."

Two men were digging up some dynamite, which had been buried to protect it until wanted to use in a gas well near Bellevue, Ohio, Friday, when one of them struck the explosive material with his pick. The explosion instantly killed the two men, and caused such a shock as to suggest an earthquake at Tiffin, Sandusky, Put-in-Bay, and other points in that locality.

The explosion of the boiler of a traction engine in the woods in Liberty township, near Wabash, Ind., Friday afternoon, caused the death of three men, all frightfully mutilated by flying iron.

FOREIGN.

The peace with which Bismarck's speech of last week invested the European situation, says the Inter Ocean, has passed away; it is now believed that there was really nothing pacific in it beyond leaving the Czar the alternative of peace or war. If the Berlin official press were not bridled, its opinion on the situation would be found to concur in Russia's convictions that war is inevitable The sincerity of the Czar's desire for peace is not doubted, but it is known that influences surround him and he is unable to withstand the pressure in the direction of war. The ostentatious efforts of the Berlin and Vienna governments at reconciliation are taken at their face value. Military activity continues in full swing on every side. The most significant feature on the German side is the extension of the strategic railways on the eastern frontier.

Bismarck's triumph on the military bill resulted in weakening the opposition spirit, and adding to the cohesion of the government groups on other questions. The only check the government has sustained has been on the anti-socialist bill. Socialists throughout the country are, in consequence, celebrating the event. At Stettin, Grabout, and Altdam a minor state of siege prevails under the socialist laws. An attempt was made to assassinate Police Commissary Hempel at Walsteim. Several arrests have been made in connection with the shooting. One ball pierced the Commissary in the right knee.

Within his own circle the Czar eulogizes Bismarck's speech. Official opinion holds that the Chancellor's words and diplomacy are irreconcilable. In the eyes of the Czar's advisers the Austro-Hungarian league of peace continues to be an offensive allegiance against Russia. A counter-alliance to this league is urged.

An avalanche which occurred on the line of the Arlberg railway buried the Laugen Station and a mail train. Two thousand men are at work attempting to rescue the imprisoned persons. Two large avalanches have blocked a tunnel on the line, and it will probably be a week before it is again opened, despite the efforts of a large number of the troops and workmen who are engaged in removing the snow.

The German Crown Prince, who had a surgical operation performed on his throat Thursday, was reported to be "uneasy and feverish" the next day, but better Saturday.

The government police in London are making arrests in that city of Irish Nationalist members of Parliament, accused of violating the law against the home-rule agitation.

SPIKE THEIR GUNS.

A few dollars expended in purchasing tracts and scattering them about through the community will perhaps do more to spike the guns of noisy secretists than anything else that could be suggested. Men have heard the lodges praised so often and so boldly, that they have come to believe that they are what they profess to be. It is high time that the war is carried into Africa itself. This is the work which the N. C. A. has in view, and would be glad to push forward in every quarter of the land. Who will help to do it?

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored bever age which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000,000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.
The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

Judge Noonan of St. Louis has given a decision which will be music to the ears of the numerous secret society treasurers who are expecting to decamp with the funds of their lodges. The Iron Hall is a secret insurance order with headquarters in Indianapolis. Suit was brought in St. Louis to determine whether it should be subject to the insurance laws which govern the open organizations in the same business. Judge Noonan decides the lodge not subject to law—in fact, so far as their principal business is concerned they are lawless bodies. The secret organizations claim a great victory. Their joy only betrays their evil nature. None but blacklegs and thieves should be pleased with such a condition so long as laws are just and wise.

An encouraging evidence that the intelligent people of the country are awake to the menace of statehood for Mormondom is seen in the very able discussions of the system in the public press. Ten or twelve years ago the objection of polygamy was paramount. We are coming to know that that feature of the Mormon system is not the fundamental difficulty, but the domination of a priesthood over a degraded and bigoted people sworn to obedience or death by the lodge oaths of the Endowment House. A paper in the Congregationalist of Boston, by Rev. M. W. Montgomery, of Minneapolis, is one of the notable contributions to this discussion. So are also Rev. R. G. McNiece's paper in Our Day for January, and two articles in the Interior of February 2, on "Statehood for Utah," and "Mormonism as an Ecclesiastical Power."

The press reports that anarchists are renewing their organization and effort in this city. Some three weeks ago a group met in the back room of a saloon on Clybourne avenue on the North Side, which will hold secret meetings regularly. On a Sabbath still later, another group was formed in a saloon in the southwest part of the city. Another group was formed the same day which will hold open meetings for public discussion and meet in secret to transact their business. All these groups have united in putting forth a circular which begins: "The blood of our innocent brothers slain in Chicago crieth from the ground," and closes with an appeal to "Be ready when the trumpet-call of the revolution sounds the signal." It is also reported that one of the most prominent of European anarchists, an Englishman whose real name is secret, is coming to Chicago to take editorial charge of August Spies' paper, the Arbiter Zeitung, which was the headquarters of conspiracy before the 4th of May massacre. He proposes to make the sheet the organ of the most advanced revolutionary ideas, and will keep out of a quarrel with the police as long as he can. All good citizens will hope this may not be long. These men will find that Mayor Harrison is no longer ruler in Chicago, and we hope the city may never know his like again.

Daniel E. Sickles, whose name first became a household word because of a bloody tragedy in Washington, and afterward through his valor and skill as a Union General, is now an old man. His judgment has been matured by wide observation, and the fervor of his political zeal tempered by experience. He was first a Democrat, after the war a Republican, and in 1884 he voted for Cleveland. A few days ago he is said to have made the following statement: "The war of the rebellion was really a whisky war. Yes, whisky caused the rebellion! I was in the Congress preceding the war. It was whisky in the morning—the morning cocktail—a Congress of whisky-drinkers. Then whisky all day; whisky and gambling all night. Drinks before Congress opened its morning session, drinks before it adjourned. Scarcely a committee room without its demijohn of whisky, and the clink of the glasses could be heard in the Capitol corridors. The fights—the angry speeches—were whisky. The atmosphere was redolent with whisky—nervous excitement seeking relief in whisky, and whisky adding to nervous excitement. Yes, the rebellion was launched in whisky. If the French Assembly were to drink some morning one-half the whisky consumed in any one day by that Congress, France would declare war against Germany in twenty minutes."

The case of the German Crown Prince Frederick William, at San Remo, became more serious some days ago, and his physicians were constrained to perform the difficult operation of tracheotomy, or the insertion of a silver tube in the wind-pipe to allow proper breathing. The patient is doing well under their treatment. The London Illustrated News has for some weeks had an artist correspondent at San Remo, whose sketches are of great interest, because of the importance of the health of the Prince to Germany and the peace of Europe. A writer in the forthcoming March Century is of a different opinion respecting the influence of Bismarck in the case of the accession of Frederick William. The popular impression is that his wife, Victoria of England, would supercede the old Chancellor with a constitutional government and an era of peace. The Century writer is of the opinion that so long as Bismarck is Chancellor,—that is, so long as he lives, for no new Kaiser will be likely to take the responsibility of displacing him,—things will probably continue to run in the accustomed course. A question for Germany is, who or what is there to replace Bismarck when he too disappears? There is no minister living whose measures have been so often defeated in Parliament as Bismarck's; but as he is responsible only to the King and Kaiser, the German Parliament cannot drive him from office by any direct or implied vote of want of confidence.

THE FISHERMAN'S DREAM.

BY THE LATE GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

The rocks are imaged in the lake;
Nor winds nor waves the silence break;
White cities o'er the waters gleam,
And nature's self seems in a dream,
As dreaming there a fisher lay,
Who'd caught no fish the live-long day.

Around from every hill and glen
Rose mem'ries of heroic men;
And grandly towering over all,
A mountain like a pedestal,
Had borne a monarch to the skies,
A nation's solemn sacrifice.

But with high deeds the hero now
No longer wreath'd that mountain's brow;
For in God's heritage so fair,
The cunning fox had made his lair,
And altar fires lay cold and dead
Beneath the foreign conq'ror's tread.

The dreamer saw a form appear
From out the waters, and draw near;
It stopp'd before him on the beach,
A cloud in shape, a man in speech,
And said "Awake! and follow me,
And cast your net in life's deep sea."

Three fishers rose and followed on,
Through the bright fields of air and sun,
Till on a pedestal they stood
High o'er a sin-accursed land;
And there the cloud in words of grace
With other clouds talked face to face.

And as they fell like drops of rain
Those gracious words on vines and grain,
These ripen'd into wine and bread
On which all famish'd souls are fed;
And death, uprising from its shroud,
For life immortal blessed the cloud.

Not in dew alone or shower
Fell those gracious words of power;
Against a crag its side was rent,
Wherefrom its very life was spent:
Still glowing in immortal day
And blessing still it passed away.

The fisher woke; and near him stood
A cloud-like image off'ring food;
For lo! live coals were at its feet
And on them fish enough to eat.
Nay, not enough alone, but more;
The net when cast came full to shore.

Yea, full before the fisher's sight
There stood the cloud of Horeb's height,—
The cloud baptismal that had glow'd
To show escaping slaves the road,
The same that filled the temple when
God's fire came down to dwell with men.

The fisher was awake at last;
The dawn had come and night was past;
Strange was the vision, strange as true,
That vanished from his waking view;
But stranger still, that morning dream,
Made all things else unreal seem.

A CLERICAL SECRET SOCIETY.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

A curious secret society is in course of formation among the English clergy for the supply of written or lithographed sermons. Many laymen envy the privilege of the preacher—that is, articulate laymen, who are charmed with the music of their own voice, and who look upon the pulpit with the same feelings as the excluded Peri looked upon Paradise. No secular rostrum, no platform to which the average speaker can lay claim, can compare with the pulpit, for there the speaker has all his own way. The sermon time, with its enforced armistice of controversy, with the triumph of one side taken for granted, must be to many an enviable position. The members of our congregations are forbidden by a spirit of decorum from interruption and from going away before the sermon is finished.

There are many cases, however, where the clergy get tired of this weekly drain upon their resources; occasionally, because the people complain of the sameness of the sermons and want of something fresher and more inspiring. For the relief of these tired, dull, or idle clerics, a variety of expedients have been adopted, and among others the buying of sermons. A friend of ours, some time ago when in London, called to see an old school-fellow who was manager of a sermon repository. The postman called with a number of letters, when the manager shortly said to our friend, "Just listen to this, it is from a clergyman: 'Dear Sir:—Send me by return of post one dozen lithographed sermons, light, and airy, suitable for these hot afternoons.' "

Serious objections have been offered to this custom, for it has occasionally happened that several neighboring clergymen have been supplied with the same sermons, which has given rise to the suspicion that they have been stealing from the same place. A case has been furnished where three clergymen who were supplying a vacant pulpit preached the same sermon in the same pulpit on successive Sabbaths. When the text was announced the third day, the clerk, who could bear it no longer, interrupted the clerical orator with the words, "Nay, sir, let's have summat fresh, for we're not half as bad as ye think we are."

This new society offers for the modest sum of five shillings per year to supply monthly packets of four Sermona Corpora. These skeletons are not intended to be preached as they stand, though they may be in an extremity. Still the composition is to be treated as a framework. The manuscript will have alternate pages blank for any remarks of the preacher. These outlines will not contain any doctrinal or disputable matter, but simply be "useful, practical, church sermons." The blank pages may be utilized for all special teaching. The same framework may be used for the setting forth of views according to the ecclesiastical leanings of the preacher.

A curious and interesting aspect is the elaborate precautions to be taken for the prevention of detection in the use of these skeletons. Circulars will be sent to a certain number of clergymen in each diocese—only one in a given locality—and time allowed for a reply before sending to any one else. The first applicant from each district will be entered as a subscriber, and on no account will any other from that district be entered. The extreme secrecy of the movement is an acknowledgment that something is wrong in the system. It is difficult and perhaps impossible for the average clergyman to furnish one or two fresh and original discourses per week, on the duties, difficulties, dangers and helps of the Christian life. But where is the need of the secrecy? Why not borrow openly instead of secretly, and good sermons instead of bad ones? The treasure-house of pulpit literature is well stocked with sermons of the highest rank, sermons that have in them a perennial freshness, and which the onward flow of the ages will never make old.

AN OUTSIDE VIEW OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

BY PROF. W. J. COLEMAN.

IV.—THEIR BROTHERLY LOVE.

These secret societies present themselves and desire to be considered as formed for the purpose of securing brotherly kindness among men. They call one another brother, comrade and companion, and talk of the bonds of fraternal union. The orators of these orders urge upon the public the benefits to be obtained by joining this community of "brothers true," because they are filled with such loyalty to one another that a member will seldom lack for aid in time of need. If a man is going on a journey, he is exhorted to join because his badge or grip will find him friends whenever he goes. If he is starting in business, he is urged to join because these secret order men will patronize their own people. It will secure him customers to belong to this society. If a man is about to enlist in the army, he is invited to join, because if he is captured by the enemy, some "brother" there will help him.

After some years of absence from a town in which I had attended school, I returned, and while in conversation with an old schoolmate who had entered on the practice of law, I noticed the square and compass on his coat, and said, "So you belong to the Masons?"

"Yes," he answered, a little reluctantly.

"I thought that you were too sensible a man to do that," said I; and he answered, "As a lawyer, I of course have some political aspirations, and there is no use of a man who is not a Mason trying to get anything in politics in this town."

A young man of my acquaintance went to a physician for some medicine for a cold. He came home full of life. After taking one dose of the medicine he fell into a stupor, and after the second dose, given an hour later, he died. He was a strong, hearty man at nine o'clock, and a corpse at eleven the same evening. The medicine was found to be so strong with aconite that a man in perfect health who touched it with the end of his tongue, lost the power of speech for several minutes. After the coroner's jury were impanneled the doctor and his counsel came to attend the investigation. This jury which consisted in part of Masons was soon discharged and a second impanneled which consisted wholly of Masons, and the doctor was cleared. Owing to the obstructions which were raised on every hand, it was found impossible to get the case before the courts.

Among the illustrations of the brotherly kindness of the secret orders, as told by Masonic orators, are the following incidents: A Union soldier, taken prisoner by Mosby, was chosen along with several others to be shot in retaliation for some alleged unjust executions on the part of Union officers. The condemned prisoner made the sign of distress to his confederate guard, and soon he was removed from the number to be shot and another was substituted in his place. This was the effect of the brotherly kindness of his order. Again, when railroads were new in the country and the western termini were great points for the shipping of grain, thirty-seven teams were waiting at one time to have loads accepted and taken by the dealer, when a Mason came behind. Soon he gave the sign to the buyer who was also one of the brethren, and all those before had to wait while the grain of the Mason was received out of its turn. This is a chosen illustration of the brotherly character of the lodge.

The point in all this is that the members of these lodges reject all claims to fair and honest dealing, as founded on a common humanity; reject all claim to brotherhood in that all men are men and worthy of fair treatment; turn aside from the law of God who is the Father of us all, and with a partiality the motive of which is generally carefully concealed at the time, defrauds other men of their rights in order to help a brother in the lodge. Instead of bringing in the era of brotherly kindness, it brings in the era of systematic and deliberate partiality. Instead of seeking to unite our race by deeds of mutual love, it plans to sacrifice the general interests of humanity to the advantage of brethren in the lodge. By it men aim to gain and hold positions not on worth or skill, but on the fact that they have gone through a certain initiation. Its final result is not the introduction of a general reign of brotherly kindness, but to form a secret conspiracy of selfishness. Take their own argument. Thirty-seven men stood back while one man, a Mason, who came later, had his wheat unloaded. It was an unjust act, and it showed meanness on the part both of the one that gave the favor and of the one that received it. And that man who gave the hailing sign of distress to a brother Mason who was a guerilla and had his brother soldier shot in his place, what kind of a man was he? But if any man is unjust and selfish in his heart and does not care how he gains the advantage, if so be that he may get it, then this is the very kind of brotherly kindness that will suit him. For this reason it may often be that an exposure of the nature of these orders will increase their membership, for while one unselfish Christian man may come out of them, two selfish men may be found who will say, "Well, if all this is so, that they hold to one another regardless of the rights of others, that is the very thing for me; I'll join." Our appeal is to Christians, to those who try to love their neighbor as themselves, who do not want an unfair advantage over any one and who do not want to give such advantage to another. We appeal to the man who believes in the Lord Jesus Christ, who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister; to the man who trys to do to others as he wishes others to do to him, and we beseech him to study the quality of this brotherly kindness. Is it according to the example of Christ and the command of God? If it is not, then the lodge is no place for him. Its brotherhood is not his brotherhood and its kindness is not his kindness. As a secret monopoly, seeking to grasp to itself all of this world, he can have no sympathy with it. As an underhand plan to push selfish interests, that works in the dark and fights all investigation, he, as a child of the light and of the day, will bear faithful testimony against it. No, it is not in the lodge room that men learn of the power of that love that fulfills the whole law.

VOTE AS YOU PRAY.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

The secret lodge question is the greatest problem of the century. No other has stirred, is stirring, and will stir the American people like it. The discussion is everywhere. People see and feel the all-pervading influence of oath-bound lodgery. A few still roll up their eyes like ducks in a thunder storm, when the preacher mentions secret societies in the pulpit, and we blush that there are some so-called ministers of the Gospel so far fallen that they attempt to justify organized secretism by the Bible. So it was a few years ago when slavery was preached from the pulpit and backed by Bible proof. God pity such moral monstrosities. The same theological sophistry that would justify human slavery and drunkard-making would doubtless justify Mormon polygamy and secret societies. Such religious teachers will bear watching. They pray God's will to be done on earth as it is in heaven, then they go to the polls and vote their old party tickets from "dogpelter" to "Beelzebub."

A man may be a patriot and not a Christian, but the Christian who is not a patriot is a sham. Can any Christian tell us why he is a Republican or a Democrat? Is there any real difference between the old parties? There was a time when there was a difference. It was before the war during the slavery agitation; it was during the rebellion when the loyal blood was flowing in rivers; it was after the war during reconstruction. But for the last sixteen years where is the difference? Don't they agree on civil service? Are they not the same toward polygamy? Both are badly split up on the tariff question and both agree that John Chinaman must go. If John was a voter both old parties would be down on their knees in dirt begging him to stay.

For the most part are not the old party platforms idle harangues on dead issues? They change base so often, that to change headings and dates, he is a smart man, who can tell one from the other. Their motto seems to be to pay no attention to the essentials, dwell largely on the non-essentials, and give it to the Prohibitionists. You will notice that often the same party in one State does not agree with itself another. For instance, not long since the Iowa Republicans were howling themselves hoarse on temperance, a stalwart administration at Washington was sitting down to a dozen kinds of wine, and a Republican Congress adjourning in a big Sunday drunk; so drunk that if newspapers chronicle the truth the little page boys had to lead drunken Congressmen to and from halls. In Kansas Greenbackism and Democracy go hand in hand, but over in Missouri Greenbackism and Republicanism are supposed to be Siamese twins. North, the cry is Ku-Kluxism, South, it is the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

The politicians come to us in dead men's shoes: they are always telling us what men in their graves have done. They promise everything and perform nothing. A leading Republican to-day is a Democratic candidate to-morrow. A State went Republican last election only to give a handsome Democratic majority in the next. Just before last election the Republicans were sure that if the Democrats went into power the rebel war debt would have to be paid, the negroes would go back into bondage, and the whole country would go to the dogs. Many pious Republicans believed it and stood around for months with their hands in their pockets expecting to hear something burst, and they have been howling mad ever since because the country didn't go to smash. The Democrats had been making promises for twenty-four years and never expected to have to fulfill them. They would turn the rascals out, give us better laws and bring relief and prosperity to the people. To their astonishment Cleveland was elected. The rebel war debt has not been paid, the negroes have not been resold and the Democrats are carrying out the same financial policy the Republicans inaugurated. How many bad laws have been repealed? how many for the relief of the people have been enacted?

The glorious Republican party at this moment is a study for an artist. It reminds one of the fellow who, suddenly bereft of his reason, went about his work as usual to the astonishment of his friends. Decapitated chickens have been known to strut around for a time and even try to crow. Although the grand old party is morally and politically bankrupt, yet it talks and acts as if it still owned and run the country. Hon. John Sherman has a Presidential bee in his bonnet and is early in the field with the worn-out cry of "shot-gun policy, tissue ballots and illiteracy." Are not New York, Indiana, and other doubtful States too far North for such argument? The "Plumed Knight," defeated by Northern votes, in spite of a quarter of a century of Republican supremacy, prestige and power behind him, runs out of his European retreat to sound the newborn philosophy that "tobacco is a necessity," and approving the sin tax of the damnable liquor traffic.

And now we are to have a rehash of the threadbare tariff twaddle. What is there in it, anyhow? Anything that will turn an honest man into a thief, a truthful man into a liar, or a kind and loving father into a hypocrite or a brute? Where does the Bible say one word on civil service, the tariff or bogus butter? It does say "woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him and maketh him drunken." "Wine is a mocker and strong drink is raging and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them." And so on, line upon line and precept upon precept. Are you ready to throw a ballot right into the teeth of Almighty God by voting to license these evils, by voting for whisky men and measures?

Politicians can no more rise above their platforms than a stream can rise above its fountain head. Drink the high-license Republican whisky and it will make you a drunkard and send you to perdition. Drink the low-license Democratic whisky and the result is the same. Rev. Sam. P. Small says he staid with the Democratic party till it took him within one-half mile of hell. We know noble fellows who stayed with Republican whisky until it took them clear to hell. The temperance man has no choice when it comes to the old parties. They are like the two boys in Sunday-school. One says, "Jack, where are you in the catechism?" "I'm in original sin. Where be you, Tom?" "O, I'm way past redemption." The Democratic party is in original sin. The Republican party is about three years past redemption. If it took the Republican party a fourth of a century to do nothing toward prohibition, how long would it take it to rid the nation of the rum curse? Ask us something easy.

Where are the Christian voters of America? Do they know there is a God and a judgment? Have the church people any individual responsibility to Almighty God? Is it not time to call a halt? The courts, the insurance companies and the railroads demand practical temperance. Is it not about time for the churches to demand a practical Christianity at the polls instead of a conniving, tippling following?

To the world, this loose voting by church members is becoming a stumbling block. May the election of 1888 find every orthodox church up to the mark. Let the pension go. Grant vetoed the equalization bounty bill and signed the back salary grab. Let Blaine, and Sherman and Allison rage about confederate brigadiers and rebel office holders. Who sent old Mosby to China; another rebel as American minister to Peru; a third to Russia; put Key in the cabinet, and a hundred other ex-rebels into office, and wound up by confirming Lamar? A black Republican Senate. Americans, stop wallowing in such party corruption and insincerity. Vote for "God, and Home and Native Land," a campaign or two.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN LIBERAL PARTY AND THE LODGE.

Will it continue to maintain its ascendency? The answer to this question depends much upon the skill with which the extreme liberal party conduct their opposition to the distinctive principles of the church. They will not boldly assert their purpose at once to expunge them from the standards, or to treat them as a dead letter. This would be to arouse opposition among themselves. They who are set upon accomplishing a difficult purpose usually find opportunities for skillful management. It is not difficult to see how under such management our article on secret societies may become as useless as if it had never been written. The attention of the General Assembly and of several of the lower courts of the church has been directed to a leading and popular secret society in the land—the Grand Army of the Republic. There is no question that it is a secret society. We believe it is "oath-bound." Whether this be true or not, it is plainly condemned by our testimony which is not limited to oath-bound associations, but includes those who impose upon their members an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws. The assembly has refused to say that this association comes under the ban of our testimony. Several lower courts have taken the same position. Ministers and elders whose business it is to apply the principle of the article against secret societies have connected themselves with the order. It is not difficult to see what will be the result in regard to our article, when its administration is so largely in the hands of members of this order. Liberalism is doing its work effectually, and the great majority are looking on with apparent unconcern.—Christian Instructor.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Rev. Dr. Meredith of the Tompkins Avenue church, Brooklyn, teaches the Sabbath-school lesson in his own pulpit every Tuesday evening. His church is filled with teachers from all parts of the city every week. It was my privilege to hear him last Tuesday. He is a perfect master of the situation. He carries all before him. Here are some of the thoughts expressed. We must never be childish, but always childlike. The church has got Christ's command, "Be as little children," wrong end to. The church has been saying to the children, Except you become old men and women you cannot come in. The lambs are left outside the fold to freeze. The Catholic church takes care of its children. The Protestant church must learn this lesson. "It must needs be that offences come." They are in the world. But do not yield. Rather lose an eye, a hand, a foot, anything most dear, than lose your principles or be untrue to yourself.

On Wednesday evening I heard Rev. Dr. Storrs preach in his church. His audience is the cream of the city. You would think the men were bankers and the women principals in the High Schools. He is a large man, with massive head, a wonderful command of language, and great thoughts to match it. He said we ought to live in a prayerful attitude of spirit. The infidel stands outside the temple and criticizes. The believer stands within and sees the beauty and glory. He is in the secret of God's tabernacle. Many Christians are content to stay down in the meadows. Only a few ascend the mountain tops of communion with God. The deepest love is unexpressed. Language is too feeble to convey it. The highest music is inaudible. The silence of heaven will first impress the believer. Its glories will daze him and he cannot speak. The best thoughts of the soul cannot be expressed in words in prayer. On the occasion of the thirty-fifth anniversary of his pastorate, more than six years ago, his congregation presented him with a purse of $35,000. That was a life-time heart-warmer. It is in striking contrast with another congregation here which has asked their pastor to resign, not because he has been unfaithful, but because some want a more "tony pastor." The congregation that does that is judicially blind, and gets a blot. "The men who banished Aristides because they were tired of hearing him called 'the Just' have their lineal descendants."

On Thursday evening I preached in the Knox Presbyterian church, 2nd Ave. and 72nd St., New York, Rev. D. G. Wylie, pastor. This congregation is growing rapidly. Monday morning I heard Rev. Dr. Spence, secretary of the Church Extension Board, deliver a lecture before the M. E. preachers' meeting on "The Gospel for the Poor." He said, By the end of this century there will be 3,000,000 in New York, 98 per cent of whom will not own their own homes. The vital question is, how is the church going to get the Gospel to them? She can't afford to be without these poor souls. At noon I heard the Presbyterian ministers discuss "the elder." They could not agree as to whether the "ruling elder" and "preaching elder" were two things or one. This week we have called upon sixteen pastors in the interests of National Reform. Among these were Rev. Henry I. Van Dyke, D. D., and Rev. R. S. Storrs, D. D., with both of whom I had an exceedingly pleasant conversation.

Rev. Thomas S. Hastings, D. D., has been chosen president of Union Theological Seminary to succeed the late Rev. Boswell D. Hitchcock, D. D.; Rev. Francis L. Patton, D. D., LL. D., has been unanimously chosen president of Princeton University to succeed Dr. McCosh. These two men will make wise and judicious leaders of two leading institutions in this land.

Tuesday night in the Brooklyn Academy of Music the question was debated under the auspices of the Prohibition party, "Does the temperance reform require a National Prohibition Party?" Gen. Clinton B. Fiske, lately candidate for Governor of New Jersey, sustained the affirmative, and Dr. H. K. Carroll the negative. The Tribune published the speech of the latter. That paper is shouting itself hoarse for the Crosby High License bill, now before the Legislature at Albany. It insists that the measure will kill at least 2,000 out of the 8,000 saloons in New York city. England licenses houses of ill-fame. They call it the "Contagious Diseases Act." That roots out a few of the vile dens. But it serves to make the others all the more respectable. Now do not allow this to turn your intellectual stomachs. License grogshops, and then license inns of prostitution. If it is good for society to license the breach of the Sixth and Eighth Commandments, then it ought to be good to license the breach of the Seventh Commandment also.

On Sabbath evening I preached in the Protestant Methodist church, beyond Broadway, Rev. E. L. Davis, pastor. They have a very large church edifice, and are working hard to fill it. Our country is worth saving. It was originally devoted to God by our fathers. Let me quote a passage from an article in the Tribune of Dec. 30, 1876: "In regard to the famous Declaration of Independence adopted in May 30, 1775, at Charlotte, the county seat of Mecklenburg county, in the colony of North Carolina, an impression has been created that the step was the work of Scotchmen. The truth is that they were grandsons and great-grandsons of men who had emigrated from Scotland to the Province of Ulster in the north of Ireland more than a hundred years before. Inheriting the proverbial Scotch industry, thrift, integrity, morality, intelligence, courage, personal, political and religious independence, and acquiring more genial and enthusiastic qualities from their Irish associations and connections, they developed into that peculiar and remarkable race 'the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians.' It is a fact not generally known that in the year 1636, soon after their establishment in Ulster, some of these emigrants projected a settlement in New England. They are spoken of by Cotton Mather as a Scotch colony. In the month of September of that year the Eagle-wing sailed from Lock Fergus for the Merrimac River with 140 passengers, including the celebrated preachers, Robert Blair, John Livingston, James Hamilton and John McClelland. The vessel was driven back by stress of weather, and the next year these ministers returned to Scotland, where they affiliated with the still more famous Johnston of Waniston and Alexander Henderson, and became prominent in the commotions, civil and religious, which led to the subversion of the English throne and the execution of its treacherous occupant. Two-thirds of a century later, in consequence of persecution from a government which in some sense owed its existence to the heroism shown at the terrible siege of Londonderry and the crowning victory of the Boyne, the emigration from Ulster to this country began in earnest, and from about the year 1720 swarm followed swarm from the great hive, some of the emigrants stopping in New England and New York, but the greater part passing into the upper regions of Pennsylvania, Virginia and the Carolinas. From these have come some of the most eminent men, and families particularly, in the South and West.

J. M. FOSTER.

The following quotation is from Prof. Phelps' "Studies of the Old Testament." "Said one man of the world whose misfortune it was to have a 'gay parson' for his pastor, 'Our pastor is a capital fellow, a born wit, a splendid mimic; he keeps the table in a roar; and in the pulpit he is not afraid to make us laugh, Said his friend, 'Suppose that you had lost your only child, or that you were about to die.' 'Well,' was the reply, 'to tell you the truth, he is the last man that I should want to see them. Still, he is a capital fellow.'" Alas there are too many ministers of this sort. "He is jolly," said a friend to me of a certain clergyman, whom she had met at a wedding. "You would not take him for a minister." And this she said of him approvingly, as though it were something in his favor. Alas! both for him and for her.—N. Y. Observer.

A dispatch from Des Moines, Iowa, says that in the legislature last Monday afternoon, Mr. Redman left the chair and took his desk upon the floor for the purpose of introducing a temperance bill. It proved to be the bill agreed upon by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and is in opposition to what is known as the Custer bill, which is intended to take the sale of liquor away from druggists and put it in the hands of county agents. The Redman bill introduced to-day differs from the Custer measure in that it leaves the sale with the druggists under about the same restrictions imposed upon county agents by the Custer bill. The Senate Committee on the Suppression of Intemperance met this morning and decided upon an adverse report on Schmidt's license bill, fashioned after the Nebraska law.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

PATRIOTIC ORDER OF THE SONS OF AMERICA.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

This secret order claims to have been organized in 1847, and was a child, or possibly the mother, of the Know Nothings, and it proposes precisely similar objects. These are professedly "the inculcation of pure American principles, opposition to foreign interference with State interests in the United States of America, the cultivation of fraternal love, the preservation of the Constitution of the United States and the encouragement of free education."

These objects, in common with those professed by the Ku Klux and Mollie Maguires, are just and noble. No secret order of which I have any knowledge proposes any other than lawful purposes. Our objection to the whole secret lodge system is not against the objects they propose, but rather that very often these are not the real objects,and oftener still, the methods by which they seek to carry them out are impracticable and illegitimate. Thus Freemasonry declares that its objects are, among others, "to teach piety, morality and science." But these are not the real objects of the order, and if they were, the method of promotion is inadequate and absurd.

So with the order under consideration. Whether these are the real objects or not,—whether, like the Know Nothings who professed the same things, there are not ulterior objects quite inconsistent with those professed. One thing is certain, that we do not want a secret society to promote liberty and patriotism. It would be more likely to destroy than to promote them. Eternal vigilance is indeed the price of liberty, and the experience of the world is that it has oftenest been subverted and destroyed by secret combinations organized professedly for its own defence.

The great patriots and statesmen who have done so much to promote civil liberty have not been secret conspirators, but those rather whose patriotic labors were as open as the day and whose appeals were to the moral sense of all mankind. The Great Founder of all national liberty and true patriotism "ever spake openly," and declared that "he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God."

Conceding that those living under a despotism may have a plausible excuse for a secret combination, no such occasion exists in our own land, and an order which like this, proposes "to wield a controlling hand in shaping the future career of our nation," if secret, will be regarded as a conspiracy, rather than a national defence. If "it impels a constant and vigilant watch over the country's laws, and affirms its determination that they shall "neither be broken nor continued by home traitors or alien malcontents," it has a noble object, but one that can be much better performed by the Law and Order Leagues, or by the civil authorities. It tends greatly to discredit this profession, that we have never heard of this order in connection with the enforcement of the laws, and that the Know Nothings who made a similar profession were guilty of terrible riots and monstrous violations of liberty and law. It is quite probable that the members of this order are average law-abiding citizens, and that all this gasconade is not meant for hypocrisy, but simply for embellishment to cover up the design of another secret life insurance society on the assessment plan, which really is just what this order actually is. Such societies pay some dividends and are organized to secure them.

There are three degrees in the order: Subordinate, or Red; Council, or White; Commandery, or Blue. Boys are eligible in the Red and White degrees at 16 years; but in the Commandery not till 21. Its ceremonies and regalia are founded on the history of our country. Its terms of insurance are about the same as those of several other orders when declarations are before the public. It is said that "these rates have been adopted after a close study of the science of insurance, and experience shows that no organization is safe that promises to do more at less assessments." This is doubtless true, and for those contemplating life insurance, the question is simply whether they will choose a secret and irresponsible company on the assessment plan, or one regulated by law, and open to State inspection.

A part of the clap-trap by which this flimsy scheme is invested is in what it says about aliens and education. No one can become a member who is not a native American. This is no great hardship to those of foreign birth, who have a score of other similar orders open to them, and are at liberty to organize more; but it is with bad grace that the descendants of foreigners should in a patriotic order discriminate against all their fathers and elder brothers. Think of a 16-year old boy shutting out his father because he was born in Great Britain, and who doubtless knows ten times as much of patriotism as his hopeful child!

The plea for purely secular education, uninfluenced by sectarian considerations, means, when boiled down, simply atheistic education. Christian education, as understood and defined by this class of writers, is always "sectarian." It is this class of people that rule out the Bible as the one book whose influence is to be deprecated and destroyed. Sectarianism,whether in churches or schools, is truly an evil, and it goes without saying that the funds raised from the entire people ought not to be used to promote divisions among Christians. But all schools and governments ought to be Christian, for Christianity lies at the foundation of our republican government and of our civilization.

As between a Christian school under sectarian influences and an atheistic school, while both are to be deprecated, the preference is a thousand-fold in favor of the former. Dr. Crosby says, "We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the age." Surely there are few that are more pretentious and less deserving than this weak appeal to selfishness under the guise of patriotism and loyalty. It is said to have 105,000 members in all parts of the Union.

"APOSTATE CHRISTIANS," THE LODGE ONLY CAN SAVE YOU!

A good friend in Ohio finds the following in the Masonic Review of Cincinnati for February, 1884, Enoch T. Carson, Sovereign Grand Inspector General, editor. It has been read by several who wish it it to be seen by the readers of the Cynosure. The significant acknowledgment of the Christian profession of the opponets of the lodge, the severity of their Masonic sentence, the only means of salvation which this Masonic writer provides for them, and the utter impossibility of their even attaining Masonic salvation, are points of great significance to which we call the special attention of the reader:

"The enemies of Freemasonry are to be found among men professing to be Christians, and scarcely anywhere else. While we believe that there are some true Christian men who are opposed to the order for one reason or another, yet the enemies of the fraternity, men who slander and malign the brethren, and exhaust the vocabulary of epithets and expletives in defaming the institution, can hardly be said to exemplify the sweet spirit of Christ, or practice the gentle amenities of his grace. The organized enemies of the institution carry their hatred and malignity to the extreme of most slanderous utterances concerning the brethren; and these organized enemies, who form societies and publish papers in the interest of Anti-masonry, make very loud and ostentatious claims to pre-eminence as Christians. Our readers may be surprised to learn that the following, taken from a recent number of one of their papers, is only a feeble specimen of the kind of language they are accustomed to use. Speaking of the Masonic brotherhood, the writer, a minister of the sweet Gospel of Jesus, says:

"'Should a single ray from the sun of righteousness penetrate their dark abode their boasted light would go out in the blackness of darkness forever. Their truth would be seen to be falsehood; their virtue the most degrading habits of vice; their religion the worst form of idolatry; their chastity only lewdness; their boasted benevolence and charity, covetousness and theft; their great love for the brotherhood, hatred and murder, on the slightest provocation; and all their good deeds only works of darkness:—in short, their institution would be turned inside out and left standing on its head, a monument of man's depravity, a stench in the nostrils of the Christian world, and a hiss and by-word to all coming generations.'

"We ask pardon of our readers for presenting this specimen of the foul utterances of men, professing to be Christians, concerning the fraternity. We do it for the purpose of showing to what resorts of vituperation and falseness, apostate Christians and haters of mankind will descend. Now nothing but the lodge can save such men. But the door of the lodge is shut to them, because their manhood is nowhere near the standard required for admission. A man who could write as above would be more easily denied the benefits of Masonry than the privileges of the church. Such a man might take the holy sacrament, but he could not stand with the brethren at the altar of the lodge."

PRESS COMMENT.

The story started by a Chicago paper that "a secret society was organized in the West to secure the nomination of General Gresham for the Presidency or in case of failure to throw the doubtful States to the Democrats," is a roorback. Such a scheme has not been inaugurated by Judge Gresham or by any of his friends. The Brooklyn Times, speaking of it, well says, "If this mysterious movement in favor of Judge Gresham has any existence, the circles do well to guard their password, for Judge Gresham would be the first to forbid them the use of his name if any hint of their 'sworn obligations' came to his ears."—Inter-Ocean.

Secret oath-bound societies are the works of the Evil One. They, under the shield of secrecy, commit all manner of crimes. Scarcely a week passes but the papers give accounts of crimes committed by wicked men under the sanction of secrecy,—men who shelter themselves behind the horrible cut, throat oaths of some secret criminal clan. Recent papers give a thrilling account of innocent men being tortured and put to death in Virginia by the Roane Co. "Regulators" who have terrorized the county by their hellish deeds. Rev. Thos. P. Ryan, a noted Methodist minister, was brutally murdered last October, 40 miles from Parkersburg, being shot down by the members of this secret oath-bound order in the presence of his own family. Two or three days after that, three young men, Robert and George Duff and Chester Coon, were taken out of their homes and hanged by men who it is believed belonged to the "Regulators," who did it, as is thought, to cover their own crimes; just as in the far West innocent men are sometimes lynched as horse thieves by the men who did the stealing to divert public attention from them and their crimes. This "consolidated band" had their grips and secret passwords after the style of the Masons and Odd-fellows and met frequently in secret session and planned their lawless deeds. Thirty-seven members are known.—Sandy Lake News.

The following account of a duel between Freemasons, illustrates the mythical "brotherly love" of the order: "The trouble among the Freemasons has culminated in a duel. For reasons that are not known the Regio Lodge of Scottish Rite Masons and the Templar Masons have been hostile for many months. The Scottish Rite has an organ which is directed by Mr. Ermilo G. Canton, who has reached the thirty-third degree in Masonry. This periodical spoke strongly against the acts of the members of Regio Lodge, calling them deserters and perjurers. The Cruz Templar, organ of the Templars, sallied forth in defense of the lodge, and one of the latter's members sent a challenge to Mr. Canton. The latter refused to fight with the challenger or any other member of the Regio Lodge, as he considered them beneath him. He said, however, that if there was any Templar who would take it upon himself to send the challenge, it would be accepted with pleasure. After a long correspondence it was determined that there was no other solution than a meeting between Jesus Toledo of the Templar Encampment and Mr. Ermilo G. Canton of the Scottish Rite. The duel took place on Friday morning at 9:30 o'clock on the ground of the military school of sharpshooters on the plains of San Lazaro." It is further recorded that one of the men was shot in the leg, but not seriously hurt. This is Freemasonry in Mexico.—American, Washington.

The American Federation of Labor has recently been in session in Baltimore. During this session a bitter antagonism was manifest towards the Knights of Labor. Yet the two organizations maintain essentially the same principles and seek the same ends. Both aim at the elevation of labor, better wages for workingmen and fewer hours of toil, which they rightly argue the perfection and multiplication of machinery makes possible. Wherefore, then, the hostility? It is because of the very matter which certain philosophers and doctrinaire statesmen, and some theologians, affect to believe of no consequence—the form of government. It hath been said by old timers that it makes no difference how people are governed so they are governed well. Without stopping to inquire whether this is not a begging of the whole question we note that men are coming more and more to deny it. Even the man who governs himself very badly is better content, and, paradoxical as it may seem, is better governed than if some guardian should govern him better. Society recognizes this, and not till a man has abandoned self-government and becomes a dangerous outlaw, does society deprive him of his autonomy—his individual "Home Rule."

The principle applies as directly to the government of communities, States and trades as it does to individuals. As it is best that the central sovereign power shall invade individual self-government only so far as the public welfare demands, so it should only interfere to that extent in local self-government. The old theory of government was that the individual existed for the State; the province for the empire; the new theory is that the State exists for the individual and the empire for the province. It claims that the largest possible amount of autonomy shall be left with the subordinate local organizations, and this is the great principle upon which must be realized the "federation of the world" and which must govern the "parliament of man." It is upon this point that the Federation of Labor is at outs with the centralization of the Knights of Labor, and it is to this principle that the Federation attributes its rapid growth; as the report of the committee puts it, "to the avowed purpose of the Federation to allow each trade to govern itself."—Christian Standard.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

The Trip from Chicago to New Orleans—The City and its Churches—The Carnival Preparations—Various Helpers and Encouragement.

[NOTE.—This letter should have reached Chicago in time for last number, but was held in the New Orleans postoffice for postage.—ED.]

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 9, 1888.

Ill health has prevented me from reporting more frequently and fully. Fifty-six grains of quinine, blue pills and various other remedies, under the kindly ministrations of wife, the skilful directions of Dr. Hinman and the consolations of our beloved pastor, have assured my recovery and a good degree of vigor for the work of the convention so near. I have been scouting the field and mapping out the work in general, but with special reference to our annual gathering. Looking over the lines of railroad from the great Northwest to this city, I find that the Illinois Central takes precedence of all others in the estimation of tourists. In fact, it seems to be about the only line spoken of by the people here as furnishing direct and desirable connection with Chicago and contiguous cities. Leaving Chicago at 8:30 o'clock, P. M., one sees very little of the country until reaching Cairo the next morning. The entire train crosses the Ohio river on a float landing at the small station of Wickliffe on the Kentucky side. Passing through Bardwell and Arlington and coming to Clinton, we find a live and enterprising town of 1,500 inhabitants, and still further on, Fulton at the southern border of the State is a city of 3,000, with indications of a wide-awake, go-ahead population. Entering Tennessee, we pass over a smooth track, through a varigated country, interspersed with towns, farms and woodlands to Jackson, with its estimated population of 10,000 and its Female College, Baptist Southwestern University and other educational advantages, claimed to equal any of the kind in the State. At Holly Springs, Mississippi, supper is served at the superb dining hall of the company where every attention is given to the wants and convenience of patrons.

From this point the scenery is invisible until the dawn, and if you have been thoughtful enough to secure a birth in one of the superb sleepers of the Central trains you may resign yourself to the keeping of a kind Providence under the efficient management of the road, and after a quiet night's rest look out in the early morning upon green fields, blooming gardens and orange trees loaded with their golden fruitage. At least such was my experience on the morning of January 21st last. We were nearing the Crescent City, and at 8:20 our train halted at the depot, having made the entire trip in less than thirty-six hours.

We were soon in the midst of a bustling throng, rushing to and fro on the streets of this great city. Securing rooms at the Christian Woman's Exchange, we entered into the earnest work of preparation for the convention.

THE CHURCHES.

I have visited and spoken in seven different houses of worship, and met a large number of ministers both in public and private. I have visited the leading universities and professors in the city, and without exception have been cordially received. I do not recall a colored pastor whom I have met who has not at some time been connected with one or more of the secret orders, nor do I recollect one who has not expressed the opinion that they were not a great damage to the church and hindrance to the cause of Christ. Most of them have been supplied with programmes of the convention and with circulars and tracts, and have promised to give notice on Sabbath and distribute literature among their people. A number of persons not down for set speeches, have expressed a desire to speak of their own experience, and I anticipate this as one of the most interesting and useful features of the meeting. I feel confident that I risk nothing in saying the colored ministers of this city, as a rule, and in all denominations are tired of the secret lodges and would be heartily glad to see them abolished as effectually and eternally as was the other system of slavery by the war. Many are suffering a bondage of conscience and conviction which they loathe and which they will not long endure, and I am looking for grand revelations and results to follow our work here in the South. It is truly a mission field, offering the grandest opportunities with every promise of speedy results, and I am persuaded that friends need only to understand the condition to most heartily respond to the call.

ONE ABSORBING THEME.

The one absorbing theme is Mardi Gras, for which the most extensive preparations are in progress. Stores, shops, private dwellings and the streets are being put in order for the great event so soon to occur. Along Canal, the principal street of the city, balconies are being strengthened with extra supports, and every available niche and corner along the line of procession supplied with seats, and everybody is hoping, and the devout worshipers of "King Carnival" are praying for favorable weather and a crowd.

As indicated on the surface, the great bulk of New Orleans population has a "single eye and a single heart" to festivity and gain. This is not true of all, for God has in this city a chosen people who sacrifice and labor and suffer for the truth. As opportunity and strength would permit, I have been searching them out until I have a list already giving promise of success.

Brothers Hinman, Davidson and Chittenden have been efficient workers, and, indeed, Bro. H. and D. have taken the laboring oar since neuralgia took possession of me. Mrs. Stoddard has not been idle in the line of the W. C. T. U. work which she combines with our special reform to some extent. She has assisted in reorganizing one Union, has been cordially received by the workers here, has spoken at several of their meetings, and has other appointments to fill before returning home. Several of the ladies have expressed sympathy with the work of the N. C. A. and no one has objected to its mention in connection with the Temperance reform. We were invited to a social at the residence of Elder Cole, pastor of the First Baptist church in New Orleans, and a brother of Major Cole, so well known as an evangelist throughout the North and West. The Elder and Mrs. Cole expressed hearty sympathy with our work and hope to attend the convention.

WHAT OF THE NIGHT, OHIO?

A GLANCE ACROSS THE EASTERN BORDER—THE FRIENDS IN ALEXANDRIA—A GOOD MEETING IN COLUMBUS.

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 17, 1888.

The last Cynosure has just come to hand. I rejoice to see that friends in Pennsylvania are rekindling the fires that have burned so brightly in other days. There is no good reason why this State should not lead the hosts of reform, as in the memorable days of Governor Ritner, when to be a Mason was to be a companion of rascals or murderers. Often, when on the eastern border of this field allotted me, I have been tempted to step over the line and try to bring to action the latent sentiment I feel confident lies dormant among those hills. I trust there may be a general response to the appeals of brethren Callender and Chalfant. Mrs. Stoddard and I have been talking of making a short visit to her father, living near Pittsburg, soon. Should we be of any service to the friends in that section we would help what we could to get the movement started.

We have great reason to praise God for the way our reform progresses in this State. Light is shining. Clouds are vanishing. Steadily and surely public sentiment is being moulded. By the multiplicity of secrets on sale, the market is being overstocked. Men are finding skeleton shows not very profitable at ten dollars apiece. They are stopping to think. Their ears are open to hear the truth, "and the truth shall make you free."

Last Sabbath morning I addressed a good audience in the Wesleyan church (Rev. White, pastor) near Alexandria. In the afternoon I accompanied Bro. White to a Congregational mission church north of Alexandria, where he preached a powerful sermon from the text, "He calleth for thee." Some eight children accepted the Saviour at the close. At his request I filled the pulpit in the evening. There was a large attendance, and I think good was accomplished. Bro. J. M. Scott of this place is active as ever in reform work. He remembered our cause with a V. Some half dozen new names were added to our Cynosure list there.

The union meeting of the young people of the German Lutheran churches of this city, which I had the pleasure of addressing last evening, was, in my opinion, one of the most far-reaching in its results of any I have addressed for some time. The house was well-filled with an intelligent, interesting people. No less than seven ministers were among the number. Rev. Beck, pastor of this church, introduced me to the audience and took charge of the collection at the close. I suggested in regard to the collection, that perhaps it would be well not to take it up until the following evening as some might not be prepared. "No," said he, "we'll take a collection both evenings." He evidently has an eye to business. When the collectors went round it was found they received seven dollars and seventy cents. Judging from appearances the church will not hold those who will wish to attend to-night. Let me say to those who do not wish to "get left" in the onward march of reform: Come early and get a front seat.

COLUMBUS, FEB. 18.—The meeting of last night was in every sense a success. The house was crowded with eager listeners. Some fifty stood during the lecture, unable to get seats. Others, not finding accommodations, went away. Judging from expressions of congratulation and frequent inquiries I feel confident it will not be devoid of good result. The collection amounted to $8.13, making $15.83 contributed by these friends on the two evenings. Revs. Beck, Rohe and others endorsed my work and said they wished to have such lectures at least once a year.

AN ENCOURAGING FACT.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Some fifteen years ago your humble correspondent broke the ice on the lodge question in Thompson, Susquehanna county, and Preston, Wayne county, Pa. There he was hooted at and defamed and almost mobbed at some points. At Starrucca, Wayne county, a point some five miles from the others mentioned, Eld. J. W. Howe was assailed in a fiendish manner, in person and in reputation. Now, under the labors of our Free Methodist brethren, in the very center of this region of antagonism to Anti-masonry, God is blessing these brethren with a revival, under the efficient labors of Bro. Southworth, and some of the very persons who, eighteen years ago, were in the forefront to oppose us, are most active members of his class. These people have the courage to act up to their convictions on the lodge question, as on other living issues. God bless such religious bodies all over the earth.

Permit one incident. Some twelve or more years ago a man, somewhat promiuent in his community as a public man, challenged your correspondent to a discussion of the lodge question, leaving me to define the subject to be discussed. I stated the question thus in substance: "Resolved, That speculative Freemasonry is a false and an anti-Christian religion, and as such ought to be disfellowshiped by all Christians." My opponent took the negative and did his best. Now this same brother is in fellowship with this same proposition, and very active in the Free Methodist class. These brethren nobly and bravely nail this thesis to their banners. Other similar facts in said region proclaim progress to the right. God speed the people who have strength to live up to their convictions.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

—One-half the population of New York City are reckoned as Protestants (600,000); of these but 250,000 at most are considered to be regular or occasional attendants upon religious service, while yet there is one church to 2,468 inhabitants. In Cleveland one-quarter of the population are non-attendants. It is generally estimated that at least forty per cent of our city population attend no place of worship. The Connecticut Bible Society canvassers have found 14,838 families who avowed that they had no connection with any church, and 16,219 children not in Sunday-school, figures which are said to fall below the actual facts, which many are ashamed to admit.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REFORM NOTES.

BLANCHARD, Iowa.

Joseph Cook has written a letter cordially endorsing the National Reform movement. It recalls my experience with Joseph Cook at the St. Joseph Convention a few years ago. He was to lecture in St. Joseph the evening of the day our convention closed, and in Kansas City the evening before. I saw him on his way to Kansas City, gave him a programme of our convention and requested him if he came back in the afternoon to come in and help us, and if he could, to give us a word of endorsement in the prelude of his lecture.

When he returned to St. Joseph the next afternoon, he came up from his hotel to the Francis St. Methodist church, where we were assembled. The church was about half full. Mr. Cook opened the door and surveyed us for a minute, and then turned away. He evidently thought he could not risk his reputation in such a crowd. The president of the Y. M. C. A. who waited on him at the hotel, said to me afterward, "Mr. Cook is opposed to your movement." I asked, "How do you know?" He said, "He told me so." That evening I reported Mr. Cook's lecture in shorthand for the Gazette, by request of the editor. Sure enough he did not forget us in his prelude. This was his language: "A convention of reformers has just adjourned in your city. I hope these men will get all they ask, but I want them to get it through the church, and not through the state." The common misconception was in his mind that we were blending civil with ecclesiastical functions, or trying to coerce consciences in matters of mere church polity. A little further on, he said, as if he had the Covenanters in his eye, "I would have a man fined if he did not vote without good reason."

Since then Joseph Cook has visited the Christian Statesman office, and had his prejudices removed. The logic of events and the current of moral reform has done much to bring Mr. Cook into line.

I believe it is a mistake to run so much after men of reputation. About the only way to float them off is to raise the stream of public sentiment. I must quote here from a private letter received from Bro. H. W. Johnston, of the Washington American, just after the renowned Evangelical Alliance Convention met there. He said: "But on the whole, Bro. G., it struck me that they were mostly kid-gloved pastors of popular churches—stall-fed ministers who dealt with the questions under discussion merely from a scholarly and theoretical standpoint. And I imagined that if a volley of real aggressive Christianity had been fired into that assembly, the word, 'Rats, to your holes!' would have been the order." A convention like this, denouncing third party Prohibitionists, and refusing to hear from either the National Reform or National Christian Association, indicate that they are belated in the ages, and ignorant of the first principles of true reform.

Last week I had the privilege of addressing a fine audience in the College Chapel at College Springs. There was scarcely a vacant seat, and Dr. Kennedy in introducing me to the audience, spoke of the cause in terms of the highest commendation. He is a grand good man—none of your barn-turret, tin-rooster sort of reformers. He has now on the roll 165 students. The institution is steadily gaining in influence and attendance. I do not think any college in the State can surpass it in thorough, practical instruction, economy in expenses, and a moral community. I am sure I have found no community that will turn out as well to a reform lecture. Some one dropped $5 in the collection box; my suspicion rested upon—well, I will not say who.

Last Sabbath evening I preached at a union service in the M. E. church at Coin, and in the U. P. church in the morning. The people turn out well. There is a strong Good Templars lodge here, and no Cynosures or Statesmans are taken. I found none who had advanced farther in politics than the Republican party. Josh Billings says to preachers, "If you do not strike oil in thirty minutes, quit boring," but I bored for sixty minutes with each sermon, and only struck oil to the amount of a $2.95 collection. But even that is better than Page Center, Iowa, where a few Sabbaths ago I bored for the same length of time and only struck it to the amount of $1.65.

There is no State in the Union perhaps where there is so much genuine hatred of the Prohibition party as in Iowa. It is only here and there you can find a minister or church member who prefers a party recognizing God, his law and his Sabbath to a party that does not. And where men's religio-political convictions go no deeper than that, you cannot expect to reach their pocket-books. "I like that kind of religion that puts up the money," was what a commercial fellow said to me recently. He said, "There are too many church members who are good at praying and talking Jesus, but they will not put up the money; then there are others who can't pray or talk Jesus, but they put up the money every time." Let us remember that a true God-fearing, prayer-meeting religion, is inseparable from a debt-paying religion. M. A. GAULT.

A WORD OF ADVICE TO HONEST MASONS.

MARYVILLE, Mo.

You say when you are convinced you ought to leave the fraternity, you will do so. This letter is to make that duty plain before you. I am to convince you, by quoting from your own book, what Masonry teaches. There is room for a few samples only; I could give many.

"They teach that when one enters the lodge he leaves the world behind." There is a little truth in this, I admit. As the great majority of the world cannot get into a lodge, when a man becomes a Mason he leaves all these behind; only, however, for a short time, for as soon as he gets out of the lodge, we find him not only in the same world, but he is the same sinner as when he went in!

Brother minister, they teach that when you are about to join the lodge, you are "in darkness, helplessness and ignorance. Having been wandering amid the errors and covered over with the pollutions of the outer and profane world, you come seeking the new birth." You ministers in the lodge know in your own case that this is not true. You say that when you enter the lodge you "have spiritual light by virtue of a new birth." This, you all know, is a very plain falsehood.

"Masonry is the excellency of Christianity." If there is one word of truth in this statement then infidels, who condemn Christianity, may be correct. For if Masonry is the cream of our holy religion, what must the rest of it be?

Finally they claim "that every real Mason is a true Christian." Let me say, the very opposite must be true. A real Mason who, for the sake of harmony in the lodge, will ignore Jesus Christ, cannot be a true Christian!

Now every honest Mason in this enlightened world knows what I have said is true. Therefore come out like men, and confess all the facts in your case. "For to him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Yours till every yoke is broken. R. SMITH.

NEBRASKA COLLEGES NEED HELP.

INMAN, Neb., Feb. 8, 1888.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR BROTHER:—I received the first number of the Christian Cynosure and have taken it ever since, with the exception of a few numbers after the Chicago fire; and with my present feelings shall take it as long as I am able to pay for and see to read it.

I cannot understand why there can be no anti-secrecy work done in our State. There is certainly a good deal of "anti" sentiment through the State. I find among the people a goodly number who are beginning to wake up to the evils of secrecy. At Gates College (Neligh) the students have been discussing the subject, with some good results as I hope, although one of the Faculty has been cable-towed into the lodge. At the State University at Lincoln some of the members of a secret literary society broke off and organized an open society and the open society seems to be doing the most successful work. Other institutions may be in like circumstances.

Now would it not be well for some one to visit these institutions and render some aid to those young men who are seeking for light? Some thorough work done at these educational centers might create a demand for more work in other places. The Masons are about to organize in our village and a few good lectures would create considerable interest at the present time. Some of us would be glad to see you out here on a mission of that kind if your time and ability will allow you to do so. Of course the pay will amount to little or nothing so far as money is concerned, but it might result in great good to the cause. J. MCCLEERY.

PITH AND POINT.

BOOKS FOR THE FRIENDS MISSION IN THE WEST INDIES.

It is with pleasure that I acknowledge the receipt of the books and tracts from thee. Thanks. I read the Cynosure with interest and hand it to others. The work and influence of the lodge are confined mostly to the towns on this island. The business men and officers, I am told, are nearly all lodge members. Secrecy is always to be looked upon with suspicion whatever its pretensions may be; and the greater its pretensions are for good the more subtle and suspicious it is. Success to the National Christian Association—JOSIAH DILLON, Manchioneal, Jamaica.

LECTURES NEEDED IN STARK COUNTY, OHIO.

I have taken the Cynosure from the very first issue and would not like to be without it one week. We prize it beyond all others. When it first started I was presiding elder and sent in a good many subscribers. Our church was not so demoralized then; now a large majority of the members in this conference are what we call "liberal," professing to be opposed to secrecy, but willing to take all secretists into church fellowship. I suppose my Cynosure is the only one in this part of the country. I wish we could have some lectures here. I would help what I could.—REV. J. EXCELL, Limaville, O.

A BLESSING GOES WITH THIS WIDOW'S MITE.

I have been reading Nathan Callender's letter, and want to help the Southern ministers. I am a widow of ten years, have a good home but not much money, and am near ninety years old. I am a subscriber to the Cynosure and like it. I am praying for your success. Please accept one dollar for the ministers' fund.—HANNAH PADDLEFORD, Barnet, Vermont.

Many read Elder Callender's thrilling appeal with emotions like those of this aged saint of the Lord, but without the same purpose to do for the poor churches of the South. Be admonished, brethren, by the above and act as the Lord bids you.

VETERAN SUBSCRIBERS.

Times are pretty close with me, and this is about the first money I have had for three months, and I send it to you as above for it seems to me I can't get along without the Cynosure. I would rather eat less, if I must to save money to pay for so valuable a paper. Also find $1.50 for renewal of J. L's. subscription to the Cynosure. He has taken it from the beginning, and though in his ninety-second year feels that he cannot get along without its weekly visits. He says the paper was good to start on, but grows better and better as the years go by, and he bids you God-speed.—G. M. R., Albion, O.

LODGES SWARMING.

We have a society formed here that styles itself the Improved Order of Red Men. They have taken in everything good, bad and indifferent. A society of grangers has started up also, and everything that will pay dues is taken in, it makes little difference what. If you have anything showing the workings of these orders I would like it very much.—BURTON DOOLITTLE.

NO FAINTING WITH SUCH FRIENDS BY OUR SIDE.

Your paper is looked for from week to week and read with as much interest in my home as any paper that we take. Every Christian and patriot should be deeply interested in your effort to combat, to the overthrowal, the lodge system, including all secret societies requiring a pledge of secrecy of the members. Don't be discouraged; every reform measure against organized wickedness must grow slowly; but truth, right and light will ultimately prevail over error, wrong and darkness.—REV. H. Y. LEEPER.

FROM ONE OF BRO. HARRIS'S CONVERTS.

I have been a reader of the Christian Cynosure for a short time. I had already abandoned secret societies. I first joined the Knights of Pythias after strong persuasion. It let me out without my $40. I promised Rev. C. L. Harris I would not have to do with any more such frauds. I was next led into the Universal Brotherhood. Since reading the Cynosure I thank God I have something to help me out, only I began reading it two years too late.—J. J. MOORE, Jackson, Miss.

FROM A MAN ON THE WATCH-TOWER.

In reading over the paragraphs in "Pith and Point" I find many things which deeply interest me. In God's providence I, too, am one of the patrons of the brave and true Cynosure, from its very beginning. Some months prior to my knowledge of the enterprise, which started the N. C. A. and the Cynosure, I planted my feet on the only bed-rock of anti-secretism, non-fellowship with lodgery socially, religiously and politically. Of course, this brought up the "power of darkness" in full force against the few who took this rock for a "sure foundation." We met all sorts of opposition, save "resisting unto blood striving against sin." While casting about to select my armor for the conflict, just in the nick of time, through the agency of Joseph Power of blessed memory, I learned of the existence of the Cynosure, the "Liberator" in this "irrepressible conflict." That God was in that little eye-opener I could not doubt. I had next to no information on the lodge question, and knew not where to find it till then. I had, somehow, already managed to find out enough of the subject to see clearly enough to know that lodgery was contrary to all the noble instincts of free and untrammeled manhood. Many times was I solicited to join different orders (?), including Masons and Odd-fellows, the former with an offered bribe (increased salary), but "none of these things moved me." Among ten papers which I am using to be informed on living issues, all good, the Cynosure is the last I should drop. Next to it is the clean, elegant, little American of D. C, God bless the noble souls where they have their birth. Had I health and funds to use, I should go to the annual meeting at New Orleans. God bless it and all in attendance.—NATHAN CALLENDER.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON X.—March 4.—Christ's Last Journey to Jerusalem.—Matt. 20: 17-29.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.—Matt. 20: 28.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

[From Words and Weapons.]

As Jesus and his disciples neared Jerusalem, on their way to the Passover Feast, our Lord took them apart from others in the way, and intimated with great plainness the things which should happen to him there, and for which, as yet, they were but poorly prepared. The sequel shows how very little they took in the significance of the communication, either as concerning themselves or him.

I. CHRIST FORETELLS HIS DEATH.—This is now the third time that our Lord brings to the attention of his disciples the fact of his coming death and resurrection. (See chapters 16: 21, and 17: 22, 23.) In the communication in our lesson to-day we have an intimation of his three great characters or offices. 1. Jesus as prophet. We here find him teaching the disciples, foretelling the treachery of Judas, and so forewarning him, foretelling the action of the chief priests and scribes, and also the part which the Romans would have in the matter; for at their hands he would be mocked, scourged and crucified. 2. Jesus as priest. Behold how quietly and willingly he goes forth to that dread hour when, with his own life, he should make atonement for the sins of the people. How little did those disciples comprehend the deep significance of his coming death. How little, after all, have we understood the awful and sublime depths of the mystery of that self-sacrifice of Christ! Let us pray God that we may more and more enter into the fellowship of his cross, by it to be crucified to the world and the world to us. 3. Jesus as king. "And the third day he shall rise again." The resurrection is the opening of the door to his kingdom and the uplifting of the gates to his glory. Whatever the depression and gloom of the cross, we must never allow its dark shadows to come between us and the resurrection glory of our King. If we follow him through his ministry of teaching and take up his and our cross, we shall be raised together with him and be partakers of his glory.

II. THE CARNAL PRAYER OF THE SONS OF ZEBEDEE.—This is not the first time that Christians have sought their own carnal desires just under the shadow of the cross. It is a sad commentary upon human nature that, immediately upon this prophetic address, two of the most honored disciples should prefer to the Saviour a request in which all the elements of selfishness are manifested. Still, it is only fair to mention two bright features in their prayer: They had faith in his coming kingdom, notwithstanding its present dark prospects; and they were courageous in their purpose to take, at any cost of suffering, the places which they sought for themselves. Their prayer was answered and not answered. It was answered in that our Lord heard and refused it for their sakes. The refusal of our prayers is as really their answer as granting would be. When given for our best good, the "No" is a far better answer than "Yes" would be. But our Lord said to his disciples, Your prayer shall be answered in a measure; so far as it has in it an element of holy ambition it shall be granted you; so far as ye go bravely through suffering you shall have the legitimate reward of those sufferings. Just as we can only truly fill the places on earth for which we are qualified, so we cannot fill places in heaven for which we are not spiritually qualified. There every one will find his true place.

III. TRUE AND FALSE GREATNESS — It is not wrong to be ambitious, only we need to have clear and correct ideas as to true and false greatness. To illustrate this, Jesus sets two examples before his disciples: 1. The false idea of greatness (verse 25). According to the world's idea of greatness, it consists in external position and mere authority and power to lord it over those under one. But this shall not be so among you. Take your thoughts from all worldly ideas of greatness in my kingdom, for it is of a different kind altogether. 2. The true idea of greatness (verses 26, 27). Our Lord points to himself as the example of this new principle of greatness, which was the reversal of all human ideas. To be great in Christ's kingdom is to honor and serve some one else. To him who hath no eyes to see the invisible things of the kingdom, no exposition would make Christ's teaching on this point clear. "Within the circle of the kingdom of heaven the loftiest is the lowliest, and the lowliest the loftiest. He who stoops down to minister, steps up as he stoops down. He steps up by stepping down. It is so much nobler to do good than to get good. It is so much more glorious to glorify than to be glorified. To be serviceable is a far greater glory, in the moral sphere of things, than to be served. He, therefore, who is most serviceable is in the sublimest position."

OBITUARY.

HIRAM HARVEY died at his home in the town of Fulton, Rock county, Wisconsin, January 30, 1888.

He was born in Rockingham county, New Hampshire, May 16, 1806. When a young man he moved to Maine, where in 1836 he was married to Miss Hannah Burnham, with whom he lived nearly fifty years. In 1862 he came to Wisconsin with his family and settled on the farm where he died. In early life he made an open profession of faith in Christ, received the ordinance of baptism and united with the Free will Baptists, in which faith he died. He had been a very patient sufferer the greater part of his life, and when the messenger came for him he said, "I am axious to go."

His wife and four children preceded him to the better world; one child remaining to tread life's pathway alone. A large concourse of people assembled to pay the last tribute of respect to one of Fulton's oldest settlers.

He was a radical anti-secretist, a subscriber to the Cynosure from the time he first heard of it, or about eleven years. It was always a welcome visitor to his home, as were also the anti-secrecy workers. Although he had never seen the senior editor of the Cynosure, yet he loved him as a very dear friend.

Our reform has lost a warm supporter; his zeal remaining unabated to the last. One by one we are passing away, and as we follow these veterans of the Cross to the silent tomb, God grant that it may inspire us with a new zeal for the cause, knowing that we, too, shall soon be called home. M. S. HARVEY.

MRS. ANN KITELEY died at Sharon, Wis., Jan. 31, 1888, aged 53 years.

The subject of this memoir was born in the city of Utica, Oneida county, New York. Moving with her parents in the year 1850 to the State of Wisconsin they settled at Sharon, Walworth county. Sister Kiteley was a consistent, conscientious, Christian woman. She was converted to God at the age of eighteen years, and has since, by her life, adorned the doctrine of salvation by faith, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

For many years she has been a strong anti-secretist, and her voice and means both have been used against the awful wickedness of the monster evil. Nor would she tolerate or support it in the church, but because of it absented herself from the church of which she was a member, and attended one in which it is not suffered. Sister Kiteley's name might not have been much heard in connection with this cause, but her power has been felt by the enemy, the sinews of war having been supplied by her to more than one of the champions thereof. She was positive and decided in her hatred to this gigantic fraud, and more than one Masonic preacher has been brought to confusion by her boldly denouncing it in the ministry and church. She has been gathered to her reward, fully ripe in Christian life and experience, leaving a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn her loss.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.

THE THOUSAND COLORED PASTORS.

SHALL THEY HAVE THEIR PAPER?

Week by week generous friends of the colored race answer, YES. The fund for this purpose reaches $719.-26, as reported on page 13, and cheering letters show the enthusiasm in this enterprise of all who realize the nature of secretism. Every letter from the South justifies our efforts, and approves the judgment that no expenditure of an equal sum will bring so great returns.

The $900 contributed for this purpose in the two years and a half after June, 1885, placed the Cynosure in the hands of huudreds of colored pastors, but few of whom could have paid for it themselves. Note the grand results which have followed, chiefly because of this work:

1. The Louisiana Baptist State Convention, representing 70,000 church members, has voted against the lodge.

2. The Texas Baptists will probably take the same stand at their next meeting.

3. The Methodist Episcopal church in Texas is nearly ready for like action.

4. So are the Arkansas Baptists, a prominent Association having already so voted.

5. The same churches in western Tennessee are coming out against secretism.

6. So in Alabama the Good-will Association is standing against the orders.

7. The Congregational churches all through the South are opposing the lodge, encouraged by the American Missionary Association.

8. Two schools for higher instruction have been organized within a year which maintain this principle, while nearly every institution for the education of the Negro is open for instruction of the students on the dangers of the lodge.

9. Christians at the North should hasten this work with all zeal, because the reflex influence upon their churches will soon be powerfully felt.

The Cynosure has proved the best agency in accomplishing this work in the South. A fund to send a thousand copies to as many colored pastors is being raised. Dear reader, has not the Lord given you means to help it on?

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 17, 1888.

The New Orleans papers are thrilling their readers on the subject of immigration to the South. The Times-Democrat announces the arrival of a colony of eight families from Iowa, under conduct of an emigration agent en route for south-western Louisiana in the vicinity of Lake Charles; and the same paper in another column mentions two Southern immigration agents, now returned from the North, one prospecting for a location of a colony of three hundred families, and the other a still larger number, who can sell their farms at from fifteen to fifty dollars per acre, and purchase good farm lands in a softer climate, free from snow and blizzards, at five or ten dollars per acre.

Just twenty-five years ago, in war times, these Northerners would have been dreaded as Norway pirates once were in England, and perhaps, shot as spies. Now they are wooed and welcomed as future tax-payers, "friends and fellow-citizens." These and swarms of like facts are opening wide the eyes of the South to the fact that slavery was the dog in the fable, who did not eat the hay himself, or let the ox eat it. Thus "Tempora mutantur et nos mutamur cum illis." Times change and we with them.

There are guano companies with partners in Boston shipping the manure from the bird-islands of the Carribean Sea, which flocks of birds have left there ever since the flood, to renovate the old fields of which Tom Corwin said, "The soil turns pale wherever the slave sets down his black foot." And the papers tell us that this guano, made liquid by the addition of water, makes those old worn-out lands give splendid crops, and smile, after harvest, with new vegetable growth to be turned under to give strength for another yield. The farms left by these immigrants in the North will be filled by new immigrants, and the children of their neighbors the next year, and so leave no vacancies there: and the grand-children of the Northern soldiers buried in the eighty-two government cemeteries here in the South, will wonder what their fathers fought about. "So humanity rolls onward." But it gives one food for musing to see here in this city splendid statues to General Andrew Jackson and Robt. E. Lee, both now popular idols, and to reflect that one of these heroes swore "by the Eternal" that he would hang John C. Calhoun "higher than Haman" if he didn't stop teaching the very doctrine that Gen. Lee fought out so bravely. J. BLANCHARD.

GOVERNMENT SECRECY.

The attack on the traditional executive session of the Senate has of late years been a singular revelation of inconsistency. Not long before John A. Logan died he moved that this session be open to reporters and its secrecy abandoned. We called attention at the time to the remarkable fact that a politician, who was a leader in at least two orders and taking all the Masonic degrees he could buy or borrow, was the mover in this cause against government secrecy. Last week the debate of this question was renewed. A new extradition treaty with Great Britain is in progress, and as it is supposed to be important to the welfare of Irish revolutionists who may be seeking immunity in America, the politicians who have to take heed to their Irish vote are uneasy.

The fight was opened by Senator Riddleberger of Virginia, who announced his determination to let out the secrets of executive session little by little in the open session. As he cannot be prevented in this there was a slight sensation. He had his reward next day when the Clan na Gael lodges, an order deep in revolutionary plots, placed on his desk a large and handsome floral harp.

The discussion was afterward continued by several Senators, Teller of Colorado leading thedem and for a change. The secret sessions of the Senate he declared to be entirely unrepublican, and should be abandoned, except perhaps in case of a treaty. He protested that there should be no secrets and the nation should know what their servants are doing.

This has an excellent appearance of saying something, and as Mr. Teller is a 33-degree Mason, and one of the favored few who control the innermost circle of lodgery where Albert Pike sits supreme, he gives us occasion for surprise. A particular examination of his argument shows its animus. He does not object that the doors of the Senate be closed and treaties and nominations discussed in private; but he demands that the record then made of speeches and votes be made public, so that each member's constituents may mark him for favor or rejection in the future. This is exactly right, and if we were sure Mr. Teller had not some political scheme behind his fair words we would applaud him. The end he advocates is at least right, and we hope to see it secured. In fact, the executive session is but little better now than the ordinary private management of important business. It is carried to excess in that the record is not made public at times for years, when it can be of no possible interest or importance. Except for this it would resemble only the privacy of ordinary business, or the family, and differs as much from the sworn secrecy of the lodge as wisdom from folly.

STATE RIGHTS AND SECRETISM.

This week there is a trial in progress in Louisville, Kentucky, of extraordinary nature. The history of the States has nothing like it; and as it involves a secret society in a question of rights between States, it demands our attention.

For years the western countries of West Virginia have been vexed with bands of secret brigands, under various names of "Red Men," "Regulators," "Consolidated Band," etc. It is some two years since, under the first title, they were supposed to have been suppressed; but, like the Bald Knobbers of Missousri, who have again begun their Ku Klux work, the distemper in the social body of the State keeps breaking out in new spots.

Last October the murder of Rev. Thomas P. Ryan, a Methodist minister of some local note, living in Roane county some forty miles from Parkersburg, roused the authorities to suppress the vendetta. The murder was one of great atrocity, in the presence of the victim's family, and was soon followed by the lynching of three young men, Robert and George Duff and Chester Coon. It is now believed the lynchers and the murderers were the same parties and one crime was committed to cover the other.

It was not until January last that the detectives were able to give the facts about this case. They reported that after the war several families from Virginia settled upon land in Roane county which they neither bought or leased. To "protect their rights" as squatters they formed a secret society, which grew apace, as all such organizations are liable to do, and ceased to act only on the defensive. They began to attempt running the neighborhood according to the Ku Klux code. Their number grew to thirty-seven and their organization was complete, with oaths of secrecy, passwords, etc. They met weekly and renewed their oaths as often to divulge nothing on penalty of death. At one meeting they voted on lynching six men, one being a detective. The resolution failed by a narrow vote. The proposition was renewed and again lost. Members began to drop out after the Ryan murder. The detectives show letters warning prominent citizens to leave. These warnings are all signed "Regulators" and are addressed to men and women. The common form is to threaten the destruction of property, mutilation of the body, or other outrageous conduct. The slightest offense on the part of any one was punished with a warning, and the persons warned generally found it wise to leave. The grips and other secret signs of the band are given. The forefinger of the right hand placed around the thumb is the signal for a meeting when it was dark, and the same finger thrust into the hand that a meeting was to be held at once and in the daytime.

The inter-State trouble arose from a vendetta in which the West Virginia band was led by the Hatfields, and their victims were a McCoy family in Pike county, Kentucky, several of whom were murdered or injured and their dwelling burned. The local authorities rallied, and sent a posse under command of one Phillips, himself a murderer, which seized Valentine Hatfield and eight comrades and confined them in Pikeville jail. The friends of the Regulators appealed to their governor who demanded the release of citizens of West Virginia. Governor Buckner of Kentucky refused, and after several attempts to secure their release by writs of habeas corpus, etc., the matter was arranged for trial before Judge Barr of the United States District court in Louisville. The State-rights question is rather a quibble than a matter of importance; but so much may be made of it as to hide the crime of secretly combining under false oaths against the welfare of society and actually committing atrocious crimes under this organization.

THE CONVENTION.—The first word from New Orleans, after the opening of the National Convention Friday evening, was a dispatch from Secretary Stoddard Monday noon as follows: "Acts 26: 22; Exodus 15: 6. Brethren, pray for us." These passages read: "Having therefore obtained help of the Lord, I continue unto this day witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come." "Thy right hand, O Lord, is become glorious in power: thy right hand, O Lord, hath dashed in pieces the enemy." It must be inferred from this message that the prayers of many friends have been heard, and the Convention was progressing with harmony and success.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, the most liberal of that celebrated family, and an active man in the religious and philanthropic circles of New York, is strenuously opposed to the sale of liquor anywhere near a railroad station. As much of Mr. Vanderbilt's property is in railroads this opinion can be appreciated by everybody. But why should not such a restriction be worth as much for every school as for railway stations. Why not truly, for every American home? If for the public good, railway men should not be brought into peculiar temptations, neither should the children, and neither should our families. Mr. Vanderbilt ought to be a Prohibitionist.

Henry George and Dr. McGlynn are out, and their Anti-poverty Society will soon fulfill the prophecies of more pragmatical theorists. The trouble has been some time coming to a focal point. Whether the reports of George's success in annihilating poverty with $100,000 ahead, or his endorsement of President Cleveland, or Father McGlynn's effort to pack committees had either or all of them an influence in the case, at least the other party was outmaneuvered by McGlynn, and George announces his withdrawal from the United Labor party. This movement, though projected with much that was untrue in theory, has been of undeniable value in the discussion that is to finally relieve our social fabric of the incubus of monopoly.

"If a woman have long hair it is a glory to her," writes Paul to the Corinthian church; and we can imagine his indignation at the street-walkers' fashion adopted by many young women who pull their front locks over their foreheads as if to conceal a lack of something behind. Judge Duffy put a strict interpretation on this fashion of "bangs" the other day, when he said to four young girls who stood before him: "Look at your hair down on your foreheads. What makes you wear it that way like a goat? It gives you away. You will go to the Island for a month."

—Mrs. L. M. Hoyt, Box 276, Ware, Mass., asks that some kind friend among the Cynosure readers favor her with a loan of $50. This request, which is made with much reluctance, is made necessary by the illness of Mr. Hoyt, who is a United Brethren minister, and the pressure of the lodge upon them. If any friend can aid a family which we believe to be entirely worthy, they will please write as above.

—One of the most atrocious of murders was committed in this city a fortnight since. A laborer in a brewery, formerly a saloon keeper, after eating dinner with his family murdered his wife in the most fiendish, cold-blooded manner. The only explanation the wretch gave the officers was an incoherent story of difficulty in his lodge, of which both he and his wife were members. He claimed that through her influence he was expelled. He was of a cruel temper and wanted the possession of her property.

—Homer James, the treasurer of Hyde county, Dakota, was arrested for appropriating $10,000 of the public funds to his own account. A legal investigation showed that James was a good-natured, free-handed politician who was always ready to lend money to a friend, and he had thus passed out the county funds to the above amount, taking neither receipt, note or bond of any kind. After this he was discharged as a strictly honest person! If the Masons of Highmore do not know something more of this case than they have allowed in the public prints, we are much mistaken.

—Letters from New Orleans regret the anticipated absence from the convention of President McCulloch of Knoxville, Dr. Wm. Johnston of College Springs, Rev. G. M. Elliott of Selma and Rev. Byron Gunner, who are detained by sickness or other good reasons. The unexpected arrival of Rev. J. S. T. Milligan of Kansas, who is an host in himself, gives much relief from the disappointment. Rev. L. T. Jordan from Texas had also arrived and all were encouraged to begin the Convention Friday evening with good hope of its success. The New Orleans daily press promise fair dealing, and the visitation of churches and tract distribution was proceeding finely.

—Last week Tuesday, after a single week's sickness, Mrs. Alexander Thomson, wife of the pastor of the Congregational church of Bartlett, Ill., and one of the most valued contributors to the Cynosure, was taken home to God. Her death was unexpected, as the nature of her disease was not clearly apprehended by the consulting physicians. She has been for some ten years a faithful companion to Bro. Thomson and mother to three children left with him after a former sore bereavement. She was buried amid the scenes of her girlhood a few miles away, Rev. Walter A. Ferris of Dundee preaching an impressive funeral sermon. The sympathy of all our readers will be given an afflicted brother, for whom we pray that sustaining grace which the Lord only can give by his Spirit.

—The New York Independent notices the new book on the Scotch Rite in Masonry thus: "Pres. J. Blanchard of Wheaton College, for the latest step in the war on Masonry that he has accepted as his life-work, edits, in two volumes 16mo., the Scottish Rite Masonry Illustrated.... We agree with Dr. Bacon that these rituals are the dreariest of all dreary nonsense, and we utterly fail to comprehend how any considerable part of mankind can endure them except upon the principle which, with some change, we may contrive to draw from Dryden's lines: 'There is a pleasure sure in being dull, which none but dullness knows.'" If it were also "dreary nonsense" to the lodge members our duty and the duty of the Independent toward the lodge worship would be easily fulfilled. But what answer shall we give to our Judge since it is far otherwise?

—Rev. Byron Gunner and Miss Farley have been diligent in their agency for Howe Institute, New Iberia, La. From two Presbyterian churches in Chicago they have a $50 donation each, and the case has been laid before three Congregational churches with perhaps equal success. They have also from several individuals assurance of generous aid in the near future. The Congregational ministers have given them this kind endorsement:

The Chicago Congregational Ministers' Union has listened with interest to the claims of Howe Institute, New Iberia, La., as presented by Miss Farley and Rev. Byron Gunner. This Institue is located in a very destitute part of the State, and being undenominational is admirably suited to meet the evident demand of the neighborhood. We cordially commend our friends, who are soliciting aid for this institution, to all who are interested in the Christian education and elevation of the colored people. We sincerely hope that they will obtain sufficient money to meet the present urgent necessity.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Dr. McCosh of Princeton College was given a reception the other evening by the Penn Club of Philadelphia.

—Rev. H. T. Barnaby of the Michigan United Brethren conference, and one of the loyal brethren, has been severely ill but is now recovering.

—Rev. J. T. Hobson, who formerly published an Anti-masonic monthly at Hartsville, Indiana, is now secretary of the Indiana U. B. conference.

—The Living Way says that Prof. H. Woodsmall is in very feeble health, yet he continues at his post, teaching the pastors' class in the Normal School at Memphis.

—A letter from Secretary Stoddard written Wednesday last mentions the much-improved health of the Cynosure editor and of Mrs. Blanchard in the genial climate of New Orleans.

—Rev. A. F. Dempsey of Michigan went South last week by way of Chicago and this office. He expected to attend the National Convention and remain for a time in Louisiana for his heath, which is impaired.

—Dr. J. N. Norris of Birmingham, who has been called a Nestor among the Iowa Anti-masons, is slowly recovering from a severe illness which has prostrated him all winter; and now his excellent wife after caring for him is in turn attacked with disease. We hope to write soon of her recovery also if the Lord will.

—It is generally acknowledged by the temperance workers that the oldest veteran in the ranks of the reform to-day is General A. W. Riley, the wealthy and dearly beloved citizen of Rochester, N. Y., who attended our convention in this city in 1884, and whose portrait appeared in the Cynosure, June 5th of that year. He will be 93 years old March 19, and is still active in the promotion of temperance. During his life he has given 8,000 temperance addresses (400 in Europe), and 6,000 drunkards have signed the pledge and received a medal from him. The mother of Miss F. E. Willard, now bearing the honors of eighty-three years of influence for temperance, tells with pride of her signing the pledge after listening to an address by General Riley in a country school-house where she was a "school marm."

—Dr. Norris writes "with a trembling hand" a tribute to his "very dear friend, President J. Blanchard," whose portrait, cut from the January 5th Cynosure, he has nicely framed on his center-table to be shown with "pleasure and pride" to friends and visitors. The note, which we are safe in printing since the subject of it is far away, runs thus:

"At last somebody has placed the friends of reform throughout the country under lasting obligations for having printed in the Cynosure the life-like picture of President Blanchard, the senior editor of that paper. Pres. Blanchard has always stood in the breach, and has spent a long life in battling for the triumph of unpopular reforms—one of which, at least, he has lived to see consummated—that of anti-slavery. As a citizen, and a teacher, he has taken great interest in the affairs of the country and of the world. He has strong opinions on many national questions, and, whether by pen, or by speech, he tells them out fearlessly. He has this great advantage over many—he can always make one understand just what he means, and on which side he is. He is a man of backbone, indomitable will, indefatigable perseverance, and in argument he can and does strike and that strongly against what he believes to be error. Impartial history will record the name of Jonathan Blanchard as the greatest reformer of the nineteenth century. His noble features should be preserved and handed down through a less perishable medium than the pages of the Christian Cynosure.

J. N. NORRIS.

—Within the empire of China there are now laboring the representatives of 38 foreign missionary societies, numbering in all 919 missionaries, 446 of whom are men. The ordained native laborers number 40; the unordained, 1,296. There are now over 28,000 communicants.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17, 1888.

The Blaine letter of declination created quite a stir in political circles here. Interest in it was particularly intense in the Senate, for quite a number of the Senators have had the Presidential bee buzzing around them. Senators Hawley, Sherman, Allison and a few others were even congratulated, laughingly, that the path to the Presidential nomination had been so happily opened to them. General Sheridan's name has also been very favorably mentioned in this connection. But his most intimate friends here take special pains to represent him as entirely free from the Presidential mania. They say that the measure of his ambition is filled with the office he now holds, and that he has no intention of plunging into political strife. The General has also very happily settled the question by emphatically, and wisely too, following the example of Mr. Childs of Philadelphia, refusing to think of accepting the perplexing burdens of the Presidential office and affirming that he would not accept a nomination.

The week's work in Congress so far makes a poor showing. Both the Senate and House have accomplished, it would seem, less than usual. There are a quartette of Territories knocking loudly for admission to the sisterhood of States, and an enabling act will soon be reported, which will probably be passed before the session ends. An "enabling act" does not enable, strictly speaking. As Mr. Springer says (he is the Chairman of the Committee on Territories), it is simply an act of encouragement. After such encouragement, the Territory forms a State Constitution, constructs the machinery for State government, prepares for admission into the Union as a State, and demands it. The aspirants alluded to are Dakota, Montana, Washington and New Mexico. I did not mention Utah, which did not wait for Congress to give her the initiative. The people of Utah held their Territorial convention, adopted a State Constitution, and now demand admission to the Union. While some Congressmen would be glad, no doubt, to put Utah on the list, the public interest in the Mormon question will incline them to move very carefully; there are too many explosive elements in the question to permit great risks.

The Blair educational bill which has had such a long and tempestuous voyage through the Senate has at last passed that body again, by a vote of 39 to 29. The bill has occupied much valuable time during three Congresses, and has gained no converts in the Senate wing. A comparison of this last vote with that of two years ago shows that the longer the measure has been talked of the weaker it has grown. Every Senator who voted against before, voted against it on this last occasion, while some, including Senators Kenna, Blackburn, Voorhees and Spooner, who voted were in favor of it two years ago, voted against it on Wednesday. It is believed by many that the bill will stand no chance of getting safely through the House. Senator Blair himself made the closing speech on his cherished measure, and made a spirited attack upon the Jesuits for their opposition to the common school system.

The Department of Superintendence of the National Educational Association have been holding a convention in this city for the past three days and the meeting attracted prominent educators here from all parts of the United States. The daily sessions and the subjects discussed have been highly entertaining to all persons interested in educational matters. Among the speakers Charles H. Ham of Chicago made a strong appeal for departments of manual training in public schools. Messrs. Howland and Parker of Illinois, J. G. Kennedy of San Francisco and Senator Wm. Stewart of Nevada are among the speakers.

Last Sabbath was an unusually busy day among the temperance workers of Washington. Large meetings were held and stirring addresses were made in different parts of the city. Notable among the speeches made for prohibition in the District were those of Congressmen Cutcheon of Missouri, and E. B. Taylor, of Ohio. A Washingtonian says that some of the bills pending in Congress in relation to the District of Columbia are calculated to create the impression that parents in this city desire the Federal Government to take charge of their children. He was alluding particularly to a bill introduced by Senator Chase, of Rhode Island, providing that tobacco shall not be sold in any form to residents of the District who are under sixteen years of age. If such a measure is as productive of good as in other parts of the country, the fathers and mothers of this city may be thankful for a paternal government. *

THE HOME.

CHILDISHNESS.

My little son, who looked from thoughtful eyes,
And moved and spoke in quiet, grown-up wise,
Having my law the seventh time disobey'd,
I struck him, and dismissed
With hard words, and unkiss'd;
His mother, who was patient, being dead.
Then, fearing lest his grief should hinder sleep,
I visited his bed,
But found him slumbering deep,
With darkened eyelids, and their lashes yet
From his late sobbing wet.
And I, with moan,
Kissing away his tears, left others of my own;
For, on a table drawn beside his head,
He had put within his reach
A box of counters and a red-veined stone,
A piece of glass abraded by the beach,
And six or seven shells,
A bottle with bluebells,
And two French copper coins ranged there with careful art,
To comfort his sad heart.
So, when that night I pray'd
To God, I wept, and said:
Ah, when at last we lie with tranced breath,
Not vexing Thee in death,
And Thou rememberest of what toys
We made our joys.
How weakly understood
Thy great commanded good,
Then, fatherly not less
Than I whom Thou has molded from the clay,
Thou'lt leave Thy wrath and say,
"I will be sorry for their childishness."

THE BIBLE FOR STUDY AND USE.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

Last Thursday evening Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D., of Philadelphia, delivered an address in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, on "The Study and Use of the Bible." Aggasiz said, "I have no time to make money." So he had no time to make speeches—he only talked. Corresponding to our bodily senses we have two additional, the sense of the mind, which is reason, and the sense of the soul, which is conscience. Our spiritual faculties are dyed in sin, but if we sincerely follow these two senses, God will lead us into life. We have a more sure word of prophecy whereto we do well that we take heed, until the day dawn and the day star arise in our hearts." After service in Detroit, a young man came into Dr. Pierson's study.

"Are you here in the interests of your soul?"

"Yes, if I have any"

"I do not wish to trifle. If I can help you as a physician of souls I shall be glad to do so. What are your symptoms?"

"I was passing your church, heard the music, came in and heard you preach. I was convinced that you believed in what you said, and that your faith made you happy. I believe nothing and am miserable."

"Do you not believe the Bible to be God's word?"

"No."

"Do you believe there is a God?"

"I do not know."

"Will you promise me to take four verses of Scripture and go home and read and study them?"

These were given: John 5:39. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." Matt. 6:6. "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." John 7:17. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." Matt. 11: 29. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls." The next Sabbath he came a joyful believer. For the last seven years he has been preaching the Gospel.

The Bible is composed of 66 books, divided like Isaiah. The first thirty-nine chapters are history, the next twenty-seven are prophecy. This corresponds with the books of the Old and New Testament. It was written by forty-two different men, living over a period of 1500 years. They wrote in at least three different languages, represented every variety of culture, position and occupation; and yet their writings make a perfect unit. This can only be explained on the hypothesis that a Divine mind acted through these writers. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." The argument from prophecy is impregnable. Only ten infidels have tried to answer it, Porphyry and Voltaire. They said the prophecy is so much like the event that it must have been written after it occurred. There are 666 prophecies, 333 of which refer to Christ. He illustrated by a tree on the blackboard. The germ is in Genesis, third chapter: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." From the first branch sprang Seth, from this Enoch, from this Noah, from this Abraham, from this Isaac, from this David, and so on until the Messiah. Then the time. From the time of the going forth of the command to rebuild Jerusalem after the captivity to the Messiah was to be 70 weeks,—490 years. From the decree of Darius to the birth of Christ was 457 years. Add the 33 years of his life and you have 490. The place. Out of all nations Judah was taken; out of the cities, Bethlehem; of the several Bethlehems, Bethlehem Ephratah. These branches form "the plant of renown." Looking upon it, it blazes with the fire of the Holy Ghost, and we put off the shoes from our feet.

The first chapter of Genesis corresponds with all the discoveries of geology. First water, then waters above divided from the waters beneath, the heaving of the land, the grass, flowers, trees, the fishes, mammals, and at last, man. Moses was a God-taught geologist. Isaiah said, The stars are like the sand of the sea, innumerable. In the whole sweep the natural eye can not discern 100,000 stars. Modern telescopes bring into view hundreds of millions, and convince us that this is only the border land of creation. Isaiah was a heaven-taught astronomer. Light is simply vibration. Sound is also vibration. Eighteen vibrations per second is the lowest that can be detected. Above that the ear cannot discern them. But then the eye begins to discern them in the colors of the rainbow. When they increase they become the white light. "The morning stars sang together"—the word means vibrate. Job was a Divinely-instructed philosopher.

The Bible ought to be studied by books. Ascertain who wrote the book, to whom, what for, etc. Take Ruth. The central idea is redemption. The redeemer must be the kinsman of the debtor. Christ is our elder brother. Also outside of the family and capable of lifting up. Christ is the Son of God, and able to save to the uttermost. Take Esther. God's providence is pictured, even in the smallest matters. "The king could not sleep." The name of God is not in it, because God hides himself in providence. The scenes change on the stage, but you do not see the hand that moves them. God works in providence, but we see him not. He exalts Mordecai and hangs Haman. Take the epistle to Philemon. Only a letter from Paul, a prisoner, to a slaveholder, as to his servant Onesimus. Onesimus had run away and likewise stolen from his master. He goes to Paul. Paul sends him back with this letter, praying Philemon to receive him as a "son beloved," what he does for Onesimus he would be doing for him, and "if he have wronged thee, let that be to my account." Christ is our intercessor. He entreats for us before God, assumes all our obligations, asks God to receive us as himself. Dr. Pierson held the audience closely for two hours.

A BIBLE ALBUM.

The following may prove a useful hint to mothers who don't know just what to do with the little ones on Sabbath afternoons: Provide yourself with a scrap-book of generous proportions, well bound, and with white or cream-tinted pages. Avoid those which are filled with leaves of pink and blue, as those tints do not form so good a background for the pictures to be pasted on their surface. Save the pictures which come to the house with advertisements and catalogues; also it is a good plan, after everybody has finished reading them, to cut pictures from the beautiful illustrated weeklies. You will find there a great variety to choose from, and will be as rich as the possessor of a gallery of art. Wood engravings in these days are so fine and so various in design that such a scrap-book as I have in mind may be very lovely if they are only used. But children are fond of colored pictures, too, and tastefully introduced they will add to the beauty of the collection.

"Why do you call it a Bible album?" does some one inquire. Because every picture is to be accompanied either by a text of Scripture, a stanza of a hymn, or both, selected by the children, and written in a bold, plain hand by the one whose penmanship is most legible. The selection of this explanatory verse is always an interesting feature; and if birds, flowers, palms, stones, bits of landscape, etc., are under inspection, the little students will find out how much the Bible has to say about all these. And added attraction will be given the album in juvenile eyes if its ultimate destination be some children's hospital or asylum. "When this is finished," they will, say, "mamma intends sending it to a little crippled child, who will be so glad to enjoy these pretty pictures and to read these lovely verses!" I have seen a family happily engaged for months in filling one of these scrap books, and oh! the gladness when completed, at last, it was packed up and sent to carry on its mission of good among the poor and the sick!

THE AGONIES OF AGNOSTICS.

Agnosticism ignores both faith and knowledge—it advocates negatives and uncertainties, hence both science and religion, being positive systems, are clouded in the minds of its devotees. It strives to maintain a theology without a God, a creed without a Bible, and a religion without a devotion, and thus it presents to the world a mass of doubts and denials. It is not a profitable business in any sense of the word, and financially it seems to be quite an expensive luxury.

A change being made in the management of an infidel paper in Chicago, the man who has hitherto supported it out of his own pocket, comes to the front with the statement that during the last eleven months this promising sheet has cost him sixteen thousand dollars! It also transpires in the same connection that Boston infidelity has been obliged to keep its sheets in the wind by private donations.

All of this goes to show that agnostic publications do not, in the language of country newspapers, "supply a long felt want." It shows that they are not needed by the people. They bring us neither hope nor comfort; they supply us with no needed element in our natures; they bring us neither the bread nor the water of life.—Mrs. H. V. Reed, in Union Signal.

A SELF-WITNESSING BIBLE.

2 Cor. 4. 2.

A gentleman approached the fruit stand of an Italian woman, whom he found very intently engaged in reading a book.

"What are you reading there, my good woman, that seems to interest you so much?" he inquired. "The Word of God," said the woman. "The Word of God? Who told you that?" "God told me himself," answered the woman. "God told you? How did he do that? Have you ever talked with God? How did he tell you that was his word?" Not being accustomed to discuss questions of theology, the woman was a little confused. Recovering herself she said: "Sir, can you prove to me there is a sun up there in heaven?" "Prove it?" said the man, "Why do you ask me to prove it. It proves itself. It warms me and I see its light; what better proof can anyone want?" The woman smiled and said: "Just so: you are right. And that is just the way God tells this book is his Word. I read it, and it warms me and gives light. I see him in it, and what it says, is light and warmth which none but God can give; and so he tells me it is his Word. What more proof do I need?"—Dr. Jos. A. Seiss.

FORBEARING ONE ANOTHER IN LOVE:

Alice entered her room with a scowl on her face and petulantly threw her books on the bed. It was very easy for her room-mate, who was busily engaged with her studies, to see that she was unusually annoyed and out of temper.

With quick, impatient movements she searched about the room.

"Seems to me your things take up a wonderful amount of room, Ruth," she said, crossly.

"Do they?" said Ruth, very pleasantly. "Well, I don't mean to take any more than my share. I'll settle them back into closer quarters when I've done this lesson."

"You promised me you'd water my ivy this morning when I was so busy," said Alice, in a voice which showed it a comfort to have something to find fault with. "It's all drying up."

"O, I forgot it. I'll do it this moment, Alice. I was thinking that I'd wash the leaves off, too, they always seem to me to shine out a thanksgiving for it. I'm sorry I didn't do it before, but I don't believe its dry enough to hurt it."

"I wonder where my pencil is," said Alice, still continuing her hunt about the room. "I believe you have it, Ruth. That one looks exactly like mine."

"No, it isn't, dear, but I'll help you look for yours."

She got up and searched industriously until Alice exclaimed:

"O! I believe I lent it to Janet Ware in the class room. How I wish people would return things they borrow."

"Never mind," said Ruth, "I'll be done with my examples in a few minutes and then you can have mine."

"I wonder if you want the whole window," growled Alice, with an injured tone joining the cross one.

"Excuse me," cried Ruth, "what a rude thing I am to take it all! Come, Alice, there's plenty of room for both of us, I'm sure."

Alice fussed restlessly about for a few minutes longer and then seated herself near Ruth, looking so fixedly at her as to cause her presently to raise her eyes inquiringly.

"Are you always this kind of a girl?" asked Alice in answer to her look.

"What kind of a girl?"

"This kind. I came into the room fifteen or twenty minutes ago cross enough to drive anybody away from me. I've done nothing but snap at you and disturb and annoy you ever since I came. The girl I roomed with last would have gathered up her books with an air of high dignity and with a 'When you are less disagreeable, Miss Garland, I will return,' would have swept majestically out of the room. And the girl before that would have given me snap for snap and snarl for snarl, until we should have got into a first-rate quarrel and not spoken for days. But you have given me a pleasant word for every crabbed one and a smile for every scowl. Why don't you give me as good as I send?"

Ruth laughed at the rattling speech, but a sober look took the place of the merriment as she said affectionately:

"Why, dear, I don't want to give the devil a stronger hold on you than he has already."

"What!"

"Yes, I mean it," said Ruth, unable to repress a smile at her room-mate's look of half-horror, half-amazement. "It sounds dreadfully, I know; but I learned it from one of the dearest old Christians I have ever seen, and she wouldn't say it if it wasn't so."

"What did she mean? And was it she that taught you to stand my ill-temper like an angel?"

"O, I fancy it would take more even than dear Aunt Faith's teaching to make me angelic," said Ruth, laughing. "But I will try to tell you how she used to talk, dear, and then you will understand what I mean."

"My mother died when I was a very little girl, and left me, with my two brothers and two sisters, with no one but servants to look after us for several years. It is no use for me to tell you what a quarrelsome little set we grew to be. I don't know whatever would have become of us if Aunt Faith hadn't come to take a little pity on us.

"I remember that one of the first things she tried to teach us was the beauty of loving and trying to be kind to each other, and she always made a special point of our being forbearing with any one who was out of temper.

" 'Don't sin against each other by making a bad matter worse, dears,' she would say.

" 'When we poor mortals give way to these evil tempers of ours,'—the dear soul always said 'we' in talking to us; just as it she knew what it was to be in a bad temper!—'the devil gets a very strong hold on us. Do not let us, by word or deed, help him to make that hold stronger. What can be sweeter or more Christ-like than for us by our patience and forbearance to hold out a helping hand to those we love. Must not the devil rejoice when we, by irritating words, add fuel to the flame of anger burning in a poor heart?' "

"Yes, indeed; she used very strong words, and she meant them," went on Ruth. "And I am sure they did us good. The time had been when a cross word from one of us would have set all the others on edge, and how we would sting and irritate each other!—we who ought to have loved each other all the more tenderly for being left motherless. But Aunt Faith impressed it upon us that the Lord would hold us accountable for the sin which we made darker in the hearts of others, when we might, instead, help them over a rough place by a few gentle, patient words."

"It is a hard thing to do, though," said Alice; "but it's a pity that more of us girls don't think as you do about it, Ruth. Time and again I've got into such a temper that—well, it's just as you say. It seemed as if the devil had me right in his grasp; as though I hadn't a bit of power except to say angry words. And then some one would tease me until I felt full of hate and bitterness and said the very worst things I could."

"Poor girl!" said Ruth, caressingly.

"Oh, I don't deserve your pity," said Alice, "for I've done the same by others often, and when I came in just now after being kept in for failing in my Latin, it would have been just so with me except for your blessed patience."

"Then let us try the better plan, dear," said Ruth affectionately. "When we see people weak and ready to fall do not let us lay a stumbling-block in their way. Let us try what a kindly hand-grasp will do, and a word of good cheer to stir up the good in their hearts, and to help them trample down the evil, for the sake of the Master who bears so much from us."—Selected.

LITTLE BY LITTLE.

Step by step the Alpine climber
Presses upward sure and slow,
Till his feet are firmly planted
In the realm of endless snow.

Blow on blow the sculptor fashions
Roughness into symmetry,
Till the dark rock gleams with brightness
In its new-born majesty.

Touch by touch, the picture groweth
Into beauty, life, and light,
Till a wondrous revelation
Bursts upon the raptured sight.

Stroke by stroke the clock aye ringeth
Welcomes to eternity,
Adding warning unto warning
To the heart in me and thee.

Word by word the book is written
With its tale of woe or weal,
Till the throbbing thoughts like music
Through the trembling spirit steal.

Wave on wave the wild tide creepeth
Farther on and up the shore,
Till the stranded boats are floating
Free and buoyant as before.

Such is life in all its phases,
Little things make up the great,
Therefore, scorn them not, but make them
Stepping-stones to heaven's gate.

TEMPERANCE.

TEMPERANCE SCHOOL BOOKS.

INFAMOUS TACTICS OF THE LIQUOR INTEREST.

Thirty-three States and Territories, containing over half the population of the country, now require scientific temperance instruction in the public schools.

This is mainly due to the Women's Christian Temperance Union, under the leadership of the national superintendent of this branch of their work, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of this State.

Desperate endeavors are now being made by liquor-dealers and book-publishers friendly to them, to nullify this instruction, by introducing text-books which do not comply with the law, and which, by showing only the evils of the excessive use of intoxicants, practically encourage moderate drinking, and in some cases positively commend it, by describing its exhilarating effects.

In this endeavor, as in the original opposition to the legislation, charges are made that the Women's Temperance Union is in league with some school book ring, to make money from the sale of particular books; and this, while these ladies are eager to induce every publisher to revise his books, so they can endorse and commend them, and while they are constantly engaged in efforts to this end.

Of all these slanderous accusations none has been more groundless than the attempt of the Minnesota State text-book commission to justify their adoption of text-books satisfactory to the liquor dealers, by trying to impeach the personal integrity of Mrs. Hunt, one of the noblest of all unselfish women, and to convict the Women's Temperance Union of fraudulent methods and sordid aims. These slanders were promptly and publicly refuted on the spot, by the testimony of many witnesses of the highest respectability, embracing the officers of the State temperance organization and such prominent citizens as Gen. A. B. Nettleton and others. So conclusively was this done that many reputable journals, which had given currency to the charges, publicly retracted them. All Minnesota knows that the official statement of the State text-book commission is unsupported by fact.

And now, such is the greed and unscrupulousness of the liquor dealers and publishers who pander to them, that they have taken these reputed Minnesota accusations against Mrs. Hunt and the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the retracted statements concerning them by the Minnesota newspapers, and having republished them in a little pamphlet of attractive appearance with confident and triumphant comments, as if they were true and conclusive. They are at this moment flooding the State of Massachusetts with them in order to influence the choice of text-books in our schools.

The undersigned, speaking for the interests of truth and good morals, desire to say to the people of Massachusetts, and especially to superintendents of schools, to whom these republished calumnies may come, that documents refuting them in detail, can be obtained by addressing either of us at Boston. Signed, DANIEL DORCHESTER,
ALBERT H. PLUMB,
JOSEPH COOK.

From reliable statistics it is learned that the amount of beer consumed in Chicago last year was 1,674,146 barrels. The brewers received for this $6 per barrel, or $10,044,876. The saloon-keeper sells it so as to realize $24 a barrel, making the total cost to the consumers over $40,000,000.

The National Temperance Society is pushing its work among the colored people of the South with more vigor than ever before. In addition to the work in schools and for ministers it has five colored men constantly at work among their own people, and several others on special occasions.

It is noteworthy as illustrating the relation of foreign-born citizens to the liquor traffic in this country, that in Philadelphia recently, out of 865 liquor licenses placed for hearing before the court, 669 of the applicants were foreigners and 196 Americans. This proportion would hold good in most of our larger cities.

Mrs. I. A. McClees, Superintendent of the Department for Soldiers, is taking steps toward the suppression of beer selling in the soldier's homes in Dayton, Ohio, and elsewhere. She is conferring with officials of the government with reference to presenting a bill to Congress, and will go to Washington soon in the interests of the measure.

Professor George Bunge, professor of Physiological Christianity in the University of Basle, is a total abstainer of many years' standing. He has won over to total abstainers a band of students, formerly his pupils at Basle, but now scattered abroad and sowing scientific temperance truth in the Universities of Heidelberg, Strassburg and Leipsic.

The Scott act is being enforced at a fearful cost in Leeds and Renfrew counties, Canada. Eleven buildings at Irish Creek and a Methodist church and tannery at Kemptville have been burned, and five constables have been assaulted and stoned by saloon sympathizers. Dr. Ferguson, M. P., and three others have been threatened with murder, and the deacons of a Baptist church are warned to dismiss their minister or have their church building burned. Forty to fifty tavern-keepers have been fined, three sent to the penitentiary, and the constables' assailants fined $800.

Think over it: Governor Larrabee, of Prohibition Iowa, called attention in his recent message to the decrease of criminal cases in the courts, and suggests a decrease in the number of courts. Mayor Hewitt, of New York, about the same time, calls attention to the accumulation of cases of violation of the excise laws, and suggests the creation of a new court to deal with these cases —Voice.

A great and glorious work of Gospel temperance is still being carried on in southern California by the noted temperance evangelist, Col. George Woodford. For two weeks in December meetings of prayer and consecration were held every day for one hour or more. Each evening Col. Woodford gave a lecture, full of the spirit and teachings of Christ. He spoke with great tenderness to his fallen brothers, urging them to seek Jesus as their only safeguard against the temptations of strong drink. He has been a great help to professing Christians here. From us he went to Lompoc, doing the same noble work. Many there are trying to live aright, as the result of his efforts among them. San Louis Obispo says "the temperance revival is moving grandly forward." Ventura county is being refreshed at present by his earnest labors among them. So it is all along the line; God is blessing Col. Woodford's efforts to save the fallen. Let us, as Christians, see that in every way possible we further the good work going on in our State. We need the help of just such a Christian leader in the cause of temperance.—Pacific.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The evangelist L. W. Munhall began a four weeks' term of meetings in Buffalo on the 4th of February.

—Dr. Pentecost is now conducting meetings at Norwich, Connecticut.

—The evangelist George K. Little has been conducting meetings in Des Moines, Iowa, and is happy in numbering near forty souls converted.

—At Geneva, Kansas, the labors of a lady evangelist among the Friends, Susan C. Berry, have been blessed in the salvation of some seventy-five persons.

—The Kansas City papers say that the work of the evangelist Jones ruined the theaters of the city for January and they were unable to recover before the Catholic and Episcopalian patrons were taken off by their season of Lent.

—Our Banner, the New York monthly devoted to the principles of the Reformed Presbyterian church, gives in its February number the excellent sermon of Rev. David McFall of Boston, at the dedication of the new building erected by the First church of New York city of which Rev. J. C. K. Milligan is pastor. The new church is located on One Hundred and Nineteenth Street, far to the north of the old building which was sold in 1884. For three years the congregation met in a hall, the lamented Dr. A. M. Milligan preaching for them the first sermon in this hired room. It was his last sermon, though he lived in great feebleness for more than a year. The building is a fine one, and built at great economy of expense.

—The scattered and neglected people of the mountain regions of our Eastern and Southern States have a missionary, called of God, to visit them in their homes and tell them of Christ. His name is Joseph X. Dillier. He is at present in this city, but will start in the early spring with a companion, a young man named Hammond, who is constrained to join in this good work. These brethren have undertaken a work of faith and should not lack for encouragement from the churches.

—Many friends, says the Pacific of San Francisco, who expected Mr. D. L. Moody to visit this coast within the next few weeks will be disappointed to learn that interference with his plans will prevent his reaching here this season. The San Francisco Evangelistic Committee received a communication from Mr. Moody a few days ago, stating that he would be detained in the Middle States until late in February, and could not possibly reach California before March 1st, and would be obliged to leave the coast so as to reach New England not later than April 10th. Under these circumstances Mr. Moody urgently requested the Evangelistic Committee to release him from his engagement this season, but promised to give several months to the coast next year.

—Mr. E. H. Gammon, of Batavia, Ill., some few years ago being deeply interested in the work of the Freedman's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal church in the South, erected, at his own expense mainly, handsome buildings for a theological school, to prepare colored men for the ministry of that church, near Atlanta, Ga. The institution has since been incorporated under the name of the Gammon School of Theology. Mr. Gammon gave the school $20,000, the income of which has been devoted to the support of its professors and teachers; the balance of the expense of maintaining the school being paid by the Freedman's Aid Society. A few days since Mr. Gammon donated the equivalent of $180,000, as a perpetual endowment of the institution. The total of $200,000 goes into the hands of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal church, and the income is to be forever devoted to the support of the faculty of the school.

—Several weeks ago the workers in connection with the Chicago Evangelization Society, of which D. L. Moody is president, began a series of meetings in the Belden Avenue Presbyterian church, the outcome of which has been a union of effort reach the non-church-going masses in and around Deering, a suburb north of the city. The meetings began Feb. 6, and have been carried on every night, the house being packed, in spite of the cold weather. The interest is apparently growing, and the preaching of the Gospel to the masses has been eminently successful.

—There has been a remarkable revival in Wilberforce University. The interest began at the close of the week of prayer and grew steadily. For two days recitations were suspended. The entire Christian body of the school and community gave themselves wholly to the work. Students and citizens who had passed through previous revivals untouched, went down in tears and penitence. The Y. M. C. A. was especially active, holding a noon service daily and rendering efficient organized aid. Forty were converted, and fifty-two added to the church. More than ninety-eight per cent. of the students are professed Christians; only two are outside the fold.

—The hundred Evangelical churches of Louisville have had an average increase of ten members each as the result of the Moody meetings. Among the converts is Jesse Hammond, who is reported to have been a notorious gambler. He was indicted a number of times. He attended one of Mr. Moody's services to scoff, but left in a sober frame of mind. He went again and again, and finally professed conversion.

—The Rev. Dr. H. M. Scudder, now of Nugata, Japan, in a private letter, says: "We rejoice every day that the Lord has graciously brought us here. There is ample field for ten times more than I can do. I enjoy the work. Am studying the language. I lecture on the life of Christ in an incipient college which is supported by the Japanese, and has many bright lads in it. At the last communion there were eighteen new ones admitted (I mean in the native church) and there will be more than that next time. The work goes forward and we expect to see great results. My health is improving. I am stronger and more vivacious than when I came. Mrs. Scudder is as frisky and happy as a gazelle. My son and daughter are full of joy in the work."

—The First Baptist church for colored people in the South was organized one hundred years ago in Georgia. Their anniversary will occur January 20.

—The institution of Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, in London, has just sent 100 missionaries to Africa, and 500 during the last 14 years. He has at present 100 missionary students, and on an average sends out a missionary to some part of the great mission field every week in the year.

LITERATURE.

THE FABLES OF FLORIAN. Translated into English verse by Gen. J. W. Phelps, late member of the Vermont Historical Society, author of "A History of Madagascar," etc. With numerous very fine illustrations by J. J. Grandville. Elegantly bound in fine cloth, gilt edges, ornamented, price $1, postage 12c.

LOCRINE: A TRAGEDY. By Algernon Charles Swinburne. Pp. 60. Price 20 cts.

LUCILE. By Owen Meredith. Pp. 172. Price 25 cts.

THE PROGRESS OF LEARNING. By George Lansing Taylor, S. T. D. Pp. 46. Price 25 cts.

These four books of poems are late issues from the publishing house of John B. Alden, New York, and all are furnished to the public at the exceedingly low rate for which his imprint has become a synonym. The first named is beautifully printed and bound. Florian's Fables are here first translated we believe from the French for American readers, many of whom have learned to esteem the now lamented translator for his able and voluminous contribution to the literature of an unpopular reform. Gen. Phelps was a fine French scholar, and the New Testament in that language was one of his most constant companions during the last part of his life. While in the army he translated a considerable volume upon the dangerous nature of secret societies. And that he held a versatile pen the fine fancy and versification of the poem printed on the first page of this issue is excellent proof. Of the Fables, LaHarpe says with just admiration: "Good of every description prevails in this collection. You find here some fables of touching interest, others of a sweet and playful humor, others of a biting subtilty, and still others in a loftier strain without being above that of the fable. The poet understands how to vary his colors with the subjects; he can describe and converse, relate and moralize. We nowhere feel the effort and are always sensible of the meter." A writer in the London Quarterly Review moved with a like enthusiasm writes of them: "The feelings with him are never exalted at the expense of virtue. His women are tender without licentiousness, and his heroes daring without violating the laws of their country, or questioning the existence of their Creator. He combines the morality of Fenelon with the enthusiasm of Rousseau or St. Pierre. His writings derive an additional charm from his glowing descriptions of the beauties of nature. He seems tenaciously to uphold the poetical connection between rural life and moral purity, and loves to annex to tales of love and hardihood their appropriate scenery of rivers, woods, and mountains." The illustrations of the volume are original, artistic and pleasing, excellently telling the story of the text.

Locrine is the latest work of one of the first of living English poets. His several previous works have given this writer the unhappy reputation of belonging to the "fleshly school" of poetry, and those even who most admire his power of poetical expression, and the rich coloring of his lines, must deplore their sensuous tone. This tragedy is in five acts, and but seven characters are employed. The jealousy of an injured wife supplies the key-note; and while the penalty for iniquity is sufficiently severe to afford adequate warning, yet the constant recrimination of virtue tends to fasten the sympathy of the reader upon the wrong-doer. There are numberless fine passages in the poem, pleasing the ear with their music and the mind by their thought.

Lucile was regarded one of the most remarkable English poems of its day. It was one of the earliest of the works which made the name of Owen Meredith (Lord Lytton) celebrated; and will long deserve to be read for the fascination of its style and its strong characterization of scenes in the social life of European nobility.

The Progress of Learning is a poem delivered by Dr. Taylor at the Centennial of Columbia College, New York, April 13th, 1887. The volume is dedicated to the learned and revered President Barnard; and, though prepared for a particular occasion which might seem to limit the imagination and scope of the poem, will be found happily disappointing in this respect. Columbia itself occupies but a small space, and that is given to historic personages of interest to all Americans, whose patriotism will be kindled into a flame by the apostrophe to our free institutions and the impassioned sketches of the great men who have arisen under them, to in turn maintain them for posterity.

It is reported that Mrs. General Grant and her son Fred. are part owners of the Cosmopolitan Magazine. All friends of good and chaste literature beseech them to interpose and allow no more such disgusting illustrations as appear in the February number of the magazine with Theodore Child's account of the French ballet. The redeeming feature of the article is that instead of having a vicious tendency it excites an abhorrence of the theater and the opera of which such accessories are a prominent part. What a picture of a young life which might be beautiful, full of joy and goodness and usefulness is this which we quote!—"A dancer has to spend so much time in training her feet that she has none left to train her mind. And as a clever historian of the foyer, M. de Boigne, says, 'What would be the good of training a dancer's mind?'....Other peculiarities of a dancer are, that she has not time to be daughter, wife or mother; she is a dancer. She is religious; she goes to church on Sundays; almost always she wears religious medals and talismans, and believes in fortune-telling; and she rarely goes to bed without drawing her horoscope with a pack of playing cards. A dancer always has a mother and sometimes a father. In her turn, too, she is often a mother without being a wife; she is not married, but she belongs to the Opera, which in Paris is considered to be equivalent. The greatest joy of the dancer is rest, rest of limb and rest of face. Not to be obliged to smile, what bliss! Thus it happens that a dancer is never happier than when she looks sad." Prof. Boyesen's articles on the Crown Prince of Germany and international copyright, Lieut. Schwatka on "Wintering in the White Zone," and J. M. Oxley's "Hunting and Trapping in Canada" are good and profitable and help atone for the ballet business.

General Lew Wallace, whose "Ben Hur" has secured such wonderful popularity, is possibly not entitled to the undivided honors of its authorship; at any rate he is fortunate in having in his wife, Susan E. Wallace, a helpmeet of hardly less literary skill than himself. A volume from Mrs. Wallace's pen, which is to be published early in the spring, entitled "The Land of the Pueblos," will doubtless prove of curious interest to students of American antiquities and history, as well as to general readers who enjoy breezy descriptions of western life and scenery as viewed by one exceptionally well qualified to see and describe them. The position of General Wallace as governor of New Mexico before becoming our Minister to Turkey, gave Mrs. Wallace the best of opportunities to study the life of to-day, and also the extraordinary and curious pre-historic life of which glimpses can be seen in the many monuments of the Pueblos. The volume is to be published by John B. Alden, New York.

The Missionary Review of the World for March contains ten papers on the "Literature of Missions," on such subjects as "The Apparent Waste of Missions," the "Life of Brainerd" (editorials); "The Principle of Christian Missions," by Dr. Behrends; "The Miracles of Missions," "Missions to Roman Catholic Countries," by Chamberlain of Brazil; "Joseph Rabinowitch, the Jewish-Christian Leader," by Prof. Schodde, etc. The Monthly Bulletin gives the latest news and facts from all parts of the world, and Statistics of the World's Missions, summarized, analyzed, and tabulated. The public has already shown its appreciation of the work by necessitating a second edition of the January and February numbers. Funk & Wagnalls, New York. $2 per year.

The Library Magazine, which has for a time appeared in weekly and monthly editions, will appear in the later form only hereafter. Among the topics appearing in late numbers are "Dethroning Tennyson," by Algernon Charles Swinburne, "An Eskimo Igloo, or Snow-house," by Lieut. Schwatka, and "The Higher Life; How it is to be Sustained," a reply to Huxley by Rev. J. L. Davies.

LODGE NOTES.

The Grand Council of the Order of Royal Templars of Temperance convened at Shelbyville, Ill., Tuesday.

A warrant was issued at Philadelphia Tucsday for the arrest of David B. Hilt, treasurer of Philadelphia Lodge, Order of Elks, who is short in his accounts $6 000.

George H. Thomas Post G. A. R. held its annual reception at the First Regiment Armory in this city; fully 300couples devoting their best energies to dancing and its pleasures.

The lockout of shoemakers at Cincinnati has resolved itself into a fight between Knights of Labor, District Assembly No. 48 contending for supremacy against National Assembly No 218.

The "Godfrey Weitzel" G. A. R Post gave their annual masquerade ball at Lester's Academy, Chicago The supper was served by theWoman's Relief Corps. The Sons of Veterans were present in force.

The "Tri City Odd-fellows Anniversary Association" has been formed at Rock Island, Ill , comprising all the lodges of Rock Island, Davenport, and Moline. The organization is for the purpose of holding a celebration on April 20 of each year, the anniversary of the establishment of Odd fellowship in America.

The Illinois G. A. R Thursday elected Colonel Sexton of Chicago Department Commander and decided to meet next year in Springfield. The service pension resolution was defeated, and the dependent pension bill, now before Congress, was approved; nevertheless the advocates of the former elected every representative to the Grand Encampment at Columbus.

The first regular session of the general executive board of the Knights of Labor held this year was begun in Philadelphia, Feb 6 to continue for at least ten days Only Mr Powderly and Ira Ailesworth were absent The board indorsed the strike of the Reading Railroad employes, both railroaders and miners, and the moral, if not the financial aid of the order, will be brought to bear in favor of the strikers.

The Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen at St. Louis unanimously adopted the report of a committee to the effect that the order does not come within the scope of the State insurance law, and that it will not incorporate under it. Henry L. Rogers of St. Louis was re elected Grand MasterWorkman for the fourth time, and William C. Richardson and John D. Vincel were respectively re-elected Grand Recorder and Grand Receiver. The latter is well known as a leading Mason, and was late Grand Master of Missouri.

The Grand Army of the Republic in Illinois makes the following showing of membership: In good standing Dec. 31, 1886, 25,443; gained by muster in, 9,016; by transfer, 647; by reinstatement, 2,206: by delinquent reports, 588. Aggregate, 37,900. Lost by death, 313; by honorable discharge, 194; by transfer, 737; by suspension, 2,798; by dishonorable discharge, 42; by delinquent reports, 3,980; total loss, 8,064. Remaining in good standing Dec. 31, 1887, 29 836; net gain during 1887, 4 393; expended for charity, $10 664 14. The cash receipts of the department during the year ending Feb. 1, 1888, from all sources, are as follows: Charter fees, $510; per capita tax, $5.593 - 65; sale of supplies, $4.485.60; total, $10,-588 65; total expenditures, $5,860.68. The loss by suspension is practically a secession. Members for one reason or another give up the order. The proportion is about one in ten. And if the loss by delinquent reports is for like reason, it shows that one in every five of the old soldiers weary of politics and lodgery in such a mixture.

AN EPIGRAMMATIC STATEMENT.

Is there anything in this world so vile
As the pestilent presence of potent bile?
We have it, we hate it, we all revile
The noxious nausea, as did Carlyle.
But why bewail what soon is mended?
Take P. P. P. and have it ended.
All praise the power of "Pierce's Pellet,"
Wise people buy and druggists sell it.

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOUSE-PLANTS.

The way house-plants thrive on the dregs of coffee left at breakfast is admirable. Bowker itself hardly turns out stronger leafage or such thick bloom. The grounds are a good mulch on the top of the soil, but a little care must be given not to let them sour and get musty in coolish, damp weather

The great trouble with house-plants, greater than errors in watering, is letting the pots be exposed to the sun. The fibrous roots soon grow to the side of the pot, and these are baked in full sunshine, trebly hot coming through glass, which condenses its rays; the root tips are soon killed. The whole ball of earth is baked over and over, daily, and yet people wonder why they don't succeed with house-plants. Shade the sides of the pots always, either by plunging into a box of sand, moss, cocoa fiber or ashes, or place a thin board on edge across the front of the plant shelf, that will come almost to the top of the pots. Let the plants have the sun, but shade the pots. A good way to screen them is to set each pot in one one or two sizes or more larger, filling the space with moss or sand.

The best gardeners say that the porous common pots are not so good for house-plants as those glazed or painted outside. The reason is that evaporation is constant from the sides of the porous pots, and the roots are not only drier but colder for it.—Vick's Magazine.

VINES IN THE ROOM.

Few running plants are prettier for house decoration than those commonly known under the general name of ivy. The German Ivy, Senecio scandens, is a rapid grower, but will not bear the cold as well as the English Ivy, which is the only real ivy of the plants I am now noticing.

The English Ivy, if well treated, will live for many years. A friend of mine has one about fifteen years old, the largest one I ever saw. She keeps it on the piazza in summer; in the fall it is removed to the cellar. The ivy is wound around two tall stakes which are thrust into the soil in the keg which contains the plant. Water is given occasionally during the winter. If one has an English Ivy which seems to be dying, and its leaves wither and fade, they must not be picked off, but must be left to drop off. If the leaves are picked off when they show signs of decay, the tiny leaf-bud at the stem, so small as to be unnoticed, will be liable to be killed; but if let alone, a new leaf or shoot will come out of each one.

The Coliseum Ivy, Linaria cymbalaria, is beautiful when growing in a hanging pot at the window. It is easily raised from seed or cuttings.

The ivy geraniums are very desirable for house-plants, both on account of their leaves and their flowers.—Vick's Magazine.

A FINE CLIMBING PLANT.—People seeking a nice climbing plant are advised that there is none in cultivation that surpasses the smilax in the graceful beauty of its foliage and orange fragrance of the flowers. Its peculiar wavy formation renders it one of the most valuable of all plants for vases or hanging baskets, as it can be used either to climb or droop, as required. In cut flowers, particularly for wreaths, it is now considered indispensable by all florists. It is very highly prized by ladies in the dressing of their hair on festive occasions; flowers white. Soak the seed in warm water for twelve hours, plant in pots, and in a moist, warm place.

HEALTH HINTS.

Glycerine, which is the sweet principle of fats, should never be used in its pure state on chapped hands or lips. Dilute with water and it will no longer be irritating to the skin or to mucous membranes.

A very pleasant drink may be made for sick people from current jelly. It is refreshing and grateful to the palate and may be made as follows: Take two large spoonfuls of current jelly, and mix it with a little warm water; then put in one gill of syrup, squeeze two or three lemons in, and let the rest be water; taste and make it to your palate, putting a little cochineal in to make it of a fine color; strain it through a sieve, and it is fit for use.

LOOK AND LIVE!

My lady reader, don't pass me by with the unkind remark, "Only an advertisement." I may do you good. I may unfold to your view the "pearl of great price." I may be the means of restoring to you health and happiness I surely will if you are suffering from any form of nervousness or female weakness, and will act upon my suggestion. I bring to your notice, with every confidence in its merits, a remedy especially compounded to meet just the requirements of your case —Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, bidding you look and live! Ladies everywhere, who have used it, speak volumes in its praise!

ORGANS. The cabinet organ was introdnced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, bnt the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the nnequaled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century."

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Eminent Americans.

Brief Biographies of Statesmen, Patriots, Orators, and Others, famous in American History. By BENSON J. LOSSING, LL.D. With over 100 Portraits. Large 12mo, cloth, 75c.; half Morocco, $1.00; postage 15c.

"The very appearance of the volume is an inspiration. A handsomer volume does not often come from the American press. How the volume can be offered at the price is the wonder. The work can hardly be overrated in importance. The faces of the most eminent men and women shine forth from its pages, and the events of their lives are illustrated by the author in the happiest possible manner. The American youth who owns the work may be justly envied. No parent can do better than to place 'Lossing's Eminent Americans' in the hand of son or daughter. We shall do just what we recommend every other father to do, and add the volume to our private library."—Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, O.

"Well, that man Alden 'beats the Jews'—and Gentiles, too. First thing we know we shall all have a splendid library, and obtained so cheaply that we shall never know how little it cost us and where the money came from. Here it is again—a beautifully bound book of 515 pages, half Morocco, for $1.00, giving biographical sketches of nearly four hundred men and women, from George Washington down to James A. Garfield, with portraits of many of them. The name of Lossing gives guarantee of the historical accuracy of the contents."—Christian Leader, Cincinnati.

The Literary Revolution Catalogue (84 pages) sent free on application. ALDEN'S publications are NOT sold by book-sellers—no discounts except to Stockholders. Books sent for examination before payment, satisfactory reference being given.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN BRIEF.

Archdeacon Farrar has received a check for $2,500 from Mr. George W. Childs of Philadelphia, for the purpose of aiding in contributing to a memorial window to Milton in Westminster Abbey. The poet Whittier has written four lines for an inscription. The window will be completed at once.

A commercial traveler wishing to get advantage of a clergyman who occupied the same compartment, asked him if he had ever heard that in Paris as often as a priest was hanged a donkey was hanged at the same time. The victim of the joke replied in his blandest manner: "Well, then, let us both be thankful that we are not in Paris." Loud laughter on the part of the fellow-passengers. Our commercial friend changed cars at the next station.—Reichsbote.

At the Comstock silver mines in Virginia City mining science has reached its highest point, according to a San Francisco newspaper, which says that there they carry water down a vertical shaft to the depth of 1,700 feet, and then gear it back to the surface, running the gigantic mills by the 1,700 foot pressure. When the plan was suggested to engineers of Europe they laughed at it; but now it's a proved success, and furnishes a power immeasurably greater and cheaper than anything hitherto applied to mining.

A public test took place at the Chester rolling mills of the new device for saving of fuel and the improving of iron. The process is simply the spraying of fine coal, reduced by the cyclone pulverizer to a powder, into a chamber attached to the furnace, in which the combustion is so perfect that all the waste hitherto occurring in smoke and ashes is entirely obviated. The general result showed a saving of between 40 and 50 per cent in coal, a saving of 50 per cent in time of heating the furnace, and a greatly improved quality of iron.

The cruel sport of bull fighting has been revived, and the following is considered of enough importance to be telegraphed from the city of Mexico: "Two bull fighters have been injured, one fatally. The first case was that of Saleri at Puebla, who, while jumping over a bull with the aid of a pole on Sunday afternoon, was caught on the bull's horns and impaled, dying in the presence of the spectators. The second case was that of a bull-fighter here, who on the same afternoon was gored seriously. The press generally condemns the revival of bull-fighting, but is unable to make any impression on the public, which continues to flock to the arena on Sundays, bull-fighting on other days being now forbidden."

The annual report of the New York Central Railroad Company shows that during the year 1887 there were 221 persons killed on its lines, and 459 injured. Of the killed 61 were employes, and of the injured 312. Half of the injured employes (153) were hurt and 5 were killed coupling trains Two were killed and 6 injured by striking bridges. Six passengers were killed and 17 injured in jumping on or off moving trains. The Central has 856 engines, 538 first-class passenger cars, and in all 979 cars in its passenger service, and has 33,266 freight cars. The total out-payment for wages was $5,984-317. The total earnings for the year were $35,297,056—the greatest in its history. The stockholders number 9,561, or 1,453 less than in 1885.

The great financial strength of the treasury and the great extent of the Government's fiscal operations, than can be obtained from a statement of mere figures, has given us this ingenious illustration. If the gold held by the treasury were placed on scales it would be found to weigh 519 tons, and if packed into ordinary carts, one ton to each cart, it would make a procession two miles long, allowing twenty feet of space for the movement of each horse and cart. Measured as the gold was, the silver would weigh 7,396 tons, and the services of 7,396 horses and carts would be required to transport it. The procession would cover twenty-one miles in length. Extending these calculations and comparisons to the interest-bearing debt, equally interesting results were obtained. The public debt reached the highest point in August, 1865, when it was $2,381,530,295. The vastness of this sum is better realized when, as before, it is reduced to tons. In this instance it would represent 70,156 tons of silver, which would make a procession of carts extending from Richmond, Va., to a point twelve miles north of Philadelphia, the distance being 266 miles. The interest-bearing debt has now—twenty-two years later—been more than one half paid. In other words the Government has reduced its bonded debt at the astonishingly rapid rate of $2.007 for every second, or for every swing of the pendulum for the entire period from August 31, 1865, to July 31, 1887. The world's history furnishes no such parallel of the recuperation and material progress on the part of a country, and of integrity on the part of a government.—Standard.

A MILLIONAIRE IN A MINUTE.

Instances are on record where toilers in gold mines and diamond fields, who, by one turn of a spade, a single movement of the hand, have been transformed from penniless laborers to millionaires. But they were not so lucky as is the consumptive who finds a means of restoration to health, who learns that the dread disease from which he suffers is not incurable. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure consumption (which is lung scrofula), and nothing else will. For all diseases of the blood, such as blotches, pimples, eruptions, scrofulous sores and swellings, it is unequaled.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The President expects to leave Washington Tuesday for a short visit to Florida. He will be accompanied by Mrs Cleveland and the Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Whitney and Colonel and Mrs. Lamont. The party will go by special train, and no stops will be made unless it be an hour at Savannah for a drive through the city. One day will be spent at Jacksonville and one at St. Augustine. The party will return to Washington Saturday.

The House Committee on Commerce has decided to report favorably the bill to charter the Nicaragua Canal Company. The committee inserted two amendments in the original bill, the first requiring a majority of the directors of the company to be American citizens, and the second providing that the president of the company shall be a citizen and resident of the United States.

The House Committee of Indian Affairs decided to report a bill, providing for the division of the great Sioux Reservation of Dakota into separate reservations, and the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder. The practical effect of the measure, if it becomes a law, will be to open to settlement 11,000,000 acres of the 22,000 000 acres comprising the Great Sioux Reservation in Dakota.

CHICAGO.

The murder of A J. Snell and frequent burglaries in the city have led Mayor Roche to ask the resignation of the Chief of Police Ebersold, and Geo. B. Hubbard is appointed in his stead. The lack of discipline in the police force is the complaint.

Young Lee, who shot S. S. Rawson, the banker, on the steps of the Third Presbyterian church several months ago, has been sentenced to eighteen months imprisonment in the County Jail by Judge Clifford. Rawson is slowly recovering from his almost fatal wounds.

August Hetzke was, Friday, in Judge Clifford's court, found guilty of the murder of his little stepson, and his punishment fixed at death by hanging. The murder was committed in June Hetzke beating the boy to death with a strap.

Two rewards of $2,000 each have been offered for the arrest of William B. Tascott, the supposed murderer of Amos J. Snell, the millionaire. The police have evidence which they believe will hang the man, and are confident he will soon be caught. He is the wayward son of a well-to-do family on the West Side.

A tunnel to be constructed anywhere between Lake and Twelfth streets within the next five years, a double roadway bridge at Madison street, a single roadway bridge at Washington street, and twenty-five-ride tickets for $1 were the requirements imposed by the West Side Committee on Streets as a condition for granting the West Side cable street railway franchise.

COUNTRY.

At 4:50 Sunday afternoon a cyclone struck Mt. Vernon, Ill., from the northwest, and sweeping around in a half-circle leveled half the town to the ground. The remainder caught fire, and as there was a strong wind blowing the flames soon got beyond the control of the fire department. The situation was a startling one. High above the whistling of the wind and the fierce crackling of the flames could be heard the shrieks and groans of the dying. All over the ruined part of the town could be seen bodies half-buried beneath the ruins. Assistance was secured from Evansville, Ind., and other points and the fire was subdued. Churches, the school building, court house, and most of the business houses were more or less demolished, and in the evening the dead were believed to number 35, and the injured were numbered all the way from 100 to 250. Mt. Vernon is a town of some 2,200 inhabitants, and is the county seat of Jefferson county.

The Dakota Territorial Superintendent of Public Instruction proposes to compile a complete list of those who perished in Dakota during the fatal snowstorm of Jan. 12. The statistics are being gathered by county superintendents of schools.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger publishes an editorial from its proprietor, Mr. George W. Childs, who emphatically repeats his refusal to be a candidate for President, or to be voted for, and adds that he would be compelled to decline the office, honorable and exalted as it is, if by any chance in the chapter of unforseen events he should happen to be elected.

Letters have passed between representatives of the strikers and the Reading management looking to a resumption of work, and it is believed that the pits will again soon be manned. The wages question will be arbitrated after the miners resume work, and no man will be barred out who has been quiet and orderly during the troubles.

Terrible destitution has been discovered among the striking miners at Shenandoah, Pa., several families having been without food for two days. Most of the contributions intended for them were absorbed by the railroaders for whose benfit they struck, and who have been living in clover while they suffered.

Four men entered the bank at Cisco, Texas, Wednesday, took charge of the cashier and other officials, collected $6,000 in cash, then locked the officers in a back yard and decamped, firing their revolvers as their wagons dashed through the streets.

A Grand Trunk passenger train from Toronto collided with a freight near Hamilton, Ontario, Thursday afternoon, wrecking both engines and hurling express and baggage cars down a fifty-foot embankment. The fireman of the express and a freight brakeman were killed, and two others were seriously injured.

A derrick used in building an elevated railroad fell upon a street car, in Brooklyn Tuesday morning, killing four men and wounding nine others. It is believed that four of the latter cannot recover.

At St Marie, Ill; Mrs Shelley, the wife of a farmer, took aim with what she supposed was an empty musket, at Edward Dugy, and pulled the trigger. The weapon was loaded with buckshot, and the upper portion of the victim's head was blown off.

A skiff containing eight persons was submerged by the swells of a steamer a short distance below New Orleans, and seven of those on board were drowned.

Drunken Hungarians overturned a lamp at Silver Brook, Pa, Saturday night, and the place catching fire five men and a girl were burned to death, and other persons are not expected to recover.

A party of Hungarians at Spring Garden, near Mt. Pleasant, engaged in a row and two of their number were shot, one of them being fatally wounded. After the fight Constable John T. Stauffer went to the place to arrest the offenders, when the excited foreigners pounced upon him with hatchets and cut him badly about the face. He was carried home in an unconscious condition, but he will recover.

FOREIGN.

The Pope has requested Cardinal Simeoni to advise the Irish bishops to preach to the people of Ireland respect for the laws and to maintain a calm, prudent line of conduct. The Pope also announced his intention to send to Ireland a permanent apostolic legate.

Seven persons were buried by the avalanche which has blocked the end of St. Gothard Tunnel.

The socialists at Amsterdam made a demonstration against the militia law Thursday. Bodies of socialists paraded the streets and strongly denounced the law. The police interfered and dispersed the crowd. Several were injured, and a number of arrests were made.

The Jesuits have presented to the Pope the sum of 40,000 pounds as the Peter's Peace contribution of their order. Various valuables which were presented to the Pope as jubilee offerings, and which were on exhibition, have been stolen from the Vatican. Among the stolen articles are a chalice valued at 2,000 pounds, some gold snuff boxes, and several pairs of slippers.

Two Protestant citizens of Spain have been condemned to six months' imprisonment for refusing to kneel before the Viaticum. The Liberal newspapers are indignant at this display of intolerance.

An explosion which occurred in the Kreuzgraben coal mine, near Kaiserslantern, Bavaria, killed forty persons. Thirty-six men were rescued.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000.000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.
The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

THE EVANGELIST MUNHALL.

The career of this servant of God is a remarkable proof that it is "not by might or by power," but by the Spirit of God that great labors are done for the church of Jesus Christ. The grace that could come upon a business man of Indianapolis, and cause him to quit his money getting and become an agent of spiritual blessing to millions, is surely from heaven; though that agent may not be learned in the schools nor be consecrated by an ecclesiastical formula.

Leander W. Munhall was born in Zanesville, Ind., June 7, 1843, and will soon, therefore, be forty-five years old. Much of his youth was spent in Cincinnati, whither his parents removed when he was nine years old. Though a member of a Christian family, he grew up regardless of their God, and was the companion of idle, pleasure-loving young men, and with them he went the rounds of city life in Cincinnati and Indianapolis, where he afterward resided. In this life of frivolity and folly he frequented those places where many of his companions were taking their first steps to ruin. When he was about fifteen years of age, an event occurred which made a permanent impression on his character, and though afterward apparently effaced for a time, re-asserted its influence and eventually redeemed it from the downward forces which were threatening it with disaster. It was the death of his father. He was one day summoned to the chamber in which his revered parent lay, in what proved to be his fatal illness. With the solemnity that comes to all with the approach of death, the father spoke to his son about his future in this world and the next. Conscious that the boy would soon be left without a father's watchful care in the midst of a world full of temptations, he begged him to give his heart to Christ and to consecrate his life to God. At the close of his affectionate appeal the father had the boy kneel down at his bedside, and there solemnly commended him to God and gave him his blessing. That scene was never forgotten. Dr. Munhall has said often in later years, as he has surveyed his past career, "that was the turning point in my life." At first, however, and for some time after his father's death, it seemed as if the boy was unmindful of the solemn admonition, and in spite of it was bent on evil courses.

Well would it have been for young Munhall, and great joy might it have given his father if these solemn paternal counsels had not been delayed till a dying bed. The risk is too great, and parents should never for a moment forget that they cannot too early begin that personal instruction in righteousness which shall forestall the summons of death. Happily the grace of an infinite God, acting with the years of parental example upon the conscience and the natural temperament of the youth, held him back from the worst forms of dissipation. He was finally led by the Spirit of God to resolve upon leading a new life. This decision was arrived at while spending a Sabbath morning with some companions. Rising from the table at which he sat, he went directly home, hunted up his Bible, and in the solitude of his own room gave himself up to reading, meditation and prayer. He did not stir out of doors all that day. He sought earnestly for light and strength, and that night he entered into the joy of acceptance—the consciousness of forgiveness through Christ and the assurance of sonship with God. He lost no time in applying for membership in a Christian church, and from that time on he has never wavered in his Christian profession.

About three months afterward young Munhall heard the call of his country and enlisted in the Union army. During the war he passed unharmed through twenty engagements, protected by the angels of God. His experience in the service was valuable in developing his powers and furnishing his mind with many incidents which he uses forcibly to illustrate his preaching.

Before the war began he had gone through a preliminary course of medical study, and on coming back to civil life he took up the profession of surgical dentistry which he practiced in Indianapolis for nine years. He thus acquired his title, which is sometimes misunderstood as of ecclesiastical character. Though his practice in his profession increased so rapidly that his receipts reached the comparatively large sum of $360 a month, and his time was to be valued at that rate, he reserved a large portion of it for Christian service. He accepted the position of president of the local Young Men's Christian Association, and threw himself into the work at considerable cost of time and labor. The new openings which this office afforded him for Christian usefulness, were occupied as they presented themselves, and they eventually encroached upon his time to a degree that left him but little for the exercise of his profession. Finally he abandoned it altogether on being offered the post of State Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. This office he held for ten years, working in it with indefatigable energy. During the latter part of that period, four months of each year were devoted to evangelistic work, the rest of the year being occupied with office duties.

The blessing of God was evidently given to his work as an evangelist, and he was impelled to devote more of his time to the great work of soul-saving, and finally in October, 1885, he laid aside all else that he be unhindered in this mission to which the Spirit of God evidently called him. His first great success was during the succeeding winter in various cities and towns in California closing with meetings that continued for several weeks in San Francisco. Here after a Bible reading in the Y. M. C. A. Hall the writer first met him He was then about leaving the city and on the Sabbath following gave his farewell address in Dr. Gibson's United Presbyterian church on Mason Street. The evidence that his work had been thorough was not wanting. The vices that beset church members: Sabbath-breaking, dancing, the theater, etc., he had rebuked in the name of the Lord, and with the severity which he saw the case demanded in a great city so full of open vice. Not a few were displeased with his plainness of speech, but the work was of great benefit to all the churches.

Early in June he came to Denver and assisted by the sweet singer, Charles Herald, continued meetings for a month in which the churches united in a large rink. All were greatly revived. It was here he first, so far as reported to the Cynosure, began to testify against the lodge evil along with others that assail the church.

In the early part of 1887 Dr. Munhall commenced a series of meetings in Brooklyn Tabernacle (Dr. Talmage's) At that time he was comparatively unknown in the cities of New York and Brooklyn, but as the work at the Tabernacle went on, the name of the evangelist who was drawing the vast crowds there and whose words were being blessed to the conversion of so many was on all lips. Men who went out of curiosity went again and again, and came away changed for time and eternity.

Since that time, in Boston, Toronto, Columbus, Cleveland, and other cities Dr. Munhall has labored with much success. The editor of Knox College Monthly says: "Dr. L. W. Munhall is one of the best evangelists Toronto has ever heard. He belongs to the Moody type. He has not had the experience and lacks some of Moody's power, but he is, perhaps, a more thorough Bible student and is certainly a better exegete. He is sound in theology and reverences the Bible. He says nothing calculated to weaken the influence of the ministry, and honors the regular pastorate. He cares little for mere feeling, and detests the buffoon."

Of his convincing testimony against the secret orders in his meetings at Columbus, Ohio, the agent of the State Christian Association wrote to the Cynosure with enthusiasm last November. Dr. Munhall has had personal experience of the inside of several lodges, and his warnings have that tone of conviction which gainsayers do not care to dispute. His testimony, however, like Mr. Moody's, falls short in this respect: it is not concerned with the causes which in the lodge produce the effects of dissipation, neglect of the church, worldliness and infidelity. They object to these effects only. It may be,—it must be that they see more or less clearly the wickedness of the oaths and blasphemies of secretism, but prefer to speak only of those more open and public characteristics which everybody of candor will confess to be of evil tendency. It is well that they object to these, as corrupting the soul and keeping it from God; but if this were all that should be said against the orders the tide of lodgery would sweep on with hardly a check and soon even these voices of warning would be hushed. The fact that the lodge is assailed fundamentally in its character as a false worship, makes it possible for these brethren to speak as plainly for Christ as they do against the system. We thank God for the boldness he has given them, and pray that they, by the Holy Spirit, may be so enabled to preach that we shall see such results as followed Paul's preaching at Ephesus. Acts 19: 19.

INFIDELITY, SPIRITISM AND THE LODGE.

BY REV. A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

Infidelity is always one, in fact, though its methods are various. Robed in sophistry, it often palms itself off as philosophy. Dressed up in a ritual, it frequently appears as a religion. In some instances it depends chiefly on a specious title to commend itself to the unsuspecting.

Infidelity is a lie, and in its methods it is a fraud, for it is a system of deception. The trap is always concealed, and the bait is always something apparently good. There is never in the name, profession, or outward appearance, anything to indicate the real character or design of error. All this is forcibly illustrated by the following incident:

A Spiritualist camp meeting was held at Saranac, Mich. Bro. P. asked me to accompany him to the ground. My first thought was, that it would be very unwise to attend such a meeting, but instantly the Lord told me to go. I took a seat in the back part of the congregation. Mr. S., who had been a Baptist preacher, delivered a metaphysical address on "Obsessions." Capt. B., with much earnestness and severity, chided the Spiritualists for their want of religion. He said that philosophy reasons, but religion sings. Spiritualism had become a dry philosophy—there was no religion about it. That large congregation could not even sing a religious melody; they tried several times and failed. Said he: As philosophers, we have taken the field—have won the belt; no one ventures a reply any more, unless it be some ignorant country priest. But we have no religion; if we had we could sing. If there were a lot of Methodists here there would be some singing, for they have religion."

A leading Spiritualist came to me and strongly urged me to go forward and address the congregation. I refused, but told him that I would like to ask a question. He went to the stand and whispered to some of the leaders. The president rose and announced that there was a Methodist preacher present who desired to speak. The lecturers rose to their feet and cried, "Let the gentleman come forward," and the call became general and clamorous. With some difficulty I got their consent to stand where I was. I assured them that I would be very willing to make a speech after my question should be disposed of.

The lecturers, mediums and officers were all seated on a long plank in the pulpit, all being ready for my question. I stood on a seat and said, "Mr. S. stated that there was no intelligent, personal God; that God and the vital forces of nature are one and the same. He stated, further, that the word spirit was from the Latin, spiro, to breathe; hence spirit and breath, or air, were identical; and there was, therefore, no personal, intelligent spirit. Mr. S., is this your belief?"

He cried out, "It is."

"But do you, as a Spiritualist, believe this?"

He said, "Yes."

"Is this the belief of all the Spiritualists present?"

With one voice, they shouted, "Yes."

"Is this, then, the doctrine of Spiritualism?"

They all answered, "Yes, it is."

"But are you willing to have it known that that is the doctrine of Spiritualism?" They said that they were anxious to have the whole world know that Spiritualists, as such, held and advocated this tenet as a vital and fundamental truth.

Pointing to Mr. S. I said, "You have a badge—a square and compass; does that mean that you are a Freemason?"

"Yes," said he, "I am a Mason, and I am not ashamed of it."

Said I, "The president, Mr. H., has the same badge. Is he a Mason?"

He replied, "Yes."

I continued, "Mr. S. and Capt. B. have three links. Does that mean that they are Odd-fellows?"

They answered, "Yes, and we are proud of it."

"Well," said I, "As Spiritualists, you believe that God and nature are identical, and that spirit is breath or air; as Masons and Odd-fellows, do you say the same? This is my question."

All was painfully still.

In a moment, I said, "Perhaps I am the ignorant country priest referred to by Capt. B., but I insist on an answer." There was a great amount of suppressed excitement.

I continued, "My name is A. H. Springstein; I live in this town. I was a Master Mason, but I have renounced Masonry, and Masons accuse me of lying because I teach that Masonry is infidelity. Odd-fellows especially protest that their order is in harmony with the Bible. I shall hold the Masons and Odd-fellows accountable for your utterance. You must be called to account by the lodge, or lodge men will be driven to confess that secretism is a conspiracy against the truth of God."

At that, Capt. B. jumped to his feet and contended that I had no right to call any man to account, for the only law that should govern men was inclination or impulse. He declared that every man had a perfect right to do just as he pleased. Though he was furiously excited, he saw, as did all the rest, that he was granting me the fullest liberty to expose Masonry. He stopped short, and with vengeance in his eyes, he spit out, "Unless you cross my path." That part was Masonry, and everybody saw it. But, instead of answering my question or calling for a speech, they all rose up and there was the wildest confusion.

The lodge men shyed off, but the crowd gathered around me in search of "light." A leading medium worked her way through the crowd and said, "Where is the gentleman? I must shake hands with him."

Taking my hand, she said, "I want to tell you that a man who can pass through such a scene in the manner you have done, has something unusually good in store for him in the higher spheres in the other world."

I replied, "That good thing in store for me is a crown of glory, purchased by the blood of Christ; and I have the witness in my heart that I am an heir through Christ to the heavenly inheritance." Said she, "I am glad to hear it."

The meeting was across the river, half a mile from town. As we left the ground the president took my arm, and as we walked along he told me that I had told the truth about Masonry. Said he, "It would be debasing to a dog to go through the blue lodge degrees as I took them."

I asked him why he did not come out. Said he, "I would not stay in a day but for the use I can make of it."

Conclusion:

1. Freemasonry and Spiritualism are substantially the same.
2. They are both essentially and thoroughly bad.

NOTES OF THE CRESCENT CITY.

THE MARDI GRAS CARNIVAL.

BY REV. A. J. CHITTENDEN.

I hardly know whether a description of the Mardi Gras pageantry would be worth writing or reading. It memorializes nothing historic, deals with almost nothing that is real or true, is diseased in its poetry, abnormal in its art, dehumanizing like all masquerades—I might say monkey-izing—and enormously wasteful of money, enthusiasm and artistic genius.

The conceptions of the street displays were of the legendary mythical kind, in which the natural is racked, twisted, distorted and transmigrated into the preternatural, subnatural and infernal.

In the day time it was a rather popular representation of the flower kingdom, with human-sized representation of all the reptiles and insects that infest that fair kingdom in Louisiana. At night it was dragons, serpents, burning mountains and devils, mermaids in the sea and submarine scenes wonderfully realistic and truly astonishing. There were masked men and women gorgeously dressed (or undressed) on every "float," some mounted on thrones, some on horses, others half submerged, and others still just out of hell in the side of a "burning mountain."

These floats, including the day and evening display, represented about one thousand dollars each, and there were I judge, without counting, about fifty of them. The aggregate cost is reported as high as $60,000 and $75,000. Of course this money passes somewhat into the hands of the poor people who prepare carts, masks and costumes, also to mechanics, ball-room tailors, and numberless trades and traffics. But it is a poor apology for any annual convocation to simply make work for the poor. Things that are truly good in themselves also give employment to the needy. That plea alone would vote for an epidemic, to give work for coffin-makers, grave-diggers and shroud-makers. A conflagration makes work; so does a deluge. I am compelled to regard the whole affair as deified sport—a species of idolatry originating with those who are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God."

This carnival was imported from Paris by the sons of wealthy New Orleans families, sent there for education. Paris and Vienna, with other Mediterranean cities, received it as the modernized saturnalia favored by the Romish church and popish governments—which have always found amusement the cheapest way of managing a poor and ignorant people.

Further back, in the classic times, it was the religion of the heathen, whose religious enthusiasm was the fascination of the infernal. In other times this mask wearing protected the audacious citizen who chose to burlesque the pretentions of royalists. His pranks, like those of the court fool, were regarded as lightly as possible, and the dumb speeches of the masqueraders were their annual parliament that expressed much feeling but passed no laws.

But there is another side of this mask affair that is a study for the moralist. Why should people crave the opportunity of hiding their personality on certain occasions? For these carnivals are invariably interluded with the midnight ball en masque. What is that peculiar interest that people have in holding the hand of another incognito? Is there an intoxication in secrecy, that loves it for its own sake? Is there a kind of generic inter-sexual abandon of feeling or sentiment that would be restrained under common social law if the parties were individualized and known? These performances certainly have to be classed among "the unfruitful(?) works of darkness." Certain it is that every sin-mill in this city was run at the highest pressure of devil power that could possibly be used on the weak, the wanton and the wicked. Saloon gates were flung wide open and the meek-eyed police did not see them. Theaters attached to them outdid the "midsummer night's dream." All grades of people, men and women in flaming dress, were reeling on the streets or shouting inebrious nonsense. The only really pretty thing about it all was the innocent glee of the children in the day time. It was a great day for them.

The mask is a success in making the human look hideous—which itself is a sin. It surprises, and when unsuspected pleases for a moment. Because it is more easily overdone than any other sport, it easily disgusts the better mind and has really no apology while there are so many other ways of passing time. One irreparable fault in it, as an art, is the fact that no mask can make a live man or woman look well. An animated body with a dead, motionless and emotionless face is simply the abominable in art. Hundreds of fine looking men and better looking women stood on every block, gazing on the gorgeous scenery of the floats." Not a single good looking person stood on them. Their kings and queens were flat and silly faced. The enthusiasm of the people, too, fell far short of our expectation. Christian enthusiasm will regenerate the sports of any people.

A CURE FOR COWARDICE.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

How many times the Bible asserts of idols that they are nothing, less than nothing and vanity; but while the African savage believes in the reality of his fetish, he bows before it in as abject terror as if it were actually gifted with all the baleful powers he attributes to it. So Masonry in itself is nothing, its oaths are null, its secrets empty as the east wind, but while its Grand Master can delude the unthinking multitude into believing the reverse of this, its nightmare spell of terror will remain unbroken. For invest the simplest thing with mystery, make a bugaboo of it, and it becomes terrible. The fear which besets so many people at any mention of the lodge is as baseless as the fear to pass a graveyard after dark. How shall this spiritual cowardice be conquered? I know of but one way,—to keep in the light. The veriest coward alive cannot be frightened by the sight of a white sheet in the daytime.

In Him is no darkness at all—He who walks in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, whose eyes are as a flame of fire to pierce through every refuge of lies. But it makes a vast deal of difference whether we walk side by side in the intimacy of loving companionship, or whether we follow afar off; for the light is all before and the shadows all behind. They stretch long and darkling and eerie over the way of the fearful and the doubting and the half-hearted and the halting between two opinions. Such live on a kind of debatable ground, the haunt of specters. Anybody who lingers there may expect to see goblins. This is the true philosophy of that nameless dread which invests Masonic oaths and Masonic secrets in the eyes of pastor and layman. I affirm unhesitatingly that because it is only the Image of the Beast, because it is only a warfare against specters and not against men, by so much does it afford a more crucial test of courage; and if they who are equal to the contest are as yet only a Gideon's band, it is no matter for wonder, still less for discouragement. The church is still the star-crowned woman of the Apocalypse, hated of the dragon, but unconquerable; and the refuge of the saints is still, in Luther's sublime words, "under heaven;" wherever their Father reigns, wherever his love extends, wherever his ministers of sun and wind do his pleasure.

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

ADDRESS BY PRES. J. BLANCHARD, AT NEW ORLEANS, FEB. 20, 1888.

This is, indeed, an extraordinary meeting. We are met to-night here, near the center of our American continent, and the longest continuous belt of land on the globe, to consider our American institutions, what endangers them and what may preserve them.

We are here, not only in a commercial center between Labrador and Cape Horn, but also in a center of all shades of human complexion, and all sorts of society, from civilized to savage. If, as seems now not unlikely to occur, railroads, telegraphs, telephones, and other inventions not yet born, shall soon make the people of North and South America next neighbors to each other; and if the tall, stalwart, dark-brown Patagonians shall be conversing with the short, swarthy, copper-hued Esquimaux, over wires 9,000 miles long; and if, at the same time, the yellow Chinaman in Alaska, should chance to be talking with Negroes in Brazil, their wires would cross each other over our heads near this "Crescent City"—where we meet. And if these remote neighbors should be Christians and Americans, not knowing, or not caring, that some wore the hue of their great Confucius, and others the complexion of the sable hero of St. Domingo, Toussaint L' Ouverture, so celebrated by Whittier and Wordsworth; and should we take the telegrams from their wires, their silent gliding messages would mean that "God hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitations—that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he be not far from every one of us." Acts 17: 26–27. And if our Saviour stood with us to-night as he stood in the synagogue at Nazareth, he might say to us as to them, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."

If we are to aid men to come to Christ, we are indeed opportunely met. For we are here, as Paul "stood in the midst of Mar's Hill," to show the difference between religion and idolatry, false worship and true. And if there ever was a fitting time and place to seek the Lord, to learn the relation of our nation to his kingdom,—nay, to "find" the Lord himself, to embrace him by faith and yield a loving obedience to his reign, this would seem that time and place.

In this city, where the worst passions of the worst war once raged hottest, there are not probably ten intelligent persons who would wish the results of the war reversed. Among these results are: the rise of the anti-liquor reform, the perfect pacification of the States, and the gradual reconciliation of races and sections. Slavery was a perpetual menace and terror. Some of us here are old enough to remember the annual agony of the West India Islands, as Christmas time approached. Plantations used to be thinned and blackened by executions, massacres and burnings; and infant slaves were taken in to sleep in mansions to save those mansions from being burned with their owners at night. All that terror has forever passed away. Fifty-four years ago (Aug. 1, 1834), eight hundred thousand slaves in those islands knelt down, and when the clock had tolled the hour, rose up freedmen, shouting, "Glory to God."

Even in our country, so new and vast that slavery had not had time to show all the terrors of its nature, we remember the Nat. Turner insurrection in Virginia, which furnished sixty white corpses for a single funeral! Yet a full quarter of a century has passed since our slavery fell, and instead of the horrors which both North and South predicted would follow emancipation, the fruit of righteousness has been peace, quietness and assurance, as proclaimed by the prophet Isaiah.

A Tennessee judge said the other day, "The colored people have laid us under obligation. I left my family in the care of my servants, fought three years in the confederate service, and,"—pointing to his fine buildings, "I came home and found all safe under their hands." The experience of the Southern judge is not singular. The colored people in our States and islands are two or three million more than the whole people of Ireland; and there have been more tumults in Ireland in a single year than in our country, the West Indies included, in a quarter century of emancipation. The demeanor of the freedmen has falsified all the predictions of evils which were to follow freedom. We have hung anarchists for warring on government; but they were not colored anarchists.

Nor can it be said that the Christian deportment of the millions emancipated has been owing to their lack of capacity or courage. Seventy-three years ago, Jan. 8th, 1815, a battalion of negro soldiers fought under General Jackson in the battle of New Orleans, and they received the high commendation of that great chieftain for their share in the bravery and enthusiasm which won that resplendent victory; and, moreover, two hundred thousand colored troops, at the close of our civil war, stacked their arms, which they had borne with honor, were mustered out, and went home—if indeed they had homes. And the history of the human race does not furnish a parallel to the peace and progress which have followed civil changes, at once so radical and so vast.

Allowing all we must for the infirmities, sins, and miseries which have followed, and may yet follow our terrible civil convulsions, history will pronounce the peaceful results which have followed to be honorable alike to both parties, and especially honorable to the party which has suffered most. For if "to err is human" to forgive is certainly "divine." In the words of an eminent American, "We stand here on the grave of buried prejudices." We have crossed the red sea of slavery. Let us now see if we can escape from the dismal swamps of the lodge.

The eloquent Presbyterian, Dr. Thomas G. Thomas, used to insist that "slavery was the last hope of the devil." But if slavery was Satan's last hope for gaining America, and so governing the world, it would seem that in his struggle with Christ for the world's worship the lodge is his "last ditch." And the tokens brighten that he is soon to be driven from that. For Africa has been the cross-bearing continent since the African "Simon the Cyrenian" was compelled by his crucifiers to bear Christ's cross. The Negro has been at the bottom of the races, and in moving, both in Africa and here in America, to reach and rescue him from the lodge-worships of idolatry, God is kindling his fire at the bottom of the human grate. And, this done, the earth will soon be ablaze with his glory. It surely looks as if the lodge is the devil's "last ditch" in his war on our race.

Religion, like every good thing, has its counterfeit. An opposition god appears in Eden to deceive Eve. He is called, "that old serpent the devil and Satan" (Rev. 21:2), and the split which he inaugurated continues still. Cain invented his religion, while Abel worshiped "by faith." Cain's offering was Masonic, "the fruits of the earth." Abel's was Christian, a symbol of Christ. Cain's religion was ceremonies. Abel's lamb was Christ, the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." These two altars, Cain's and Abel's, stand out before the ages, representing false religion and true.

A South Sea Indian used to set up a log on end, smear it with berries, kill his hog, throw it down before his idol and go away satisfied. Every rap of a lodge gavel, every question and response, every ceremony, in short, in secret lodges or out, which is done to enforce obligation, appease conscience, or procure favor from unseen powers, which is not enjoined in the Bible, but self-projected or invented by men, is but a repetition of that Indian's worship of his log.

Now such a worship, whether performed in a church, convent, lodge-room or African jungle, takes the mind nowhere and lands it upon nothing. Nor, even if the act or ceremony is Bible-enjoined, is it any better if the worshiper rests in it, and does not come unto God. "Qui haeret in litera, haeeit in cortice." And no finite mind can go to the infinite God without a mediator to take it to him. A human soul, attempting to reach the infinite God without a mediator, is like a child launching at midnight on a shoreless ocean without a pilot or compass or a light by which to see a compass, hoping to reach shore where there is no shore, but infinite distance. Christ is that "one Mediator." The inference of Nicodemus is exact: "No man can do these miracles that thou doest except God be with him." That is to say, Christ exercised divine power and so was and is "God manifest."

The Jesus Christ of the New Testament is the Jehovah of the Old Testament. "Moses and the prophets" wrote of him. Abraham saw his day; and John proclaimed him to the multitudes and pointed him out! And from Eden, where he was proclaimed the Serpent-bruiser to come, to the "Come, Lord Jesus" of the Revelation, he appears throughout "the express image of God's person;" so that "he that hath seen Christ hath seen the Father."

Thus the principle of idolatry, in its endless diversities, is one, viz, rejecting Christ. And this the lodge does by omitting him altogether where naming him would be worship, or by offering him lodge worship fit only for devils.

But may not pagans be blindly honoring Christ? The answer is, No. Paganism is not Christianity, nor are pagans Christians. Nobody believes they are. Paul in the first chapter of Romans abundantly shows that. So if Freemasonry is paganism, it deprives men of access to God by Christ, and is therefore opposition to God and goodness. And Freemasonry is paganism. The proof is this, if any proof is needed. The learned Warburton, quoted approvingly by the Encyclopedia of Dr. Albert G. Mackey, gives this direct testimony: "Each of the pagan gods (Div. Legation, I, 2:4) had, besides the public and open, a secret worship paid to him, to which none were admitted but those who had been selected by preparatory ceremonies, called initiation." This is explicit. Every pagan shrine was a lodge. (Mackey's Encyclopedia, Art. Mysteries Ancient)

But were they Masonic mysteries? Hear Dr. Mackey again: "Egypt has always been considered the birthplace of the mysteries. This system was disseminated throughout Greece and Rome and other countries of Europe and Asia, giving origin . . to that mysterious association which is now represented by the institution of Freemasonry." (Encyclopedia, Art. Egyptian Mysteries.)

This, again, is explicit. Freemasonry is born of Egyptian paganism, the vilest of all paganism, which has by its brute-worship sunk Egyptians, whose ancestors built the Pyramids, to the starved and mortgaged serfs of a handful of London capitalists, and this paganism is put by the highest Masonic authorities above Christianity as more ancient and more venerable. This attempt to plant Egyptian Masonry in the United States is only equaled in insolence by the Mormon attempt to plant Asiatic and African seraglios in the heart of America, giving each nabob as many women as he has money to sustain! And this shameless lodge assures its stripped and blinded candidates that it has nothing in it opposed to Christianity; and Mormonism names itself a "church of Jesus Christ," while scouting Christ's holy law of marriage and sinking men from families into herds, where each master-beast is lord of his harem. One feels himself degraded by reasoning with such people.

Gen. Albert Pike, "Sovereign Grand Commander" of Masons, has translated for Masonic uses two large volumes of this Asiatic heathenism from the Vedas and Zend Avesta, one of 800, the other of 1,200 pages, which are still unpublished manuscripts. These are books of the old Hindu and Hindu-Persian religions, the moral meanness of which would appear at once to the American masses if they could read them. It is sufficient for us to notice that millions in Asia and in Africa who believe in those religions go naked or but partially clad, and millions toil without a full meal's victuals from one year to another, while their nobles and princes send their children to us around the globe for the knowledge which is to be had in our common schools. The American traveler, Bayard Taylor, in his "China, India and Japan," explains the philosophy of their degradation.

Mr Taylor says: "The principle of their religion not being the love of God but fear of the devil, they contrive to propitiate their neglected Satans once a year by a terrible thumping of tom-toms and sputter of fireworks lasting three or four days." These poor people worship devils, and of course become like the gods they worship. And yet we have lodges in nearly every town and hamlet between the oceans whose leaders boast their derivation from African pagans. Of course, these lodges send no missionaries to the heathen. Christian missions are a mistake. Why send missionaries to enlighten those from whom the lodge draws its light? Christianity is a mistake. Christ was no more than Confucius, and Paul was a bigot to disfellowship them. Moses was a madman to execute three thousand calf-worshipers, who got their cattle-worship where Masons got their Freemasonry—from Egyptian priests. Ezekiel was a fanatic to condemn those pious sun-worshipers, who crept into the temple to practice their rites, as Masons take their funerals into Christ's churches, when they have halls of their own. (Ezek. 8:6.) Why could not Ezekiel mind his preaching to the Hebrew captives by the river Chebar, and "let other folk's religion alone?" The answer is: Because they defiled the sanctuary of God by introducing secret false worships. They had driven God from his own temple by infiltrating idolatries. They had driven off those very captives to whom Ezekiel was preaching by running down society till the nation was incapable of self-defence. They had multiplied religions till no one knew what god to swear a witness by, or which oath to keep. There was no security for property, no sacredness in marriage;

"No pledge was sacred and no home was sweet."

And just so sure as we copy these Hebrew idolatries the savannas of our Mississippi will yet be as desolate as the barren hills of Judea.

There is nothing in idolatry to keep the popular mind from sinking, and so, like other unsupported things, it sinks. This explains the sinkage of the pagan nations. Their first idols were the heavenly bodies; their last, four-footed beasts and creeping things. This is the condition of Asia and Africa to-day. But the Bible lifts up mind by setting before it the true and living God, infinite, immutable, eternal; and making him accessible through Christ. It gives us a law of supreme love to God and equal love to man so condensed that the little heart of a child can hold it, yet so comprehensive that worlds can move in it in harmony. It reveals to us pardon for sin through a Saviour and a Holy Spirit to help us to obtain it, and thus lays clear and substantial ground for that "rest to the soul" promised by the Saviour to all who come unto him. And as the angel inhabitants of other worlds were with Christ in his agony and seem to have been bending over him by legions as he hung on the cross; and as Christ himself was both God and man, he has laid foundations for the stability of his government wide as the universe and provided for the elevation and happiness of men eternal as his own nature.

The secret lodge system reverses all this. It allows its dupes more gods than Egypt had plagues. Provided the candidates will worship the god of the lodge they may worship whatever else they please, and they are initiated all the same. If faithful to Masonry they are declared "free from sin."(Mackey Lex., p. 16.) The first commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," is not only set aside but coolly defied by the lodge, which declares its faithful members "free from sin," no matter how many gods they worship, or what vile rites they practice, human sacrifices included. There is but one person or being in the universe who, in terms, is excluded from the "religion of Masonry," which all Masonic authorities declare to be "pure theism" or deism, and that one person is our Lord Jesus Christ. True, if the Christian Mason hides his Saviour by his silence, the lodge does not molest him. But deism excludes the worship of Christ, and Masonry is organized deism. Thus the secret lodge system provides neither pardon for sin, peace on earth or good will to men; and,by dropping the Mediator, takes away the only plank by which men may reach and enter the life boat of the universe.

This horrible system now spreads its shroud over the earth. The Reformation drove nearly all secret lodges from Germany and Scandinavia, and Europe and America were comparatively free from them. But a mighty reaction has taken place, and the sun and the air seem darkened with their smoke. The Masons own the huge temples, and detail from their lodges committees of their own members to join, strengthen and guide their numerous progeny,whose name is legion. Politics,business,reforms and religion,—they light like the vampires of the West Indies on all human interests,temporal and eternal,and suck their life-blood, as the vampires are fabled to suck the blood of people in their sleep, while they softly fan them with their wings. There are colored churches in Chicago which have three of these secret societies in each, one for little children, another for youth, and a third for adults, all paying monthly dues, and all pledged to secrecy,—parents from children, children from parents,and Christians from each other. There are eighty-eight such lodges in Chicago, eighty-four in Louisville, one hundred in Mobile, a like number in New Orleans, and near a hundred in Washington City. They out-number our churches everywhere, depraving them by their false worships; and by their secret oaths and obligations they are sinking our court-houses into popular contempt. They are thus turning the American people into secrecy-mongers, conjurers, sorcerers, soothsayers and sleight-of-hand men,—all under the reign of "the rulers of the darkness of this world"

These lodges, it scarcely need be said, are not of God's planting, and He whose word is firmer than the heavens and the earth hath said, they "shall be rooted up." There is no cause to fear their multitude. When Judea was overrun with lodge altars, and God had there but one single altar, and that broken down, Elijah offered one brief prayer and "the fire of the Lord fell," and the heart of that wayward nation was "turned back again." And the time would fail to speak of the sudden national reforms under the good kings Hezekiah, Josiah, Asa, and Jehoshaphat; and of similar reformations in Scotland,England,Germany and in the United States, where 45,000 Masons left their lodges at one time in the short space of four or five years. And there is nothing in the millennial purposes of God to prevent his granting,now as well as then,national deliverances to faith. The Psalmist in times of darkness and danger was wont to "consider God's wonders of old." But we have modern wonders to consider. It is only seventy-three years since, four miles below this city, nine thousand of the flower of British troops, the conquerors of Europe, fled before half their number of raw American militia, hastily gathered from the States along the Gulf, and imperfectly drilled and armed; leaving two thousand six hundred dead on the field to the American's thirteen. The race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, but God is the judge, and if we purge out from our churches this old leaven of idolatry and hypocrisy "One shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight," not indeed with weapons of iron and steel, but "with the mild arms of truth and love" "made mighty by the living God."

At the fall of slavery our whole continent felt the jar from Greenland to Cape Horn, and every good cause lifted up its head. The fall of the saloon must soon follow, and when the sale of liquor ceases, nine hundred millions of dollars a year, with hosts of recaptured human energies, saved from drunkenness and crime, will at once be available for reform. Then look where we now stand. Our mighty continent, one-quarter of the land on our globe, contains only one in fourteen of its population, and millions are coming to us to "feel after Christ if haply they may find him." Let us beseech God that the secret lodges, into which Christ never entered, may not defeat the object of these millions coming to us. Nor should we fail to notice that though the colored people, whose guests we are to-night, and of whose virtues we have spoken, have been ensnared into their worships by those devils who inhabited and run the slave-system; yet they are now wheeling off from the lodges by platoons and battalions; and when our national illiteracy, both white and colored, is cured by popular education, and the children shall read and learn that our Freemasonry, the type, model, mother of all our secret abominations, was manufactured by Jesuits in Paris, and by Jews in Charleston, South Carolina; and when once our colored people have learned all that their race have suffered from those secret orders, they will shrink from the grip of the lodge, as from the bite of a snake, and we shall all unite in the hallelujah chorus of the Battle Hymn of the Republic:

"Let the hero born of woman crush the serpent with his heel, Since God is marching on."

THE REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS.

The Seventeenth National Convention of the National Christian Association met as provided by the Board of Directors Feb. 17th, 1888, at 7:30 o'clock P. M., in the Central Congregational church, New Orleans. In the absence of Pres. J. H. McCullough of Knoxville, Tenn., the meeting was called to order by General Secretary Stoddard, and Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, Vice-president for Kansas, was called to the chair, and Rev. A. W. Parry of Evansville, Wisconsin, was elected secretary. A passage of Scripture was read and the congregation united in singing, "All hail the power of Jesus's name." Pres. J. Blanchard then offered prayer, which he prefixed by a few remarks upon the issue to be discussed in the convention, namely, the worship of God through Christ, as Mediator, by the agency of the Holy Spirit; or the worship of Satan through human inventions.

Rev. G. W. Bothwell, pastor of the church, gave an address of welcome in which he spoke of the action of the officials of the church as having voted the use of their audience room to the convention, although themselves, some of them, were members of secret orders. He also spoke of several questions which he deemed important, among them that of secret societies. He welcomed the brethren in behalf of the church and asked from the audience a fair and patient hearing.

President Milligan responded on behalf of the convention, recognizing the courtesy of the church, and setting forth the object of the meeting. The number and influence of the secret orders is a menace to our civil and religious institutions,and to combat them the people need to cultivate virtue, morality and truth as the basis of reform, and the recognition of Jesus Christ and his law as the only ground of hope for peace on earth and justice among men. He invited members of secret orders to participate in the discussions. Rev. J. P. Stoddard,General Agent, gave a brief statement of the work of the National Christian Association, and spoke particularly of its publications. Committees on Enrollment, resolutions, devotional meetings, finance, nominations,and relation of the church to the lodge.

SATURDAY.

At 9 A. M. devotional exercises of half an hour were led by Secretary Stoddard. The first business of the convention was an address by Elder R. N. Countee of the Tabernacle church, Memphis, on "Why I Joined, and Why I Left the Lodge." He spoke for two hours in a most interesting and convincing manner. The speaker has promised at the earnest request of the convention to furnish this address for publication.

In the afternoon after opening execises, George W. Clark of Detroit, who reached the convention about 10 A. M., sang one of his soul-stirring solos. Pres. L. N. Stratton of Wheaton, Ill., made some remarks on the investigation of the Morgan abduction by the civil authorities of New York, and G. W. Clark confirmed the statement from his personal observation.

Elder J. F. Browne, principal of Howe Institute, New Iberia, La., then addressed the convention on the "Origin and Symbolism of Freemasonry," using a series of charts to illustrate his argument, and making much use of Masonic authorities, by which he made a complete demonstration of the pagan origin of the so-called mysteries of Masonry, which have furnished a model for all other modern lodges.

Rev. H. H. Hinman, N. C. A. agent for the South, then made an address on the "Similarity and Relation of the Secret Orders to each other." They were similar: 1st. In that all were selfish in their professed benevolence.

2. They all require obedience to unknown obligations of secrecy as a condition of membership.
3. They all profess to conceal valuable truths.
4. They all lead to and practice falsehood.
5. In denying alike the rights of family, church and State.
6. They deny the right of private judgment.
7. They make their covenant paramount and irrevocable.

At the close of this address, Mr. C. F. Ladd, "Grand Master" of the colored Masons of Louisiana, arose and said that the argument was all upon one side of the question, and in fairness the other should heard. He was reminded that the hand-bills requested members of lodges to attend and give an expression of their opinions, but if he wished a prolonged debate a time would be set for it. It was then voted to invite any responsible Christian person to discuss the anti-Christian character of Freemasonry on Tuesday. J. P. Stoddard, J. F. Browne and G. W. Bothwell were appointed a committee to arrange with Mr. Ladd for the details of the debate. They reported the following agreement:

NEW ORLEANS, La., Feb. 18, 1888.

It is hereby agreed between "Grand Master" C. F. Ladd, and J. P. Stoddard, J. Franklin Browne and Pres. G. W. Bothwell, representing the 17th Annual Convention of the National Christian Association, that said C. F. Ladd, or his representatives, shall discuss with persons selected by said committee, at 10 A. M. on the 21st inst., the following proposition, said C. F. Ladd, or his representatives, taking the affirmative; the discussion to be governed by rules to be adopted by said committee and an equal committee to be chosen by said C. F. Ladd.

Proposition: Affirmed, That Freemasonry is not an anti-Christian institution.

J. FRANKLIN BROWNE, J. P. STODDARD, G. W. BOTHWELL, } Committee for the N. C. A.

JOSEPH DUPREY, WM B. GOULD, C. W. DALE, } Committee for Masonic lodge.

The evening session was opened with prayer and singing by George W. Clark. The first address of the evening was by President L. N. Stratton of Wheaton Theological Seminary on the "Necessity of Christian Educators Instructing the Young as to the Nature and Workings of the Secret Orders." The president of the convention spoke instead of Rev. Dr. Johnson of College Springs, Iowa, who was detained by sickness, on the "Real Issue between the Church and the Lodge." His argument was based on the distinctions between the two systems: (1) in the objects of their worship; (2) in their acceptance of the mediation and administration of Jesus Christ; (3) in the rule and authority of government recognized by them, the church taking the Word of God which the lodge does not.

SABBATH SERVICES.

On the Sabbath, according to an arrangement by the committee on devotional services the following appointments were filled as follows:

R. N. Countee at Straight University and Common St. Baptist church. J. P. Stoddard at Austerlitz St. Baptist church. H. H. Hinman, First African Baptist church. A. W. Parry at Mallalieu M. E. Chapel and Villery St. Congregational church. J. F. Browne, Mallalieu Chapel and Austerlitz St. Baptist church. G. W. Clark, LeHarpe St. church and Central Congregational church. A. F. Dempsey, Valance St. church and Thompson Chapel. L. G. Jordan, Felicity St. church and St. Mark's church. A. J. Chittenden, St. Charles Ave. M. E. church. J. S. T. Milligan, Union M. E. Chapel. L. N. Stratton, Spain St. Congregational church.

In the afternoon Pres. J. Blanchard conducted a Bible reading in the Central Church on the subject of "True and False Worship."

MONDAY.

President Milligan read, for an opening Scripture, Romans 13th, making appropriate comments. Rev. H. H. Hinman offered prayer. The convention voted to send a dispatch to the Cynosure office containing a few appropriate passages of Scripture to indicate the progress and success of the meeting.

Brethren Parry, Jordan, Dempsey and Clark reported that they were well received the day before in the several churches in which they preached, and in every case where the object of the convention was mentioned it was heartily endorsed. Elders Evans of Morgan City, L. M. Lee of Berwick City, Daniel Clay of Terre Bonne, L. W. Oldfield, C. F. Marshall, presiding elder, and others, spoke of the good they had personally received from the convention, and pledged their hearty support to the cause which it represented. All these brethren but Elder Clay had been or were at the time members of some secret order.

Rev. J. S. T. Milligan then took up the topic which would have been discussed by Rev. G. M. Elliott of Selma had not sickness prevented his attendance. "The Recognition of God in Civil Government and the Secret Empire" was a favorite topic with this eloquent speaker. At the conclusion of this address Rev. W. P. McLaughlin of the Ames M. E. church, St. Charles Avenue, B. Boezinger, First German M. E. church, and P. T. Robidoux, French M. E. church, (all white) each encouraged the convention by a very hearty endorsement of its work.

In the afternoon Rev. A. J. Chittenden of the College Church, Wheaton, spoke on "Secrecy as a Hindrance to Securing Prohibition, Practical Benevolence, and Labor Reform. He showed that the poor of the churches would have been comparatively free from the seductions of the lodges had there been less money wasted in sect divisions and more care shown for the temporal wants of her members with the money thus saved. In regard to the secret combinations of laborers, he acknowledged likewise a failure on the part of governments to restrain the powers that oppress the poor, and that the mistaken methods adopted for their relief from competition in wages are faults for which the powers that be are most to be blamed; that if the iniquitous combinations of the rich had been forbidden by law, the combinations of the poor would have had no existence. But as agencies for relieving either themselves or the public they were condemned for the following reasons:

1. They could never lead the great, thoughtful public, whose alliance is absolutely necessary to success, because the public will always regard such methods as dangerous, and the state of society engendered by them as more to be feared than the evils to be removed by them.

2. They have prejudiced the public mind against a good cause by injuring the public interests in strikes and conflicts, before the people had been favored with a quiet and healthy discussion of needed reforms. They have also been the indirect cause of the useless loss of life and the destruction of vast amounts of property.

3. They would not, if successful, leave us a democratic state of society, but rather a rule over the majority by the invisible caucus machinery of the lodge.

4. The moral and religious character of all such promiscuous association of men in secret is certain to produce a degenerate and selfish clanism, and the subjugation of individual responsibility to the authority of the superior officer in the lodge attacks all republican institutions at their very foundation.

5. The obligation to call all sorts of men "brothers" is the surrender of the sacred import of that word in Christian usage, and therefore unlawful to the followers of Christ.

Miss J. B. Moore of Point Coupe, La., and Miss Ida Gross, New Orleans, each read papers personally endorsing the work of the convention and showing from the various standpoints of pecuniary interest, social demand and religious obligation that Christian women should not belong to secret societies. These papers were received with enthusiasm and by vote copies were requested for publication in the Cynosure, the Living Way, the Southwestern Advocate and the Baptist N. O. Advocate.

The committee on resolutions then reported. To their first report additions were requested on Social Purity, the Sabbath and Tobacco. The full report as adopted is as follows:

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, It is abundantly evident that the secret lodge system in its practical effects absorbs the means and impairs the influence of the church and lowers the character of its members, thereby sapping the foundation of civil society; and,

Whereas, It is always liable to be, and often is, used for the perversion of justice, therefore,

Resolved, That we view with sorrow and alarm the prevalence of secret societies, and deem it the duty of all people, both as Christians and citizens, to have no fellowship with these "unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

2. That secret societies have no warrant in human necessity, in the Word of God, in the examples of the Divine Master, of any of the holy men of ancient times, and that the pretension that Freemasonry or any of the secret societies are sanctioned by the Bible is an arrogant falsehood, invented to entrap the ignorant and deceive the unwary.

3. That we regard Freemasonry as the fruitful mother of all the subsequent secret orders. Its ceremonies are both silly and wicked; its oaths immoral and profane; its religion unchristian and soul-destroying; and that it is in a large degree responsible for all the outrages of the other secret orders.

4. That the welfare of laboring men can be best promoted by making their own and their employers' interests identical; that we deplore all secret combinations as promoting antagonism, violence and crime, and we hold that the better administration of government, in which all have a voice, including arbitration and co-operation, are the true remedies for our labor troubles.

5. That the traffic in intoxicating drinks is an enormous evil and the fruitful source of wretchedness and crime; that the license system has, after centuries of trial, failed as a remedy, and tends rather to protect and perpetuate it, and that while we do not undervalue moral suasion, we demand the prohibition of the importation, exportation, the manufacture and sale of all that can intoxicate, and will give effect to our demands by our prayers, our labors and our votes.

6. Whereas, The lottery system has, with great unanimity, been regarded as immoral and destructive to the public good; and,

Whereas, Nearly all the States have prohibited it by law, and it is now proposed to prohibit the circulation of lottery advertisements in the mails; and,

Whereas, The Louisiania State Lottery works great injury not only to her own citizens, but is a fruitful source of dissipation and crime in all the other States; therefore,

Resolved, That we respectfully ask the Legislature of this State to repeal the charter of the State Lottery, and prohibit its doings by law.

7. Resolved, That we greatly deplore the complicity of ministers of religion with the foregoing evils; that the signs of the times, we believe, indicate an important crisis in the affairs of this nation and of the world; and that there must be greater faithfulness if we would be true watchmen on the walls of Zion.

Resolved, That this Convention regards the common use and traffic in tobacco as a twin vice with the liquor crime, and as not only a useless and wicked waste of time and money, a filthy and loathsome habit, unbecoming the dignity and decency of rational and intelligent beings, but as positively injurious to the physical, moral and spiritual health and welfare of individuals and society, and we kindly urge upon all men to abstain from its use, and do all in their power to do away with this pernicious vice, and save our youth and our country from its demoralizing and degrading effects.

Resolved, That the exceeding prevalence of the sin of licentiousness, and the deplorable fact that in some of our cities houses of prostitution are licensed and protected by law, while in others they are allowed to practice, with brazen effrontery, such deplorable deeds of wickedness, regardless of all laws whether Divine or human, calls for a most earnest protest by all Christians and good citizens, and demands our most fervent prayers and efforts to save our land from this terrible evil and its effect on posterity.

Resolved, That we hereby endorse the work of social purity undertaken by the W. C. T. U. and the "White Cross" movement, and all similar efforts by Christian workers; and we pledge our prayers and our best efforts for their success.

Resolved, That the prevailing desecration of the Sabbath by the nominal Christian, by societies, corporations and the general government, is assailing the foundations of morality and religion, endangering every right of the laboring man, neutralizing the efforts of the Christian church, and threatening the ruin of society by defying the laws of nature and the wrath of an offended God.

Elder A. L. Jackson rose to present the following item of great interest, a minute adopted at the regular weekly meeting of the colored Baptist pastors, as a mark of sympathy and encouragement:

RESOLUTION OF THE WEEKLY CONFERENCE OF BAPTIST PASTORS.

New Orleans, Feb. 20, 1888.

Whereas, We are convinced of the anti-Christian tendencies of secret societies, especially those existing under the titles of Masonry and Odd fellowship; and,

Whereas, It is our bounden duty as Christian ministers to contend against whatever is unfriendly to the interest of the cause of Christ: therefore,

Be it resolved that we cheerfully and heartily endorse the anti-secret movement as conducted by the National Christian Association, and for their encouragement we pledge ourselves to be their co-workers in the future as we have been in the past. Yours, respectfully submitted,

A. S. Jackson,	John W. Gray, Jr.,
Moderator of Dist. Bapt. Ass'n.	Wm. Pendleton.
John Marks,	C. F. Fisher, B D.
Pres. Bapt. State Convention,	John Baptiste,

CORRESPONDENCE.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Sabetha, Kansas.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—It seems to me in looking over the whole national field, religiously and politically, that as a nation we have arrived at a crisis. A decision must be made between right and wrong, light and darkness. Old issues have had their day. The old "bloody shirt" wave has had its terrors. There never should have been a bloody shirt if we as a nation had obeyed God and undone the heavy burdens and let the oppressed go free. It is a shame to the nation that they have such recollections to flaunt in the face of any American political party. It has lost its power to elect Presidents any longer. Other issues are now pressing themselves to the front, and the nation must give heed to them or the curse of God will surely visit us. Such are the temperance question, the anti-secret question and the acknowledgment of the Lord Jesus Christ in the Constitution of the United States as being the Supreme Ruler of the nations.

God says, "Happy is that nation whose God is the Lord;" again he says, "the nation that will not serve him shall perish." Now we have come to a point where national life or national death is staring us in the face, and what do the two old political parties propose to do about it? They propose to bury all those reform questions out of sight. Can Christians vote for those parties and be guiltless? They must remember blood is shed every day in the year by the ungodly license laws, passed by these two old parties, and faithful men of God have written volumes and preached and lectured all over the land on this great subject of prohibition. Some of them have given their lives for the cause, and their blood is to-day crying from the ground for vengeance. Will a just God bear always after he has given us so much light? Nay, verily, his soul will be avenged on such a nation as this. Can we close our eyes as Christians to the wailing and woe of the helpless women and children, and to the blood that is being shed by drunken men almost daily, and give our vote to parties that have sold out to the devil to do his hellish work by licensing and trying to make it appear respectable? And we ask, as the Philistines asked Samson, wherein lieth their great strength. We answer, that secret orders are the chief agencies in perpetrating all this calamity and woe on the land. Most of the men engaged in the liquor traffic will be found members of secret orders under the penalty of their oaths. Dear Christian brethren of these United States, shall we tamely submit to all this iniquity that is coming in upon us like a flood? No, never; let us arise in the name and strength of Israel's God and raise up a standard against it and bring good men to the front, as Gen. Fisk and Hon. Samuel C. Pomeroy, who are free from all lodge oaths. Let them be our standard-bearers for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Is it not evident to the observation of the reflecting mind that God's displeasure is being manifested in this land for the last six or eight years in those dreadful cyclones that have swept over us, the awful earthquakes that have rocked the solid ground in so many places, the winter storm that lately swept over a vast portion of the country, bringing death and desolation to hundreds of men, women and children and thousands of beasts; the drouth, the cattle plague? men have carried much seed to the field and gathered but little into the garner. As a nation we have forgotten God and sowed to the wind and are reaping the whirlwind, and now it remains to be seen whether we will repent by obeying God in electing men fearing God and hating covetousness. Well did Solomon say, "When the wicked bear rule the people mourn." God ordained civil government and it is rightfully his, and we have been putting wicked secret lodge worshipers into office who have led the government away into iniquity. How is it that the professed Christian church does not come up to the help of the Lord in this battle against principalities and powers and against the rulers of the darkness of this world.

JOHN THOMPSON.

"THE WORD OF GOD IS NOT BOUND."

CELL 18, CHARLES ST. JAIL,
BOSTON, MASS., Feb. 4, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In thy sketch of Alexander Hamilton, last November, thou dost notice that he "was the leading mind in securing our Constitution and the union of the divided States into a nation." It was no accident that this child of a French Huguenot wielded a controlling hand in framing the Constitution of the United States, an instrument which has been shaking the idols of tyranny in the old world from their pedestals during the past hundred years faster than all the priests of Dagon could set them up again.

When the perfidious Anthony of Navarre openly defended the slaughter of sixty and wounding of two hundred defenceless worshiping Huguenots at Vassy by the bloody Duke of Guise, in utter defiance of the Edict of January, 1562, which guaranteed liberty of public worship to the Huguenots, Beza prophetically replied, "Remember, sire, that the church is an anvil on which many a hammer has been broken." In 1572 the deliberately planned massacre of the Huguenots on the night of St. Bartholomew occurred. Immediately afterwards, "Pope Gregory XIII. and his cardinals went in procession to the church of St. Mark, not to deprecate in sackcloth and ashes the divine vengeance on a guilty people, but 'to render solemn thanksgivings to God ....for the great mercy which he had vouchsafed to the See of Rome, and to the whole Christian world.' A picture of the massacre was added to the embellishments of the Vatican, and by the pontiff's order a golden medal was struck to commemorate to all ages the triumph of the church over her enemies." [Lectures on the History of France. Sir James Stephen. Vol. II., p. 47. London, Longman, Brown, Green, Longmans & Roberts, 1857.]

By such measures, culminating in the comprehensive legal (!) disfranchisement of a million Huguenots by Richelieu and the loss by exile and torture and death of two hundred and fifty thousand under the dragonnades of Louis XIV., French Roman Catholic despots taught the common people to hate ecclesiastical tyrauny, and the patient anvil became a terrible hammer. The Constitution of the United States is logically, chronologically, historically and genealogically God's answer in government to the misgovernment practiced by papal rulers during centuries. It is no accident that in the first Article of the United States Constitutional Bill of Rights it is declared: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." It is no accident that a Roman Catholic, rum-selling city council reveres a revolutionary, reactionary ordinance of their own creation above this fundamental precept of our general Government. The issue in debate over this Boston gag by-law is the largest that can be raised in this country, and if the mobocrats can establish their ordinance they will. And if they do, constitutional law, which is the foundation of all our laws and the bulwark of our liberties, is gone. Then the nation itself will cease to have a reason for existence and is practically at an end.

That conclusion I will do my little best to retard by God's grace. God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the Constitution of the United States of America. Hinc haec vincula. For this I am in bonds. Sincerely thy brother in Christ,

W. F. DAVIS.

PITH AND POINT.

THE VETERAN SUBSCRIBERS.

Within please find two dollars, which put to the Cynosure fund for colored ministers in the South. I have been a reader of the Cynosure ever since it first began; and expect to be as long as I live. I consider it one of the best and most essential Christian papers in the land. It breathes the spirit of true religion and piety. It is a faithful and true witness on all questions of moral reform. I admire its mild, and yet fearless spirit in rebuking all sin and wrong; and the open and faithful manner in which it pleads for the good of humanity and for truth, purity and righteousness.—I. L. BUCHWALTER.

ANOTHER.

I have been a reader of the Cynosure from its earliest existence; am now in my eightieth year and expect it to be a weekly visitor during my life. I count it a privilege to record my testimony here in its favor. It is competent, truthful, fearless and uncompromising with error; moral in its tone and Christian in its teachings.—JOHN CRABS.

We have taken the Cynosure from the first, and are "life members." We live in a lodge and whisky village, where nearly all are either indifferent or are lodge members. I wish some one able to command respect could visit this place and open up things that are supposed to be hidden, and bring the secret things of darkness to light and the Bible standard.—S. A. SMITH, Hutchinson, Minn.

MUCH RELIGION BUT NO CHRIST.

We know a preacher who not long ago attended a public installation of the A. O. U. W. (Ancient Order of United Workmen): an insurance order, it claims to be. "They tried," he said, "to make it very religious, and spoke with much reverence of the Bible which lay open in the center of the room. But I noticed that....none of the prayers hinted at a Mediator, much less did they mention the name of Christ. Going before the throne by themselves! The amount of ignorance is truly alarming. That lodge was a church to many in it; and counterfeit though it be, as good or better, in their estimation, than the church of Christ. If they wish insurance let them have it, but let them quit trying to counterfeit the church of the Lord Jesus Christ."—T. H.

THE LODGE HEATHENIZING.

The Presbyterian church here is at a low ebb. Thirty-two years ago, when we left here to go to Oregon, there was not a Freemason belonging to the church, but the old, stauuch members have all crossed over on the other side, and the people now are quite different. They use the lower room of the church house for a school room, and the upper room for a Masonic hall and to preach in. All three of the elders of the church are Masons. Oh, what a change! I have visited this church neighborhood pretty thoroughly for over two months, and have found but one family where I stayed all night that kept up family worship at night.—J. B. STOWELL, Cave Spring, Mo.

FROM THE NORTHEAST STATE.

A large lodge of grangers once here is now entirely gone and nothing heard of them. Odd-fellows have flourished for a season, but now are in low condition. Three men, to my knowledge, have given it up and speak against it. Two old Masons have died of late; one of them had considerable notice taken and was buried by the order, though he did not leave a good record; the other was not noticed as a Mason. But few as yet dare to take the Cynosure or to read it, or converse about the lodge. There has been much sly work going on in the lodge, selling liquor on the sly, and the law is not put in force, on account of the lodge. One man was got into the lodge and his wife did not know it for many months. The Masons knew it all over the country, and he was voted into office as a county commissioner, the Masons keeping the people in the dark concerning his Masonry. Most of our county officers and State officers are secret men, as far as I can discover. I have distributed tracts all over this part of the country, and I want some more; especially the new ones, and those that are straight to the point.—ISAAC JACKSON, Harrison, Maine.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON XI.—March 11.—Christ Entering Jerusalem.—Matt. 21: 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord.—Psa. 118: 26.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

[From Peloubet's Notes.]

"And a colt with her." This was probably, in their eyes, significant, as showing that he who used the colt did so in his own right, and not as filling a place which others had filled before him.—Plumptre. Animals not previously used for labor were accounted specially pure and fit for sacred services. Hence only oxen unused to the yoke were offered on the altar.—Kitto. Our Lord's birth, triumph, and burial were to be in this alike.—Alford.

"Ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them." The Lord, their master and teacher, and the Lord Jehovah, whose Son and prophet he was. The account leads to the inference that the owner of the ass was an adherent of Jesus, who had perhaps not yet declared himself. The number of such secret followers was probably very large.—Cam. Bible.

"And straightway he will send them." He will give permission to the disciples to take them. Jesus and his disciples had passed along this road so many times that doubtless the owners knew them well and could trust them.

"Which was spoken by (or through) the prophet." The name of the prophet is not mentioned, the quotation being in fact a combination of two prophecies (Isa. 62: 11; Zech. 9: 9), both announcing the coming of the Saviour to Jerusalem, and both fulfilled on this occasion.—Cook.

"Set him thereon." The outside of this triumph was very mean. He rode upon an ass's colt, which made no figure. This colt was borrowed. Christ went upon the water in a borrowed boat, ate the Passover in a borrowed chamber, was buried in a borrowed sepulcher, and here rode on a borrowed ass.—Matthew Henry. But he blessed and transfigured them all, returning them a hundredfold better than when he took them. This is the only known instance on which Jesus rode.

TEARS AMID THE REJOICING.—As they reach the summit of the Mount of Olives the glories of Jerusalem in all its splendor burst upon Jesus's view. Here, according to Luke (19: 41), though others shouted, his own soul was full of sorrow, and he wept over the city: (1) on account of their sins; (2) because of the sorrows and and desolation that were to come upon it. "He was crossing the ground on which, a generation later, the tenth Roman legion would be encamped, as part of the besieging force destined to lay all the splendor before him in ashes." Even in the midst of our rejoicing over the triumphs of Christianity, we should weep over those who refuse to come and be saved.

JESUS THE PRINCE OF PEACE.—The triumph on this day was the triumph of the Prince of Peace. 1. In its methods. The kingdom of Christ is one of moral influences. "Truth is his scepter; love, his force. He not only dispenses with, but disowns all force. Christ's kingdom has been extended to every land, and has only been hindered by the force sometimes used to extend or to secure it. Meet error with truth, injustice with honor, selfishness with love, and you will understand, by attaining, something of that meek majesty of Christ which has proved so omnipotent."—R. Glover. 2. In its results. Jesus has come to bring peace into all the world by righteousness. His reign will bring peace into the soul, now a troubled seat of war, into the community so often arrayed in contending factions; between nations, and everywhere; peace which passes understanding, and which flows like a river.

The force Jesus here used was his moral power. "Jerome regards this as the most wonderful of the miracles, and supposes that a flame and starry ray darted from the eyes of the Saviour, and that the majesty of the Godhead was radiant in his countenance." But the power was that of fearless faith, and a righteous cause, acting upon souls conscious of their guilt. "It is conscience that makes cowards of us all."

This expulsion of evil from the temple was a type of God's moral cleansings: (1) Of the soul, which was made to be a temple of God, a house of prayer; (2) of the church, where everything which mars its purpose as the house of God for all people, all selfish ends, all worldly seeking, must be cast out. Before every Pentecostal revival, and multitudes of conversions, there is a cleansing of God's temple, "which temple ye are;" (3) of the redeemed world, from which everything that is evil must be cast out (Rev 21: 27).

It is right and natural that a house of prayer should be a house of healing and of mercy. It shows God's feelings toward men; it attracts men to God.

As soon as the evils are cast out of God's temple, a river of mercy flows in. Then the changed soul and the purified church abound in deeds of mercy, of healing, and of salvation.

These deeds of mercy are a specimen of what Christ is ever doing through his church. Wherever a pure church is, there is kindness to the poor, healing to the sick, help for the unfortunate.

Whenever God cleanses the temple of a human soul, he also heals that soul of its various evils.

"And the children crying in the temple, and saying, Hosanna to the Son of David." Many of those who, on the day before, had greeted the Saviour with shouts of Hosanna, would be in the temple court; and they would cheer enthusiastically with the same "Hosanna," as they saw him doing the Messiah's work, in the temple, of cleansing and healing. The shouts would echo and re-echo as the crowds of desecrators fled before one man, as one after another blind men went to him groping and came away seeing, and the lame who went limping came away running and leaping. The enthusiam was at its highest. Even the children felt the wondrous power; and having been taught at an early age to join in temple services, they now took up the strain, and shouted and sang, "Hosanna to the Son of David."

The church should take the best care that the children should join in the services of praise. They should arrange their services and build their edifices so that the children can thus have part. The older people will find that thus praise is perfected. The Gospel preached in so direct and simple a manner, the doctrines stated in so clear and simple a form that children can understand them, the services so devotional and helpful that children can be uplifted by them, will most help the largest number of people.

—Elder Jonathan Woodman died in North Tewksbury, Mass., Jan. 18, aged ninety. He had preached the Gospel over seventy years. He was an opposer of secret societies but the wickedness of his associates silenced his testimony.

OBITUARY.

WESLEY RICHEY died at his home in Oakland City, Indiana, on the 5th of October last, in his 75th year. His last illness was of but a little more than two weeks, and up to that he had been in usual good health. As a member of the Congregational church he was faithful in his duties as a Christian, and believed that his testimony should be given against every iniquity that exalts itself against Christ and his church. He was always earnestly upholding Christian reforms, and strenuously opposed Freemasonry. To this cause he gave much thought and also abundantly of his means. He will be well remembered by Secretary Stoddard, S.L. Cook, J. T.Kiggings, and by many other readers of the Cynosure. In his home he was a loving husband and kind father. A wife and daughter remain among the mourning friends whose sorrow was heavy to be borne, but the love of a pitying Saviour was like a healing balm to the wounded heart, and they are able to feel a peaceful resignation to the Lord's will.

SAMUEL MORSE died at the age of 73, at his home in Southbridge, near Worcester, Mass, Nov. 17, 1887.

He will long be remembered as a most public-spirited citizen, having warmly at heart the best welfare of the people, and carrying out his convictions in every public act. He saw the danger to the church and the nation in the saloon and the lodge and was never afraid that his voice should be heard against these evils. He always favored prohibition, and would distribute ballots, if there were any, while the polls were open. If none were in town he would write one out to suit himself, and then cast it—and it counted, too. He also was opposed to all secret societies, especially Freemasonry, and would often debate on the various influences brought to bear upon a community by these societies. He ably co-operated with Pres. C. A. Blanchard when he labored in Massachusetts in 1871, and later with other workers. He had been confined to his home for over a year before death came to release him from the pains of disease and the cares of this life, for rest in Christ. He will long be remembered by his fellow townsfolk for his manly, upright course and outspoken convictions.

CONSUMPTION CURABLE.

It cannot be too often impressed on every one that the much dreaded consumption (which is only lung scrofula) is curable, if attended to at once, and that the primary symptoms, so often mistaken as signs of diseased lungs, are only symptoms of an unhealthy liver. To this organ the system is indebted for pure blood, and to pure blood the lungs are indebted no less than to pure air for healthy action. If the former is polluted, we have the hacking cough, the hectic flush, night-sweats, and a whole train of symptoms resembling consumption. Rouse the liver to healthy action by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, take healthy exercise, live in the open air, and all symptoms of consumption will disappear. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, shortness of breath, chronic nasal catarrh, bronchitis, asthma, severe coughs, and kindred affections, it is a most wonderful remedy.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. THOMAS H. STOCKTON, D.D.:—Religion is as open as the sky and bright as the sun. As a man, an American, and a Christian, I love true manhood, true Americanism and true Christianity too well to approve of secret institutions of any kind.

L. L. HAMLINE, Bishop M. E. church, in his diary, 1848: "North Ohio Conference has progressed very rapidly till this time, but Masonry and Odd fellowship have arrested us." At another time: "I have enjoyed and suffered much during its session. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil."—Life, pp. 323, 4.

A. M MILLIGAN, D.D.:—Thus I have shown that Masonic oaths and obligations are not obligatory; that God has no part in them; that they are a profanation of his ordinance of the oath, and a usurpation of the prerogative of government under the wrath of an insulted God and the ban of outraged society: a great sin to make them but no sin to break them.

REV. J. P. LYTLE, D D.:—We could fill a volume with extracts of the same tenor, showing, as these have shown, that Freemasonry is a distinct and positive religion with a promise of salvation; yet rejecting and denying the Lord Jesus; a religion which claims to have borrowed its principles and rites from those heathen institutions so abhorrent to God and corrupting to men.

REV. JOSHUA BRADLEY, a renouncing Mason:—A lying spirit is abroad, and speaks through all Masonic presses, and this spirit influences all who hate the truth, and will make them wax worse and worse, till sudden destruction shall overwhelm those workers of iniquity, to the astonishment of every beholder. Then Masonry will rise no more to trouble Zion, and spread delusion and death amid civilized nations.

C. B. WARD, missionary in India:—When men get saved out here they get out of the lodge of necessity. We are personally acquainted with a barrister, a doctor, a locomotive fireman, a station-master on a railway, a principal of a high school, a commissary officer, a military officer, and others who when saved at once quit the lodge for Christ's sake without any one saying much to them. The evil of the institution is too apparent to need pointing out in India.

JOSEPH S. CHRISTMAS, Pastor Bowery Presbyterian church, New York, 1830:—If these remarks should meet the eye of any follower of the Redeemer who still worships at the altar of Masonry, I beg him once more to consider whether, imposed on by the mock solemnities of the lodge and the pompous pretensions of the craft, he is not really attempting to effect a concord between Christ and Belial; and whether he does not owe it to the souls of Masons, to the honor of the church of Christ, and to the good of mankind, to come out and be separate.

DRS LEONARD WOODS, EBENEZER PORTER AND THOMAS H. SKINNER, Professors at Andover to the Massachusetts Legislature:—Praying for a full investigation into the nature, language, ceremonies, and form of rehearsing extra-judicial oaths in Masonic bodies; and if found to be such as the Memorialists describe them, that a law may be passed prohibiting the future administration of Masonic, and such other extra judicial oaths, as tend to weaken the sanctions of civil oaths in courts of justice; and pray also for the repeal of the charter granted by this Commonwealth to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts

REV. MOSES THATCHER:—Our Saviour declared to the Jewish high priest, "I spake openly to the world; and in secret have I said nothing." What now would be thought of the church if she should "tyle" her doors, impose obligations in secret, and place a perpetual seal upon the lips of her members? Would it any longer be believed that her sole object is to promote the religion of the Gospel? Now if the church, which is the purest body on earth, could not and would not be trusted as a secret society, who can blame conscientious and judicious men for drawing the conclusion that any secret society, of whatever description, is altogether unnecessary and cannot exist without becoming an object of suspicion, if not an engine of wickedness.

CHARLES C. FOOTE:—What would the introduction of Christ into Mohammedanism be, but its annihilation? And thus would it be with Masonry.

PASTOR FISCH, of Paris, 1873:—The church in America must stand as one man against Masonry or be destroyed.

REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D., a renouncing Mason:—Its (Freemasonry's) religion is anti-Christian ... Its prayers are blasphemous. ... Its use of the Bible is sacrilegious. ... The whole is a compound of Judaism and paganism.

MOSES STUART, Professor in Andover Theological Seminary, Mass, 1834:—For a long time I neither knew nor cared about the subject; but recent attention to it has filled me with astonishment; and as to somethings contained in it, with horror. The trifling with oaths and with the awful name of the ever blessed God, is a feature which I cannot contemplate but with the deepest distress.

JOHN WESLEY, June, 1773:—I went to Ballymena and read a strange tract that professes to discover "the inmost recesses of Freemasonry," said to be "translated from the French original lately published at Berlin." I incline to think it is a genuine account. Only if it be, I wonder the author is suffered to live. If it be, what an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry.—N. Y. Christian Advocate, February, 1884.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL:—I know no Temperance, Odd-fellow or Freemason fraternity that does not recognize a brotherhood with the world. "They are of the world, they speak of the world and the world heareth them." Christians, though in the world, are not of it. Any union, then, for moral purposes with the world that brings us to commune religiously with it, by the laws and usages of the institution itself, is opposed to the law and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

CHARLES G. FINNEY.—God demands and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and shoud take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion.

NATHANIEL COLVER, former pastor Tremont Temple, Boston:—I am free to say that it is my deliberate opinion that the vicious character of Masonry and its guilt-concealing and barbarous oaths are such, as not only to release all from their bonds, but also to lay upon them the solemn obligation to tear off its covering and expose its enormity. I regard it as Satan's masterpiece, a terrible snare to men. It sits at this moment as a nightmare on all the moral energies of our government, and utterly paralyzes the arm of justice.

DWIGHT L. MOODY:—Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up.

HENRY TATEM, an eminent Baptist pastor, Providence, R. I., 1832:—It was about fourteen years ago that I was first initiated into the lodge Within a few months after, I advanced to the Royal Arch degree, and sometime after I took the degrees of Knighthood, as they are called I well remember the horror of my feelings when the bandage was taken from my eyes and I found myself partly naked, with men standing around me pointing at me the implements of death and a human skull was handed me to drink from, and I was required to repeat words, awful in themselves, and which I cannot distinctly recollect, but which I believe to have been the same I find given in the explanation of that ceremony in Bernard's Light on Masonry. From that time I absented myself from the lodge and chapter. My mind was afterwards led by degrees to an examination into Masonry, which I am now satisfied is repugnant to the spirit of the religion of Christ.

Editorial Correspondence.

Dear Cynosure:—Yesterday closed our convention with a debate proposed by Masons, who saw clearly that the lodge was rapidly losing ground. We were disappointed by the sickness and absence of some prominent men; but God sent others in their places. Rev. Dr. Milligan, of Kansas, presided—spoke with great power and acceptance, both in convention and in the debate in which Dr. Stratton ably presided. Mr. Hinman, our "beloved physician," prescribed for us when ill, and spoke and drew up our resolutions. Prof. J. F. Browne, of Howe Institute, New Iberia, La., altogether outdid himself in the debate. He was clear, calm, forcible and carried conviction to all.

Rev. R. N. Countee, of Memphis, gave a speech worth coming to New Orleans to hear. As he had been through the Masonic mills and knew their work by experience, his denunciations were terrible, and the Masons hated him, scoffed at him, and uttered dark threats about having his "record here in New Orleans," etc., etc., as if they contemplated his assassination or something equally terrible. This stirred up the lodge claquers on the skirts of the crowd; and it looked for a few minutes as though there would be a row, and this by colored men against those whose prayers and toils had helped awaken this guilty nation, and had snatched these men from the slave-pen and auction-block. But their leading speaker, Dr. Dale, quieted the noisy rioters and order was restored. Rev. Mr. Countee appeared admirably; and those in the North who have helped him have reason to be proud of him. But he still needs our prayers that God will give him gentleness as well as firmness, and shield him from the lodge whose god is a "liar and murderer from the beginning," whose very prayers are blasphemy, and whose religion, like that of their "twin relic of barbarism," Mormonism, is assassination.

Rev. Mr. Chittenden spoke ably and well; Rev. Mr. Dempsey aided materially in the testimonies of the convention; Rev. Mr. Parry, as scribe, held the pen of a ready writer; Pres. L. N. Stratton came from his Wheaton theological class to address us earnestly on the vast importance of informing the minds of our youth in the principles of Christian reform

But the leading charm of the convention was the large number of colored pastors, who had all been in lodges, and who listened to the facts and principles brought out, as to a new revelation from God. The Louisiana Baptists, whose "name," said their leader, Dr. Jackson, "is legion," adopted and read to us a full and cordial endorsement of the work of the National Christian Association. The paper will be found in the Cynosure. Their zeal was manifested by a little incident. Three ministers who were out when the conference meeting at Leland University, adopted the paper, drew up, signed and presented to us their request to have their names added to that important paper. The Baptist people, sixty years ago, were the leaders in the anti-secret reform. But that reform took the shape of a political party, and the leaders avoided whatever would endanger success in an election. But our indictment is now drawn in the name of Christ and Christianity, and it is not going back.

At the close of the debate, as I left the church after a short farewell speech, the Grand Master of colored Masons in Louisiana, who acted for the lodge, followed me to the sidewalk to bid us a friendly adieu, and said he was thankful to have met men who so ably explained and defended their cause. The Masons who spoke against me in the debate are the leading colored Republicans in New Orleans. They think Blaine is insincere in withdrawing his name, and only wants to be nominated by acclamation by the convention next June; and they think that Grover Cleveland's stand for a reduced tariff will elect Blaine. The folly of this hope is amazing. They all say the vote for St. John in 1884 would have elelected Blaine, but being cast for St. John defeated him. They all see and say that the Prohibition vote has steadily increased during the whole four years, and they know, too, that Gen. Clinton B. Fiske will draw all the votes St. John got, and all the great rapid and constant increase since. This, by their own showing, breaks the back of the Republican party square in two, leaving nothing for it but a speedy death. It never can or will elect another candidate. A leading Republican here who fought through the war, said last night that the next successful party will be made of the fragments of the two old parties.

I suggested a side mass meeting of the American party, but the debate and the Republicans put it off. But I moved to amend an anti-liquor resolution, by adding, "and we, the convention, will endeavor to give effect to our principles, by our prayers, our labors, and our votes."

This stirred the water from the bottom, but no one plead for the Republican party. The able and influential Dr. Jackson said he "should vote a mixed Republican ticket; that is, he would scratch liquorites and Masons as not good Republicans. So, at least, we understood him, while Countee, of Tennessee, and Jordan, of Texas, said they should vote Prohibition, simple and pure.

I never saw so clearly the wisdom of keeping up a distinct "American Party." Our resolutions condemn not only the lodge and liquor, but Sabbath breaking, lotetries, and houses of ill-fame, which rumor says New Orleans is deeply cursed with. Now the Prohibition party already begins to toady for the vote of secretists, and as they look more and more for success at the polls, they will more and more shun to oppose those other evils which must give way before we reach that "Grand conception of our American Fathers, a Christian Commonwealth."

If the Prohibition convention next June does not nominate a clean ticket, we must put an American ticket in the field and vote it. My amendment passed unanimously. J. B.

John Brown, Jr, the eldest son of the hero of Harper's Ferry, is on his way to Southern California, to visit his brothers Jason and Owen, and sister Mrs. Thompson, in their eyrie in the Sierra Madre mountains north of Pasadena. Mr. Brown has long lived at Put-in-Bay, Ohio. He tarried two weeks in Chicago, and made two public addresses on "Rum, Tobacco and Labor." Last Sabbath he spent at Naperville, Ill., visiting his old school-teacher Dr. A. A. Smith, late president of Northwestern College, Naperville. In the evening Mr. Brown addressed a large congregation of students and citizens. While in the city the Cynosure editor called on him at his hotel and he also visited our office, the interchange of views and experiences being of great interest and, we hope, not without mutual profit. Mr. Brown's recollection of his father's renunciation of Freemasonry is very clear. The system had become most corrupt, and there is no doubt about the murder of Morgan by the order. All the children sympathized with the father's sentiment; but an incident in Kansas in 1857, when he was expecting death at the hands of the Missouri lodges of Border Ruffians, called the attention of Mr. Brown in a peculiar way to Freemasonry, and not long afterward, when in Ohio, he was persuaded to join that order and he now wears its badge, as well as of the G. A. R. But he has never studied the principles of secretism with discrimination, and when an explanation was made of these principles from the Christian standpoint, he approved them, and shaking hands heartily with us in the office, said as he departed, "I believe I am with you."

An Era of Strikes.—The cyclone at Mount Vernon, Ill., with its thirty-seven victims, opens the year 1888 with foreboding. Of so early and so fatal a storm in the West there is probably no record. The great strike of the engineers and firemen on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad begun Monday morning is like the storm. It is the first great strike on that line; the first for years set on foot by the "Brotherhood of Engineers," assisted by the firemen; one of the most far-reaching in its results if it shall continue; and one of the most uncalled for so far as the public can judge from the statements of both parties. It is a question of how wages shall be paid, rather than of the amount. The men ask that all engineers and firemen of every grade be paid alike by the mile. The company wish to grade the pay to the experience of the men and the difficulty of the run, which varies in different parts of their lines. To the public, which is interested in the safety of travel, the rules of the road seem wisest. To jeopardize the business of a large section of country it is too narrow a question, and the moderation that has controlled the affairs of the engineers' order for eleven years should have led them to take less precipitous measures. The lodge question has not so much to do with the case. The company will use the quarrel between the Brotherhood and Knights of Labor to its advantage. The former has not helped the Knights in their strikes, and will not expect much assistance now.

—Every Cynosure reader will rejoice with us in that Miss Flagg is regaining strength. Of this her article on another page is a cheering token.

—Secretary Stoddard visited the conference of the African M. E. church in New Orleans last Friday and spoke on invitation, says the Times-Democrat.

—Revs. A. J. Chittenden and A. W. Parry returned from New Orleans last Friday morning, and Pres. L. N. Stratton was expecting to start north in the company of Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard on Tuesday.

—President C. A. Blanchard addressed a large union meeting in the Methodist Episcopal church, Wheaton, Sabbath morning in behalf of Wheaton College. Friends of the institution responded with a subscription of over $800.

—President and Mrs. Blanchard are stopping in New Orleans with relatives of Gov. McEnery, who are all opposed to secret societies. One of the ladies of the household goes in a few weeks to Japan as a missionary under appointment from the Presbyterian Board.

—Rev. H. J. Becker, formerly of California, is soon to begin a long tour through Europe, Egypt and the Holy Land, and the Conservator of Dayton has engaged him as correspondent. We congratulate the editors on this good fortune. These letters will be most entertaining and instructive, and Bro. Becker will have his eyes open to whatever facts will illustrate the lodge worships of America.

—With the aid of Bro. Parry, secretary of the National Convention, a report of the proceedings has been prepared for the present paper. There waits yet for next week the story of the discussion of Tuesday, which was an occasion of soul-stirring interest, and in the estimation of the New Orleans brethren killed the lodge among the colored people of that great city. Secretary Stoddard's letter, received as we were nearly ready for press, describes the scene, but has reluctantly been put over. In its results this last convention is declared to be the greatest ever held by the National Association.

—Rev. Alexander Thomson of Bartlett, Ill., was assisted on the Sabbath by Bro. W. I. Phillips, N. C. A. treasurer, who preached the morning discourse. Bro. Thomson's pastoral work seems to be eminently successful. The church is in a continual revival spirit, souls are coming to Christ continually. The young people's prayer meeting is attended by some forty persons which is probably a very large proportion of the population of the town of that age. The recent death of Mrs. Thomson is a great loss to people as well as pastor, as she entered actively and with sincere pleasure into these efforts for the church of Christ.

—Rev. Dr. J. E. Roy addressed the Prospect Park church and the College church, Wheaton, Sabbath morning and evening on the work of the American Missionary Association. The collections amounted to some $70 and committees were appointed to solicit still further. The evening address was remarkably interesting and instructive. Dr. Roy, with the aid of Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, exhibited large pictures telling the story of the work of the Association among Indians, Chinese and Freedmen. The position of the A. M. Association in warning the colored churches against the lodge was heartily approved by the congregation.

—The following testimony to the work of Dr. Munhall in Brooklyn Tabernacle was given by Dr. Talmage in the Christian Herald: "Dr. L. W. Munhall, the evangelist, and Professor and Mrs. Towner, the Gospel singers, have now concluded a series of six weeks' meetings in Brooklyn Tabernacle. Between two and three thousand people have professed conversion. Upwards of six hundred have already joined the church of which I am pastor. But the service was cosmopolitan, and many have gone to connect themselves with other churches in this city and other cities and other lands. The work has been characterized by quietude, solemnity, profound conviction for sin and positive decision for Christ, leaving no doubt as to the regenerated heart. Dr. Munhall has, with tremendous power, enthralled the attention of the people from first to last. His manner and words are beyond criticism, and acceptable to all. He is a magnetic speaker, and, in a good sense, dramatic, and always evangelical. When he opens his Gospel batteries, loaded with exegesis, argument, illustration and anecdote, the hearer must either surrender, or retreat into hopeless obduracy. Though we have had but three days of pleasant weather since the meetings began, the church has been thronged with great audiences, and at his Sabbath preaching multitudes have been unable to get inside the building."

In the evening Elder J. F. Browne gave a short Bible reading on John 2 and prayer was offered by Elder Daniel Clay, the congregation joining in singing the 23d Psalm. The address of the evening was by Pres. J. Blanchard, editor of the Christian Cynosure, which was voted to be printed, and appears on another page of this paper.

Brethren Chittenden and Hinman presented the following resolutions which were heartily voted:

Resolved, That we rejoice to learn that a goodly number of Christian churches are entirely free from the uncleanly vice of tobacco-using, and that we urge all other churches to emulate them in this duty of cleansing the temple of the Lord.

Resolved, That we commend the Christian Cynosure, the organ of the N.C.A., and urge on all the friends of the reform its continued and enlarged support.

The convention was also cheered by the endorsement of its work contained in the following request:

Believing that the Annual Meeting of the National Christian Association in our city has accomplished great good for the purity and power of Christianity, we cordially invite the Association to hold their annual session next year, if practicable, in this city.

FROM NEW ORLEANS DURING THE CONVENTION.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 20, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Though the attendance on our convention has not been large, it has been fair, and the interest from the first well sustained. Rev. J. S. T. Milligan of Kansas has ably presided, and his address Friday night on taking the chair was one of marked ability. So also was the statement of the history and objects of the Association.

The church where the convention is being held is central, large and pleasant. The pastor, Rev. Dr. Bothwell, has given us words of welcome and cheer, and has facilitated our work. The three addresses of Saturday that were of special interest were by Bro. R. N. Countee at 10:30 A. M., on "Why I Joined and Why I Left the Lodge;" by Bro. J. F. Browne at 2:30 P. M., on "The Origin and Symbolism of Masonry," and Rev. L. N. Stratton at 8 P. M., on "The Relation of Christian Instruction to the Secret Lodge System." All were able, but the interest especially centered in Bro. Countee's address, as it was largely the statement of personal experience. It was this and Bro. Browne's that specially stirred the wrath of the Masons and called on the Grand Master of the colored Grand Lodge of the State, who complained that the presentation was altogether one-sided and challenged discussion. At his request to-morrow (Tuesday) has been set apart for discussion, and Bros. Milligan, Countee and Browne have been chosen to discuss the question, "Is Freemasonry opposed to the Christian religion?" One of the effective speeches was by Rev. A. S. Jackson, pastor of the Common St. Baptist church. Bro. Jackson has been Deputy Grand Master and Chaplain in the lodge. He felt that he could not be a Christian minister and be a Mason. Elder Jordan, from Hearne, Texas, also gave excellent testimony, and so did many others. Pres. J. Blanchard gave a most excellent Bible reading on Sabbath at 2:30 P. M., which was listened to with great attention.

The committee on devotional exercises assigned each of the ministers from abroad to some city pulpit. My lot was cast with the "African Baptist church," the oldest and perhaps the largest colored church in the city. I met a large congregation and was impressed with the earnest spirit of devotion manifested by the people. My remarks were largely on the lodge question, and these met a hearty response. I saw, however, several prominent Masons in the congregation who evidently did not relish what was said. We trust this, the last day of our convention, will be one of interest. Yours in Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

REFORM NEWS.

THE MAINE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

According to previous notice, the Maine State Christian Association was organized in Sprague's Hall, Dexter, Me., Jan. 30, 1888, under the following constitution:

Whereas, Our Lord Jesus Christ commanded his disciples to preach the Gospel to every creature, and whereas this is not fully accomplished by the existing agencies:

Therefore, We, the undersigned, not being ashamed of our Lord or his Word, and desiring above all things the glory of God and the salvation of our fellowmen, do hereby associate ourselves for Christian work under the following:

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I. This association shall be called the Maine Christian Association, and shall be auxiliary to the National Christian Association.

ARTICLE II. The object of this association shall be to proclaim and publish pure Christianity, Bible holiness and sound morality.

ARTICLES III, IV AND V. Relates to officers, their duties and time of meeting.

ARTICLE VI. Any Christian in sympathy with the objects of this association may become a member by signing this constitution.

ARTICLE VII. Membership in any secret organization, being forbidden by Lev. 5: 4; 2 Cor. 6: 14, 15, 16; Eph. 5: 11, 12, and being antagonistic to the impartial benevolence taught in the New Testament, is incompatible with membership in the association.

ARTICLE VIII. Relates to amendments.

The foregoing constitution was adopted and the following officers chosen for the ensuing year:

President, Elder Isaac Jackson of Harrison.

Vice-presidents: Elder J. S. Rice of North Pownal, Elder Jeremiah Hill of Springvale.

Secretary, I. D. Haines of Dexter.

Treasurer, Henry W. Goddard, West Sidney.

Executive Committee: M. T. Jackson, I. D. Haines, H. W. Goddard, O. G. Cobb, J. Howard Brown.

The Executive Committee immediately engaged and commissioned Elder L. E. Pendleton of West Winterport as State Home Missionary and Evangelist, who will commence work at once.

Friends in Maine have for years felt the need of a State Association, but being widely separated have heretofore failed to organize. The scandalous display of sectarian wickedness and lodge depravity, working hand in hand in Dexter to crush vital piety out of the earth, aroused the Lord's true children to action. It was our privilege to be present and assist in christening this nineteenth auxiliary to our grand old National Christian Association.

Let united prayer be offered by the Lord's true children all over the land that the Maine Christian Association may be in the Lord's hands a powerful agency for moral reform and for arousing the professed church from worldliness, lethargy and formalism to be indeed the Bride of Christ, "found of him in peace, without spot and blameless." 2 Peter 3:14.

FROM THE NEW HAMPSHIRE AGENT.

By invitation I have spent the past month in Dexter, Corinna and West Sidney, Maine. I spent three weeks in Dexter, assisting Pastor I. D. Haines in evangelistic work. Elder L. E. Pendleton, recently appointed Home Missionary of Maine, aided us for about two weeks. I have never seen the power of the Holy Spirit so manifested in filling the hearts of believers with joy and peace, in smiting sectarian evil doers with misery, and in leading honest inquirers out of darkness into Christ's marvelous light. I have witnessed a more extensive work of grace, but never one so deep, thorough and blessed. Pastor Haines can say with Paul, "a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." There were half a dozen cases of divine healing during the meetings. More than half of those who have turned to the Lord are heads of families and in nearly every case at once commenced family prayer. On the last Lord's day we spent at Dexter, we administered the communion with unspeakable blessing to all. I held two meetings at Corinna and three at West Sidney. I also lectured to crowded and attentive audiences in Dexter and Sidney on the relation of the secret fraternities to the church. The Lord specially owned and blessed this truth. I conversed and prayed with about 120 families, introduced religious papers in over fifty families, distributed about 500 pages of tracts, and preached about forty-five times. I consider it one of the most blessed months of my life. I was much refreshed in spirit and kept in almost perfect health. I am much indebted to John Pennington and wife for supplying all my temporal wants in a truly Christian manner at Dexter. Joseph Smith and wife did the same at Corinna; H. W. Goddard and wife at West Sidney. The Lord has rewarded and will reward them, according to his riches in glory. Other friends showed kindly interest but lacked opportunity. The Lord's special mercy followed me in all my journey and kept my soul in wondrous peace and my body in robust health. Ps. 103: 1-3.

S. C. KIMBALL,

KANSAS READERS, TAKE NOTE.

To the friends and followers of Jesus as opposed to devil worship:—Whereas the National Christian Association met in New Orleans on the 17th day of February, 1888, we felt it our duty as well as our privilege to send as our chief representative our brother and president of the Kansas State Christian Association, Rev. J. S. T. Milligan. As it will cost about $25.00 to defray his expenses, we ask, in the name of the Kansas State Christian Association, a liberal donation from the friends in Kansas. Pastors, please present this claim to your congregations and take up collections for the same and remit to J. A. Torrence, Denison, Jackson Co., Kansas.

I will make acknowledgment of all donations with name of congregations and persons who contribute in the Cynosure. J. A. TORRENCE, Treas.

PENNSYLVANIA, ORGANIZE!

Rev. J. C. Young of Custer City, Pa., responds heartily to the call for the re-organization of the Pennsylvania work. He writes: "Bless the Lord, I am willing to do what I can. I have long felt that Illinois, Iowa, Ohio, etc., have been loudly calling to Pennsylvania, 'What meanest thou, O sleeper! Arise, call on thy God.' There are a few slumberers in this section who have once in awhile stretched and yawned but fallen back to sleep again, and while asleep the minor-order net has been drawn over some of them, and they are dreaming they are as much opposed to secret societies as anybody, and so talk in their sleep sometimes. God bless your efforts, Bro. Chalfant. Count me a little one.

J. C. YOUNG.

—Bro. T. K. Bufkin, our dear Quaker friend in Pasadena, Cal., has dropped the work of house building which was becoming too severe for his strength, and has opened a real estate office in the Post Office block of that city. None of our readers who visit that part of California should fail to call on him.

The Home.

THE LOVE OF GOD.

Like a cradle rocking, rocking,
Silent, peaceful, to and fro,
Like a mother's sweet looks dropping
On the little face below,
Hangs the green earth, swinging, turning,
Jarless, noiseless, safe and slow,
Falls the light of God's face bending
Down and watching us below.

And as feeble babes that suffer,
Toss and cry and will not rest,
Are the ones the tender mother
Holds the closest, loves the best;
So when we are weak and wretched,
By our sins weighed down, distressed,
Then it is that God's great patience
Holds us closest, loves us best.

O great heart of God! whose loving
Cannot hindered be or crossed,
Will not weary, will not even
In our death itself be lost—
Love divine! of such great loving,
Only mothers know the cost—
Cost of love, which all love passing,
Gave a Son to save the lost. —Saxe Holm.

THE PRAYER IN THE DEEP CANON.

Some time about the year 1867, three men, Baker, Strole and White, were searching the river beds in Colorado for gold. The rivers there are different from other rivers in the country. They do not run between green banks, with trees or corn-fields on either side, and so near that we can always see them, and, if we wish, wade in them. They run deep down, hundreds, in some places thousands, of feet down out of sight, between great walls of rock. Imagine a range of mountains split lengthways from their ridge to the root, and a river flowing far down at the very bottom of the split, and tumbling over precipices and rushing wildly through the darkness. That is the way the rivers of Colorado flow.

One morning the three men I have named, having slept over night at the entrance to one of these slits, which in that country are called canons, were coming up the steep sides of the canon to continue their search for gold. As they came near the surface the wild war-whoop of the Indians burst on their ear, and at the same time a shower of arrows and bullets fell on them. Baker was hit, and, as it turned out, so sorely that he died. And, as he was captain, he cried to the other two to escape for their lives. But they were loyal men and stood by their dying captain, facing the cruel savages and beating them back, until the last quiver of his strong body told them he was dead. Then they fled back into and down the canon or deep slit in the rocks through which the river ran. And thither the Indians were afraid to follow.

At a bend of the river they found some driftwood, plenty and strong enough to make a raft. And with ropes and horse-harness they had they made a raft, and tying a bag of provisions to it, they launched into the unknown stream. Never raft sailed on that stream before. As they went on the darkness became nearly as great as that in a tunnel; only, far up, they could see a thin line of blue sky, over which for one short half-hour in the day the sunlight passed. Then night came and there was total darkness. Higher and higher rose the walls on either side as they sailed further on. At one place they reached the height of a mile. Meanwhile the little raft sped on, but on a terrible voyage. The turns in the river were frequent, and the falls and whirlpools terrible. The men clung to the raft for dear life, the one keeping it from bumping against the sides, the other guiding it with a pole.

Only the night before their captain had told them at the foot of the canon, if it could be reached, was a village called Caville. And the hope of the two men was that they might arrive before long there. But one day passed, another, a third, a fourth, in the terrible darkness, on the terrible stream, and Caville was not reached. On the fourth day, as the raft was caught by the rushing stream and dashed round a sharp bend in the canon, it went to pieces, and Strole, trying to guide it with his pole, was tossed into the roaring whirl of waters, gave a loud shriek, and was seen no more.

White was now alone and with a broken raft. A feeling of despair and terror came over him; he wished he had fallen in the fight with the Indians as Baker had done. He felt the temptation to throw himself in the seething waters and end his sorrows where Strole's had ended. But the good Lord had something better in store for him. He helped him to put away those evil thoughts and bind the raft together again. This time, that Strole's fate might not happen to him, he tied himself to the raft. But when he searched for the bag of provisions it was gone. And thus tied to the raft in the awful gloom on the awful stream, without companion, without food, the poor man launched once more. Alas! he was caught in a whirlpool, fiercer and stronger than that which had swallowed Strole. The raft was whirled round and round and round. The thought came to him that he should whirl on there till raft and he sank. "This is the end," he said to himself. He grew dizzy; he fainted.

When he came to himself he glanced upward. The rocks rose nearly a mile on either side. A red line along the open showed that it was evening. Then the red changed to black, and all was dark. And then and there, in that terrible depth, in that thick darkness, and amid the roaring of the whirling and rushing of waters, this poor man found God. "I fell on my knees," he told afterward, "and as the raft swept round in the current I asked God to help me. I spoke as if from my very soul, and said, 'O God, if there is a way out of this fearful place, show it to me; take me to it.'" He was still looking up with his hands clasped, when he felt a different movement in the raft, and turning to look at the whirlpool, it was behind, and he was floating down the smoothest current he had yet seen in the canon. Six days more and he came to a bank where the rocks disappeared and some Indians lived. From them he received food and started once more on his voyage; and three days later he came to Caville and to the homes of white men, where his troubles came to an end.

It was a terrible voyage, the most terrible, perhaps, ever sailed by man; but it had this good for White; it put the thought and faith of God into his heart. When, in after days, he told the story to Dr. Bell, who records it in "Across America," his voice grew husky as he described the awful scene in the whirlpool, the appeal to God, and God's loving and helpful reply.—Dr. A. McLeod in Illustrated Christian Weekly.

A HELL ON EARTH.

"Whether there is or is not a hell in the other world, I know by experience there is one here on earth, for I feel what must be the torments of the damned!" So said a convicted criminal on his way to the State's prison, to which, after a full and fair trial, he had been sentenced for years.

He had ruined the bank of which he had been the trusted officer, embezzling its funds and swindling not only its stockholders and depositors, but also the widows and orphans whose little all was in the institution he had wrecked by his villainy.

And is not such the intense and horrible experience of not a few who are transgressors against both God and man? Judas, in the horrors of remorse, cries out, "I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood," and driven by the fierce pangs of an accusing conscience goes and hangs himself. Bessus, the Grecian, tears down the nests of the birds about his house, saying they were all the while accusing him of the murder of his father. Prof. Webster, awaiting his trial for murder, complains that his fellow-prisoners were all the time screaming to him from their cells, "You are a bloody, guilty man!" when the only accusing voices were the echoes of his own guilty conscience. Cicero declares, "It is the dishonesty, the wickedness, the crimes of the wicked, that are as flames and firebrands and furies to their souls." Voltaire, with almost his dying breath, cries out to his physician, "I shall go to hell, and you will go with me." Paine, in the horrors of his last illness, begs not to be left alone—to have some one, even a child, stay with him—for he said, "It is hell to be left alone." Charles IX, who gave the order for the massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day, exclaimed as he was expiring, "What blood! what murders! How will all this end? What shall I do? I am lost forever! I know it!" Talleyrand in his last hours, when asked how he felt, replied, "I am suffering the pangs of the damned!" And said Sir Thomas Scott as his last hours drew near, "Till this moment I believed there was neither a God nor a hell. Now I know and feel that there are both, and I am doomed to perdition by the just judgment of the Almighty." And Newport, rising on his elbows when dying, exclaimed, "Oh, the insufferable pangs of hell!" and falling back expired.

Some have suggested "that memory is the book of judgment," from whose record the entire life shall finally be disclosed and unfolded at the last great day. Whether this be so or not, certain is it that sometimes in this life conscience, as by a lightning flash, throws a vivid and fearful light on its pages and brings up in terrible array the sins and crimes of the past, filling the soul of the guilty with horrors more fearful than tongue can tell. "Be sure your sin will find you out" is not only the monition of Moses to Israel, but the solemn declaration of God to every transgressor. Some may not know it by experience till the day of final judgment, but multitudes have known it in their lifetime; or if not before, then on the bed of death, when its truth has sent horror to the soul.—American Messenger.

PRAYING IN HALF A ROOM.

In a large and respectable school near Boston, two boys, from different States and strangers to each other, were compelled to room together. It was the beginning of the term, and the students spent the first day in arranging their room and getting acquainted. When night came the younger of the boys asked the other if he did not think it would be a good idea to close the day with a short reading from the Bible and a prayer. The request was modestly made, without whining or cant of any kind. The other boy, however, bluntly refused to listen to the proposal.

"Then you will have no objection if I pray by myself, I suppose?" said the younger. "It is my custom, and I wish to keep it up."

"I don't want any praying in this room, and won't have it!" retorted his companion.

The younger boy rose slowly, walked to the middle of the room, and standing on a seam in the carpet which divided the room nearly equally, said quietly:

"Half of this room is mine. I pay for it. You may choose which half you will have. I will take the other, and I will pray in that half or get another room. But pray I must and will, whether you consent or refuse." The older boy was instantly conquered. To this day he admires the sturdy independence which claimed as a right what he had boorishly denied as a privilege. A Christian might as well ask leave to breath as to ask permission to pray. There is a false sentiment connected with Christian action which interferes with their free exercise. If there is anything to be admired, it is the manliness that knows the right and dares to do it without asking any one's permission.—Youth's Companion.

WHEN DOES SPRING BEGIN?

Get a flat piece of wood about two inches wide and eight inches long, also a ten-penny nail. Drive the nail into the wood close to one end and half way between the sides. Drive it only far enough to make it stand upright in the wood. At exactly 12 o'clock place the wood on a level window-seat at a south window. This piece of wood and a nail are just as much a piece of scientific apparatus as any in your school cabinet. By its aid you can make a series of scientific experiments and become a real student of nature.

Place the wood with the nail towards the sun in such a position that its shadow falls on the center of the board. Then make a pencil mark on the wood showing just how long the shadow is at precisely twelve o'clock. The next day or the next sunny day at precisely the same time try it again, placing the wood in exactly the same place as before. Here is a discovery. The shadow is a little longer or a little shorter than before. Repeat this observation once a week for a month, and the change in the shadow will be very plain. If the observations are made once a week through December and January a curious fact will be noted. The shadow will grow longer and longer till just before Christmas when it will begin grow shorter and shorter. This change in the direction in which the shadow grows from week to week marks the beginning of spring in the United States.

In New England we call it mid-winter. It is wintry out of doors, yet the season has really turned and spring has set out on her travels over the land. In about a week after Christmas she will land on the tip end of Florida and the coast of Texas, way down by the Rio Grande. The precise date at which the change comes is the twenty-first of December. After that day it is spring. It may be cold weather all over the country east of the Rocky Mountains. There may be snow as far South as Charleston or Memphis, while the mountains round Chattanooga are white almost down to the low valleys. Still farther South the ground may be wet, cold, the air chilly. For all that it is really spring.

The big star on which we live has begun to change its position. It looks towards that great star we call the sun in a different direction. Every shadow in the Union grows shorter at noon, day by day. The days grow slowly longer and the sun sets every night a little more to the right as you face the sunset. In spite of stormy wind and snow like wool and hoar-frost scattered like morsels, the average temperature slowly rises. The first buds begin to swell way down in Florida, the first green grass soon appears on the coast of Texas. The fringe of green grows wider and wider. The first birds arrive on the coast along the gulf of Mexico. Then more arrive, and finding the coast filled up with nests, they fly over and settle a little back from the water. Then more fly over the first part and begin to build nests further up from the South. The green wave of grass spreads up the Mississippi and along the coast of Georgia. The snow may stretch down, like a white cape, between Georgia and the Carolinas and Tennessee, along the mountains, yet it begins to melt at the lower end and grows shorter week by week.

Of what help is it to know this? In the North it is winter out of doors till April. Down cellar by the furnace you find a potato resting perhaps near a damp spot on the floor. The potato knows it is spring, and even in the dark opens its eyes and begins to grow. White shoots appear, as if stretching out a pale finger to clasp the hand of spring. It has felt the spring, though the snow flies out of doors. This brings us to a hint of the truth. The spring really begins soon after Christmas, and all plants and animals know it. Any plant or seed protected from the cold will begin to grow if it can get a little water.

Here is the point. After the season turns spring begins in every sunny window. Every plant will now grow, while before Christmas it only seemed to stand still or barely keep alive. Now you can bring up the plants stored in the cellar and they will soon turn green. They know it is spring, and if the room is warm, will surely grow. The days are growing longer, there is more sunshine and more heat. As the plant grows it needs more and more light and heat. Therefore, everything is just right. It seems to feel it is now safe to start, for spring has come.

Now is the time to plant seeds in little wooden boxes in the house. It is spring in the house, and any seed will grow naturally and vigorously, because it feels the advancing spring right through the glass of your window. Try it and see. You will be surprised to find how much quicker seeds start in January than in November, how much faster all young plants grow. We may think in mid-winter the spring will never come, when really it is spring already.—Wide Awake.

NOAH'S CARPENTERS.

"Henry," asked the elder of the younger brother, "do you know what became of Noah's carpenters?"

"Noah's carpenters!" exclaimed Henry; "I didn't know that Noah had any carpenters."

"Certainly there must have been many ship-carpenters at work for a long time, to have constructed such a vessel. What became of them, think you, when all the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened?"

Though Noah's carpenters were all drowned, there are a great many of the same stock now alive; of those who contribute to promote the spiritual good of others, and aid in the upbuilding of the Redeemer's kingdom, but personally neglect the great salvation.

Sabbath-school children, who gather in the poor, or contribute their money to send tracts and books to the destitute, or to aid the work of missions, and yet remain unconverted, are like Noah's carpenters.

Teachers in Bible classes and Sunday-schools, who point their pupils to the Lamb of God, but do not lead the way, are like guide-boards that tell the road but are not travelers on it; or like Noah's carpenters, who built an ark, and were overwhelmed in the waters that bore it aloft in safety.

Careless parents, who instruct their children and servants, as every parent should, in the great doctrines of the Gospel, yet fail to illustrate these doctrines in their lives, and seek not a personal interest in the blood of Christ, are like Noah's carpenters, and must expect their doom.

Wealthy and liberal but unconverted men, who help to build churches and sustain the institutions of the Gospel, but who "will not come unto Christ that they may have life," are hewing the timbers and driving the nails of the ark which they are too proud or too careless to enter.

Moralists who attend church and support the miniatry, but who do not receive into their hearts the Gospel they sustain, are like Noah's carpenters.—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

A GLORIOUS BATTLE WON.

He stood with a foot on the threshold
And a cloud on his boyish face,
While his city comrade urged him
To enter the gorgeous place.

"There's nothing to fear, old fellow!
It isn't a lion's den;
Here waits you a royal welcome
From lips of the bravest men."

'Twas the old, old voice of the tempter
That sought in the old, old way,
To lure with a lying promise
The innocent feet astray.

"You'd think it was Blue Beard's closet
To see how you stare and shrink!
I tell you there's nought to harm you;
It's only a game and a drink!"

He heard the words with a shudder,
It's only a game and a drink!
And his lips made bold to answer,
"But what would my mother think?"

The name that his heart held dearest
Had started a secret spring,
And forth from the wily tempter
He fled like a hunted thing.

Away! till the glare of the city
And its gilded halls of sin
Are shut from his sense and vision,
The shadows of night within.

Away! till his feet have bounded
O'er fields where his childhood trod;
Away! in the name of virtue
And the strength of his mother's God!

What though he was branded "coward!"
In the blazoned halls of vice,
And banned by his baffled tempter,
Who sullenly tossed the dice,

On the page where the angel keepeth
The record of deeds well done,
That night was the story written
Of a glorious battle won.

And he stood by his home in the starlight—
All guiltless of sword and shield—
A braver and nobler victor
Than the hero of bloodiest field!

TEETOTALISM IN RUSSIA.

One of the leading journals of Russia, the St. Petersburg Zeitung, has a remarkable article in advocacy of the abandonment of intoxicants, with citations from a powerful pamphlet by Dr. Bunge, a native Russian. From an English translation by Joseph Malius we quote the following telling words:

"So to-day, during the fast, we make use of the favorable opportunity it affords us for a little preaching upon this wide-spread source of misery; preaching whose aim is to revive the crusade against our national enemy—an enemy which has been often preached about and assailed, with insignificant results, and has never been overthrown. We know of certain ideas in relation to movements which are not unheard of in public, but we do not at this moment join in that war-cry which has been so often heard that we are weary of it, 'The German is the foe!'—a cry which the great Skobeloff once raised with a powerful voice, and which his petty imitators are so frequently repeating in public and through the press. No, we are brought to the conviction that Russia's great foe is not the German. It is alcohol which is the dangerous foe to Russia and to the Russian nation—an enervating, depraving, consuming foe, and one fatal to the best powers of our people.

"We take the field then against spirits, against alcohol in all its forms; and we find weapons for this struggle in an excellent pamphlet of Dr. Bunge, who is professor of physiological chemistry at Basle, and is a countryman of ours from Dorpat.

"Professor Bunge first of all views alcohol from the physiological standpoint. He shows that in the broader sense alcohol is no means of nourishment; that the warmth arising from the combustion of alcohol in the system of a drinker gives no living force, for the increase of warmth on the one hand is neutralized by the increased departure of warmth on the other hand. The thermometer proves that alcohol lessens the temperature of the body. All the effects of brandy, which are usually regarded as mere stimulation, are really symptoms of both physical and mental paralysis, under the guise of serenity and vivacity of mind. The beginning of this brain-palsy at once shows itself in hasty gesticulations which are accompanied by an increased pulse and quicker beating of the heart. Under the influence of intoxicants the man talks aimlessly; he gesticulates, he waxes hot, and thus accelerates the beating of the heart. The feeling of weariness, which so often occasions the desire for alcohol, is also paralysis."

The paper then goes on to declare more fully its settled campaign of hostility to the traffic and use of alcoholic liquors. The utterance is significant of a grand onward step in a country where temperance doctrines have heretofore had scarcely a foothold or a hearing. The verdict of travelers in Russia bears out the sweeping assertions of this journal as to the fearful ravages of intoxicants among all classes there. May this voice, crying in the wilderness, awaken many an echo! What if Tolstoi should write a novel that would work for the slaves of alcohol in that land what "Uncle Tom's Cabin" did in this country!

Kansas has already saved $12,000,000 through prohibition, but who can estimate what she has saved in happy homes and protected manhood?

The population of Chicago has increased from 1882 to 1887 about 25 per cent. The consumption of beer has increased 97 per cent, and arrests have increased 38 per cent.

On January 1 a law went into effect in New Hampshire, by which twenty voters can assert any place where liquors are kept for sale to be a nuisance, and which carries the case before the Supreme Court. The defense has to prove the place is not a nuisance.

A gentleman in England has started an "Industrial Inebriate Home," to be a refuge for the drink-smitten who desire to reform. He provides "cheerful, healthful, constant occupation," with plain food and daily religious exercises. Meantime he makes no charges, the labor being in some degree a return for the benefits received.

Mr. Robert Graham of New York city has with great care ascertained the following facts: "Preceding the Presidential election of 1884, there were held in New York city 1,002 political conventions—Congressional, assembly, aldermanic, primary, etc.—283 of which were held apart from saloons, ninety-six next door to saloons, and 633 in saloons."

Francis Murphy has been spending a week among the striking coal miners in Pennsylvania. From his observation he thinks that the miners have made a mistake. Mr. Murphy says that he has been on a strike for eighteen years, and it has paid because it was a strike against whisky, the worst enemy of the workingman. He thinks that whisky is to blame for many hot headed resolves that lead to strikes. There is no man who has more influence with workingmen than Mr. Murphy, and it might be a good thing for the Pennsylvania people to send him among the miners to help them out of their own light that they may see that violence does not win sympathy in strikes.

It has come to be that four drinks of whisky are almost equivalent to one murder. Two men had an altercation in a drinking and gambling saloon of Chicago the other day. One of them, swearing dire vengeance, went up to the bar and called for a glass of whisky. It was given him. He called for another; that also was passed over the counter by the vender of the vile stuff. Another and still another were called for and given. Then the man was insane enough to do anything. A moment later he had put a bullet through a man's heart, and the wrong man at that. If the law lets the keeper of that den or the dealer-out of that poison go free, there is either something wrong with the law or with its executors. —Chicago Standard.

A delegation of the professors and directors of the medical colleges on the West Side, Chicago, called on the Mayor to protest against the location of a saloon at the corner of West Harrison street and Hermitage avenue, because of the effect it would have on their students. The medical people thought they could rest easy on this point when Collector Onahan refused the license a few weeks ago. The place is owned, however, by Mr. Sennott, Clerk of the Probate Court, who was himself a saloon keeper before he was elected to his present position, and it is said he was attempting to bring enough political influence to bear on the Mayor to compel him to issue the license. The Mayor, however, yesterday, definitely refused to grant the license. This is a very important decision on the part of the Mayor and City Collector, as it establishes an entirely new precedent in granting saloon licences—something akin to local option. Heretofore it has been customary for the city to grant a saloon license, no difference where located, if "good moral character" were vouchsafed for the keeper.—Inter Ocean.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, Feb. 24, 1888.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—The President and Mrs. Cleveland, with a select party, are spending a few days in Florida. While the committees from the rival cities were holding their meetings in Washington, for the purpose of selecting the time and place for the National Democratic convention, the President had gone from their sight and was inhaling the perfumes of magnolias and orange blossoms in the far-away land of flowers. There were large delegations from San Francisco, St. Louis, Chicago, New York, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Toledo, and other cities, each of which had hopes of capturing the nominating convention. These throngs of sight-seers, together with the fine weather, which always has the effect of enticing the residents of Washington, en masse, out of doors, gave the streets of the city more life than had been seen for many weeks.

One of the most notable happenings in Congress this week was the defeat by the House of the Hoar resolution, passed by the Senate, changing the date of Inauguration Day and the beginning of the Congressional terms from March 4th to April 30th. This was by a vote of 129 to 128. Some of the members opposed the change because they did not like innovations on established customs. The people of this city were especially disappointed with the vote. The present arrangement for the beginning of Congressional sessions is positively bad in some of its features and inconvenient in others, and the 4th of March falls in the most fickle season of the year as regards weather in this latitude. It is now hoped that Mr. Crain of Texas who strongly antagonized the Hoar resolution with one of his own providing for the opening of Congressional sessions on the first Monday in January, will succeed in carrying his proposition.

At the two hours' prohibition hearing on last Saturday, given by the Senate committee on the District of Columbia, several noted advocates of prohibition made speeches, among them Miss Frances Willard. Her plea was full of touching pathos. She said she was not accustomed to hearings of this kind, but she felt inspired to speak by that invisible throng which was pleading in pathetic tones for the protection of the American home against the saloon. She was impressed, she said, at the moment, with the words of De Tocqueville when he said that life was neither a matter of pleasure or pain, but a serious business to be made the most of. She did not propose to question the motives of liquor dealers, but to argue the case on its merits. "Under the license system," she said, "the saloon keeper is a legalized citizen; under prohibition, an outlaw. It was not claimed that prohibition would entirely prohibit, but that it is, nevertheless, the most effective way of dealing with the evil. Laws against gambling, murder, larceny, etc, do not entirely prevent those crimes, yet no one will say that they ought to be repealed on that account." She continued, "You may smile at my ideas of government, but I consider that just as a mill turns out flour and a college graduates, so government should produce protection for life, limb and property. In so far as it does this it deserves praise, and in so far as it fails, condemnation."

The reading of a newspaper article showing the good effect of prohibition in Kansas, which was written some time ago by Senator Ingalls, Chairman of the committee which was being addressed, brought a burst of applause from the Prohibitionists present.

Representative Simmons of North Carolina has introduced another Blair Educational bill (this one appropriates $65,000,000 for education), and Rep. Brower of North Carolina has asked the House to instruct the Committee on Education to report back the Blair bill inside of a month.

There is little doubt that Washington will be the city fixed upon for the centennial of the inauguration of our first President and the quadri-centennial of the discovery of America. Six bills have been introduced looking to a Congress of American nations for commercial and other purposes, and in every one of them Washington is designated as the place. The $300,000 asked of Congress for the centennial is to be devoted to the entertainment of the presidents, chief justices and ministers of the fifteen Spanish-American republics, who will be here as the guests of the government. *

—The one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Adoniram Judson will occur August 9, 1888. In commemoration of this event it is proposed to erect a Judson Memorial Church in Mandalay, the capital of Upper Burmah.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Monday evening, Feb. 13, was celebrated in Brooklyn, New York, Columbus, Ohio, and elsewhere as the anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. Many of his memorable sayings were recalled: "I believe this government cannot endure permanently half slave and half free." "With public sentiment, nothing can fail; without it, nothing can succeed. Consequently, he who molds public sentiment goes deeper than he who enacts statutes or pronounces decisions. He makes statutes and decisions possible or impossible to be executed." When he submitted his Emancipation Proclamation to his Cabinet, he gave as his last reason, "I have promised my God that I will do it." Secretary Chase asked the import of that. "I made a solemn vow before God, that if Gen. Lee should be driven back from Pennsylvania, I would crown the result with the declaration of freedom to the slaves." "If it please Almighty God that the wealth that has been piled up by two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall all be taken away, and for every drop of blood drawn by the lash a corresponding one shall be drawn by the sword, still we must say, the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

But it was not so much what Lincoln said, as what he was, that gave him such power. The character of "honest old Abe" is stamped upon the American nation, and it will remain forever.

Last Sabbath night I preached on National Responsibility in the Nostrand Ave. M. E. church, Rev. Prince, pastor. This is a large new brick building. More than 600 people were out, and the audience was alert and interested throughout. At least a dozen met us at the pulpit stairs, shaking our hand vigorously and blessing our work. "That ought to be preached all over this land," said one. Another, "Every Methodist preacher ought to be indoctrinated with those principles." "God bless you, brother. Come again."

The Presbyterian Ministers' Association Monday discussed the Sabbath-school teacher; the paper described the ideal teacher. In talent, natural and acquired, and in consecration he was to be a secondary preacher. In a secondary sense he should receive episcopal orders and be set apart by the session.

The seats in Dr. Talmage's church were recently sold at auction. This church has heretofore boasted that their seats were free. The editor of the Christian Advocate last week thus animadverts upon it, in an editorial entitled, "Mammon in the church." "A few years ago Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle made its boast that its seats were free, and that was one of the attractive elements which drew large numbers from other denominations. In a short time it was alleged that the freeness of the seats was only a pretense; that persons were expected to subscribe an amount about equal to what the seat would be worth if the pews were rented; and if they did not they were frozen out. Questions of veracity were raised as to the harmony between statements made from the pulpit and actual practices. The presbytery wrestled with those questions; but now not only are the pews rented, but the greatest abomination which ever entered a Protestant church, and one which Lyman Abbott felicitated Plymouth church on getting rid of. is in full blast. A pew whose fixed valuation is $90 brought a premium of $750, and another whose rental is fixed at $100 brought a premium or $575. Nine brought premiums of $100 and upward. The Tabernacle is a big institution, run on business principles; big building, big organ, big crowd, big rental, and,—Mr. Talmage. It is a pity that such a huge establishment should set up such an auction-block on seats in the house of God. It is the worst form in which Mammon invades the church, and peculiarly inimical to the growth of genuine influence over the unconverted, the working classes, and especially the devotedly religious who are always free from ostentation and unhappy where it exists."

The storm at Mt. Vernon, Ill., killing perhaps forty, leaving hundreds homeless, is another evidence of God's displeasure with this nation. An eye-witness says, "It was all over in a minute. The thing that most impressed me was the destruction of the county court house, a fine three-story brick building. The court house stood in a prominent place and could easily be seen almost from the tower to the ground. It looked to me as though the huge pile of brick and mortar had been struck by a gigantic battering-ram, or by a big club in the hands of a power strong enough to knock it down at a single blow. It seemed to collapse all at once, spread out and bury the buildings surrounding it." Can we fail to see the hand of God in that?

Brooklyn, Feb. 20, 1888. J. M. Foster.

Religious News.

—At the late conference in the City of Mexico of all Protestant missionaries in that country, Rev. Henry M. Bissell, brother of Mrs. W. I. Phillips, presided at one of the sessions. He is located at La Barca and is under engagement to the American Board.

—A revival in Sandusky, Ohio, conducted by Messrs. Potter and Miller, has resulted in the accession of one hundred and eight persons to the Congregational, Presbyterian and Methodist churches.

—The General Conference (quadrennial) of the Methodist Episcopal church will meet in New York May 1, in the Metropolitan Opera House. The eighty-five boxes are to be let to defray the expenses of rental.

—The First Baptist church, Minneapolis, Minn., made a canvass of one hundred blocks in its vicinity, and found that while nearly all the children were in Sabbath-school, about half the people did not attend church.

—In Japan native converts, with average wages of less than 25 cents a day, contributed last year $27,000 to mission work. One man gave $10,000 to build a school under the care of the American Board. During the year 3,640 adults were baptized, making a total membership of 14,815. There are now 193 organized churches, 64 of them self-supporting.

—The William Taylor Transit Fund and Building Fund Society has a self-supporting work in South America, begun eight years ago, embracing four well-established missions in Chili, and property in churches, parsonages and schools worth about one hundred thousand dollars. There are incipient church organizations, one with a membership of thirty-six, and there have been about three thousand pupils in these schools with from 600 to 1,000 children under tuition now. These schools are patronized by the most influential classes, from the President of the Republic down. There are also stations in Brazil.

—Some years ago a party of twenty persons, says the Moravian, mostly from Chicago, some of them Mr. Moody's helpers, started on a mission to the Holy Land. They have been joined by English sympathizers, and form a community with a common purse. A letter in the Boston Advertiser speaks favorably of them. Simple allegiance to Christ and practical well-doing constitute their profession and purpose. Their type is so unselfish and unworldly, their relief of the poor and sympathy with every class have been so spontaneous and sincere, that they have won the appreciation of Mohammedan and Bedouin alike, an even the wretched fellaheen sing their praises. Some Temanite Jews from Arabia have been helped by their ministry, and the fierce transjordanic tribe of the Adawns welcome their teachings. The leader of this part was H. G. Spafford, a well known lawyer and Christian worker.

COMPARATIVE GROWTH OF CHURCHES AND POPULATION.

The following tables which appear in the Christian Intelligencer, not only refute the statistics of some book-makers, but are much more an occasion of rejoicing in the God of our salvation.

The growth of the churches since 1880, exhibited in the accompanying tables, is a conclusive answer to the not infrequent allegation that the Protestant churches are losing ground.

There is now one Evangelical Protestant church in 518 inhabitants, and one minister in 692 inhabitants. From 1850 to 1886 the population increased 152 per cent., and the communicants 243 per cent.

LODGE NOTES.

D.R.Locke, editor of the Toledo Blade, and well known as the author of the "Nasby" letters, died on the 15th ult. The Masons performed their ceremonies at his grave.

At Philadelphia lately the corner stone of a handsome monument to the poet Goethe was laid with Masonic ceremonies. This was an appropriate work for the order when we remember Goethe's irreligion.

Near Springfield, Mo., Thursday night, Albert Adair and his brother-in-law, L. JKenworthy, were called from their house, seized by five men, tied to a tree, and whipped with switches. The Bald-Knobbers were recognized and arrested.

Major Sanderson, the well-known Orange leader, and member of Parliament for North Armagh, in a speech at Brighton Wednesday night declared that as long as the men of Ulster had right hands to strike with the Nationalists would never reign over them.

The general executive board of the Knights of Labor adjourned to April 9, after assigning different members to various parts of the country for the purpose of furthering the interests of the order. Powderly will go to the northern peninsula of Michigan and to Ontario; Bailey to Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, and possibly Mississippi: Maguire to Cincinnati; Carlton first to Southern Ohio, thence to Florida, and Aylesworth, through Kansas and Missouri, to complete unfinished business. It was stated that no further action had been taken in reference to the Reading railroaders' strike.

The Night Riders or White Caps of Green county, Ind., again took the law into their own hands a few nights ago at Bloomfield. As usual, thrashing was resorted to, and the parties to be thus visited with summary punishment were Noah and Fannia Good and Sam Pierce. The three named have repeatedly been warned to leave the vicinity. Six or eight of the White Cap band called at the house of the Goods, and taking Noah and Sam Pierce to a clearing near the house, applied the regular chastisement by means of supple hickory switches, with which each of the party was provided. Leaving two of the gang to watch the whipped men, the woman was brought out, and while the punishment was as thorough as that administered to the men, shingles were used in place of switches. Having accomplished the object in view, the White Caps then left the place, not, however, before giving their victims a firm order to leave the country without delay.

SPIKE THEIR GUNS.

A few dollars expended in purchasing tracts and scattering them about through the community will perhaps do more to spike the guns of noisy secretists than anything else that could be suggested. Men have heard the lodges praised so often and so boldly, that they have come to believe that they are what they profess to be. It is high time that the war is carried into Africa itself. This is the work which the N. C. A. has in view, and would be glad to push forward in every quarter of the land. Who will help to do it?

ANTI-SECRECY TRACTS.

Orders filled at the rate of 50 cents per 1,000 pages at the office, or 75 cents per 1,000 pages by mail.

Contributions are solicted to the TRACT FUND for the free distribution of tracts.

In this series of Tracts will be found the opinions of such men as Hon. J. Q. Adams, Wm. H. Seward, James Madison, Daniel Webster, Richard Rush, John Hancock, Millard Fillmore, Chief Justice Marshall, Seth M. Gates, Nathaniel Colver, President Finney, President Blanchard, Philo Carpenter, Chancellor Howard Crosby, D. L. Moody, and others.

The Master's Carpet.

BY

E. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 428 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only anbscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

HELPFUL HINTS.

The quickest way to copy with pen or pencil is to put a flat, heavy weight upon the upper edge of the paper on which you write, to hold it firm and leave both hands free. Then place the matter to be copied flat on the desk at the left, so as to bring it as near as possible to the blank paper. With a finger of the left hand keep your place in the book or MS. as you write, and you will find generally that you can copy quite as fast as you can compose. For a paper-weight a heavy oblong rectangular piece of brass or glass is most effective.

Most men when they want to insert a leaf in a book put mucilage on both sides of the leaf's inner edge, put it in the desired place, shut the book, and let the mucilage dry. Afterward, when they come to use the book, they find it hard to read the words at the very inside of the pages, and later on they wonder why that leaf will not stay stuck in. The trouble is that they went to work in the wrong way. The difficulties can be obviated very easily. When you wish to insert a leaf, turn over a third or a half-inch of the edge of the paper. Put the mucilage only on the outer side of the little flap thus made, taking care to get none on the rest of the paper. Then insert the leaf and shut the book. When it is opened, if the outer edges of the sheet have been trimmed, it will be found to all intents and purposes a new leaf, as flexible and durable as any other in the volume.—The Writer.

AIRING ROOMS.

It is a great mistake that the whole house, particularly sleeping rooms and the dining room, receives little ventilation and purifying of the air, when it can be done with so little trouble and no expense. A pitcher of cold water placed on a table or bureau will absorb all the gasses with which the room is filled from the respiration of those eating or sleeping in the apartment Very few realize how important such purification is for the health of the family, or, indeed, understand or realize that there can be any impurity in the rooms, yet in a few hours a pitcher of cold water—the colder the more effective—will make the air of the room pure, but the water will be unfit for use. In bed rooms a pail or pitcher of of water should be always kept, and changed often if any one stays in the room during the day; certainly be put in fresh when the inmates retire. Such water should never be drank, but either a covered pitcher or glass bottle with a stopper should be used for drinking water, and always be kept closely covered. Impure water causes more sickness than even impure air, and for that reason, before using water from a pump or reservoir for drinking or cooking, one should pump or draw out enough to clear the pipes before using it, particularly in the morning, after the water has been standing in the pipes all night.—Commercial Gazette.

ADVICE TO HOUSEKEEPERS.—Ceilings that have been smoked by a kerosene lamp should be washed off with soda water.

The surest test of a frozen orange is its weight. If it is heavy in the hand it has not been frozen.

Use good soap in the kitchen, as it saves the hands.

When a felon first begins to make its appearance, take a lemon, cut off one end, put the finger in, and the longer it is kept there the better.

Flour should be kept in a barrel, with a flour scoop to dip it and a seive to sift it.

Drain pipes, and all places that are sour or impure, may be cleansed with lime water or carbolic acid.

For a cold in the chest, a flannel rag rung out in boiling water and sprinkled with turpentine, laid on the chest, gives the greatest relief.

Cold sliced potatoes fry and taste better by sprinkling a spoonful of flour over them while frying.

Rub the teakettle with kerosene, and polish wish a dry flannel cloth.

Bent whalebone can be restored and used again by simply soaking in water a few hours, then drying them.

To clean carpets—Go over them once a week with a broom dipped in hot water, to which a little turpentine has been added. Wring a cloth in the hot water and wipe under pieces of furniture too heavy to be moved.

When the rubber rollers of your wringer become sticky, as they very often do after wringing flannel, rub with kerosene and wipe dry, and they will be nice and smooth.

ASLEEP ON THE RAILROAD TRACK.

A little child, tired of play, had pillowed his head on a rail and fallen asleep. The train was almost upon him when a passing stranger rushed forward and saved him from a horrible death. Perhaps you are asleep on the track, too. You are, if you are neglecting the biliousness and constipation which trouble you, in the hope that you will "come all right." Wake up, or the train will be upon you! Constipation is too often the forerunner of a general "breaking up." Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets will regulate your liver, stomach and bowels, and restore your system to its normal condition.

LOW RATES TO PACIFIC COAST.

The new agreement between the transcontinental lines authorizes a lower rate to Pacific coast points via the Manitoba-Pacific route than is made via any other line. Accommodations first-class. For rates, maps and other particulars, apply to C. H. WARREN, General Passenger Agent, St. Paul, Minn., or H. E. TUPPER, Dist. Pass. Agent, 232 South Clark St., Chicago.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 212 East 9th St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

An Excellent Route.

Tourists, business men, settlers and others desiring to reach any place in Central or Northern Montana, Dakota, Minnesota, or Puget Sound and Pacific Coast points should investigate regarding the rates and advantages offered by this route. A rate from Chicago or St. Paul to Puget Sound or Pacific Coast points $5.00 lower than via any other line is guaranteed. Accommodations first-class. Helena, Great Falls, Fort Benton, Montana; Watertown, Aberdeen, Ellendale, Fort Buford and Bottineau, Dakota, are a few of the principal points reached via recent extensions of this road. Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal hy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

In Brief.

Mrs. General J. A. Garfield and Mrs. General U. S. Grant are both wealthy widows who draw a pension of nearly $100 a week.

An English engineer proposes by means of electricity to condense the solid part of smoke, and send the solidified part back to the furnace.

General John C. Black, Commissioner of Pensions, draws one of the largest pensions enjoyed by any soldier—$25 a week. Comrade Black won his pension by actual service, by disability incurred therein.

Certain hollows in hard sandstone near Lima, Peru, were ascribed by Lyell to ancient sea-action before the rocks were elevated above ocean level. A resident observer, however, finds the hollows to be still increasing in size and number, and believes them to be due to cleavage caused by the growth of lichen which live on the rock.

Coal to Succeed Cattle in Wyoming.—"The world at large doesn't know it," said Capt. Murrin, "but Wyoming has the biggest coal fields in the United States, more iron ore than can be found anywhere else on earth, big lakes of soda, more oil than we could possibly use, veins of copper ore, and stone and marble quarries. The Territory has wonderful natural resources, and these will be developed before long. The cattle days are gone, the hundreds and hundreds of miles of wire fences on government land will be torn down, and the Territory will drop far down on the list of cattle producers. The business has really retarded the development and growth of the Territory, and it may be for the best after all." Kansas City Times.

The fact that fifteen to twenty-five steamers a month are now arriving at the mouth of the Congo illustrates the growth of commerce in that region since Stanley showed the importance of the great river. One ocean steamer has already ascended the river to Boma, fifty miles from the sea, and the best channels are being marked by buoys, so that deep draught vessels may safely navigate the lower river. Little hotels for the entertainment of travelers have been built at Banana and Boma. One reason why the whites on the lower river enjoy far better health than formerly, it is said, is because they have discarded canned meats and now raise their own beef. Cattle thrive finely at Boma, and it takes a steer every three days to feed the whites who are now living at that station.

Lord Palmerston once made use of some very effective pauses which he could not have prepared beforehand, and these are worth quoting in conclusion. While electioneering at Taunton he was greatly troubled by a butcher who wanted him to support a certain Radical policy. At the end of one of his Lordship's speeches the butcher called out: "Lord Palmerston, will you give me a plain answer to a plain question?" After a slight pause Lord Palmerston replied: "I will." The butcher then asked: "Will you or will you not support this measure—a Radical bill?" Lord Palmerston hesitated, and then, with a twinkle in his eye, replied: "I will"—Then he stopped. Immediately the Radicals cheered tremendously, "not," continued his Lordship Loud Conservative cheers. When these ceased Lord Palmerston finished his sentence—"tell you." He then immediately retired.—Chambers Journal.

An American paper, the Fireman's Herald, predicts a terrible disaster in the oil regions of the United States, if the tapping of gas wells is allowed to go on at its present rate without check or supervision of any sort. A fearful explosion of natural gas took place in China some two hundred years ago, it appears, tearing up and destroying a district and leaving a large inland sea—that now known on the maps as Lake Fu-Chang. Should such an accident occur in the United States, there will be such an upheaval, the Herald believes, as will dwarf the most terrible earthquake ever known. The country along the gas-belt from Toledo through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky will be ripped up to the depth of from 1,200 feet to 1,400 feet, leaving a chasm through which the waters of Lake Erie will come howling down, filling the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys and blotting them out forever.—London St. James' Gazette.

A Blasphemer's Death.—The Lenox (Iowa) Time Table relates the death of a man in Taylor county under the following circumstances: "A. W. Fullie, living in the northwest part of the county, met an untimely death on Wednesday of last week. He was a man well known in this community and quite wealthy. A week ago, when the first blizzard came, he made use of the expression, that 'if there was such a being as God Almighty, he was without love or feeling for humanity or he would not send such storms upon them,' at the same time declaring that if another such storm came he would go to a climate that had never been cursed with such storms, and escape the vigilance of the Almighty. The storm came on Tuesday morning, and he began preparation for departure. Securing a large trunk he packed it, and Wednesday morning went to load it into the wagon to haul to Villisca where he expected to take the afternoon train. He had one end of the trunk in a wagon-box and was raising the other end from the ground when his feet slipped from under him, the sharp edge striking him upon the neck as he lay upon the ground. His neck was broken, and he died almost instantly."

THEY PAY $500, OR CURE.

For many years the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, who are thoroughly responsible, financially, have offered in good faith, through nearly every newspaper in the land, a standing reward of $500 for a case of nasal catarrh, no matter how bad, or of how long standing, which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents. It is mild, soothing, cleansing, deodorizing, antiseptic and healing.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. Slocum, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT JECT.

The Papers say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

William Wilson Corcoran, the millionaire philanthropist, died at Washington Tuesday morning, aged 89.

The National Democratic Committee on Thursday selected St. Louis as the place of holding the convention, and changed the time of meeting from July 3 to June 5.

The output of coal during 1887 in the second anthracite district of Pennsylvania reached 5,043,515 tons, an increase over 1886 of 810,060 tons. In mine accidents fifty-two men were killed and 146 wounded.

The canvass of New Orleans being made by the Committee of One Hundred to revise the registration has already resulted in finding about 24,000 names illegally registered, though not all fraudulently. Between 15,000 and 20,000 will be thrown out.

Initial meetings were held at Boston Thursday in a movement looking to the erection of a memorial to Wendell Phillips. General Butler made the principal speech, and alleged that the "war of the rebellion was principally inspired by the voice and pen of Phillips" The size and enthusiam of the meetings augurs the success of the movement.

Excessive cigarette smoking killed James Copely, a Cleveland, Ohio, bartender, Friday. He smoked a hundred cigarettes daily at times, inhaling the smoke, and a post mortem showed that his body was saturated with nicotine.

Two masked men took possession of a Southern Pacific train in Arizona Wednesday night, just after leaving Stein's Pass, uncoupled the engine and express car from the rest of the train, and after going a mile further, robbed Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express car of all valuables.

Under the new law, Francis Herbert, who assaulted a 13-year-old girl, was, at Detroit, Friday, sentenced for life in the penitentiary at hard labor.

In convention at Providence, R. I, Wednesday, the Prohibitionists nominated a State ticket, George W. Gould heading the list as nominee for governor.

The affirming of the decision of the lower court in the barbed wire patent case by the United States Supreme Court is the occasion of general rejoicing all over Iowa. Letters of congratulation are pouring in upon the lawyers who so ably and persistently fought in defense of the Iowa farmers. The decision of the upper court practically terminates the life of barbed wire monopoly.

The Cunard and other steamship companies are said to be arranging to run extra steamers. It is expected that there will be a large increase in Irish immigration this year.

The orthodox faction of Anshe Emeth congregation at Cleveland have demanded the resignation of Rabbi Philo, who has made some changes in religious customs that are said to be opposed to ancient rites. The Rabbi refuses to resign, and legal proceedings are threatened.

The worst steamboat explosion that has occurred for years took place Monday morning at South Vallejo, Cal., about forty people being killed and several wounded. The steamer that blew up was used to transfer passengers from the main line of the Central Pacific Railway to the Napa Valley Branch that runs through the wine districts to Calistoga. About sixty-seven people were on board, mainly workingmen who were going over to the factories on the Contra Costa shore. A moment after the sound of the explosion a sheet of flame shot high into the air. Those on deck at the time were hurled overboard by the force of the explosion and several were killed outright by being struck by pieces of the debris, which were sent flying in all directions.

At East Greenwich, R. I., Saturday night, the well owned by Mr. Allen was poisoned, and an attempt was made to blow up the house of the Rev. O. W. Still, a Baptist minister. Both men have been waging war upon the saloons.

An explosion in a quarry at Duluth, Minn., Wednesday morning, wounded a dozen men. It is not expected that two of the victims can recover.

It is reported from Spencer county, Indiana, that the cyclone which demolished Mt. Vernon, Ill., Sunday, dipped down near Heilmann, a small hamlet, unroofing houses, overturning barns, completely demolishing many and killing stock. The only person reported injured was Mrs. John Eastman, who was buried in the ruins of her home and fatally hurt.

Adjutant General Vance notified Governor Oglesby Tuesday that thirty-seven persons had been killed at Mount Vernon by the cyclone and that eighty were woundcd, twenty of whom are in a serious condition.

At Sioux City, Iowa, Tuesday, in the case of the driver of a brewery wagon, charged with violation of the prohibitory law, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty.

Two Mormon elders, named Douglass and Fuller, have been operating in the section of country between Memphis and the Tennessee River for the last month. A few days ago they went into Madison county, Tennessee, and called on the pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian church at Denmark. Saturday they asked to be allowed to hold services. The pastor found out who they were and reported the fact to the citizens, and they ordered the polygamous teachers to leave the town under penalty of receiving a coat of tar and feathers.

Before a legislative committee at Boston Tuesday Mrs. Charlotte Smith and others made charges that many intelligence offices were sending girls to houses of ill-repute, and that Inspector Burleigh was in league with the procurers. The statements of fifty alleged victims were submitted, and in some instances their stories were corroborated.

FOREIGN.

The association of the chambers of commerce of the United Kingdom have unanimously passed a resolution advocating an arbitration treaty with the United States for the settlement of all difficulties that may arise between that country and England.

It is stated that Austria agrees with Russia in holding that Prince Ferdinand's presence in Bulgaria is illegal, but recognizes his election to the throne as legal. Italy is said to have declared that she will co operate with England and Austria in any action they may take in regard to Bulgaria.

Mr. Phelps, the American Minister, had a long interview Wednesday with Lord Salisbury on the subject of the fisheries treaty, the text of which was before them. Lord Salisbury expressed approval of the substance and form of the document.

During a heavy rainstorm the large house used as headquarters of the Eleventh Regiment of Mexican troops at Cruz de Piedras, Sonora, fell in. Four soldiers were instantly killed and a large number mortally wounded, while nearly half the regiment suffered injury. In addition many were prostrated by illness in consequence of exposure to the severe weather.

EPPS'S COCOA.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

ESTABLISHED 1868.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000 000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.
The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.
TERMS: $2.00 per year; strictly in advance, $1.50. Special terms to clubs. Send for sample copy.

The first Chinaman in Kansas to apply for naturalization was Lee Sing, of Wichita. The District Court refused his application under the anti-Chinese laws by which Congress denies naturalization to the Chinaman. Lee Sing has been in Wichita ten years and has acquired some property. He pronounces his treatment "shabee." But the atheist drunken anarchist slaps the Congressman on the back and pronounces the arrangement firstrate.

A new society for boys, called by the singular name "Knights Excelsior," has been organized in the Lincoln Park Congregational church of this city. Its aim is to gather in boys of intemperate parents and teach them lessons of industry and good citizenship. This is an excellent, a blessed work, but why go to the lodge to find a name? In it is the beginning of an evil education, preparing these susceptible boys to accept the irreligious principles which such lodge names generally represent. Daniel's band would never have stood their test and been an example for all young men in all time if they had paraded themselves in Babylon as "Knights Excelsior."

Two messages came last week from the Pope. On the anniversary of his coronation he replied to the congratulation of Cardinals in an animated speech, in which he lamented his humiliating position under the Italian government which he bewailed as unbearable. The government did not prohibit the late festival of jubilee, indeed, but not because it did not wish to. No respect for the papacy prevented an interdict. The Catholic world, he said, must understand the situation. No arrangement with the government was possible until the independence of the papacy was restored. The other message is a flattering recognition of the Irish National League in this country. Friday John Fitzgerald, of Lincoln, Nebraska, president of the League, and Patrick Egan, ex-president of the same city, received by mail a special blessing from the Pope. This will encourage them greatly in raising money to keep up the agitation in Ireland. Has the Pope anything to hope from the success of the Parnell movement?

John Bunyan was never, perhaps, in Paris, but he might have borrowed some picture of that city which he had before him when he wrote of "Vanity Fair." Through all her vicissitudes of triumph, siege, revolution, mob, massacre and famine, that gay city still gives a gay world its fashions, and is never satisfied until mankind is staring at some new specimen of her ingenuity or folly. The Masons of France awhile since confounded the order in other lands by audaciously striking out the name of Deity from their ritual. Now they propose (at least the scheme is worthy the order) a peculiar exhibition next year. They are to open a new Pantheon, but it will be a Pandemonium. It will be an exhibition of all religions that exist or have existed on the globe. Idols, monuments, sacred books, etc., etc., are to be gathered for display—a grand fair of devils and their worship. The French government pays one-third the expenses of this horrid show. If only they will not throw a Parisian glamour over the show, but let these religions be seen in all their reality of initiations, bulls, tortures, inquisitorial dungeons and murders, cannibalism, Mormon jugglery, priest-craft and licentiousness, the world might be the better for it. It does men good to see the devil as he is. But these French Masons will make him look like an angel of light, even as their lodges attempt in our own midst.

In connection with this strange conception we find it quoted in an exchange that France, in spite of her republicanism, which one day banishes the Jesuit lodge and next day repents of it, is becoming more and more antagonistic to Christianity. Especially in the matter of education strenuous efforts are made by the authorities to exclude the religious element entirely. The municipal council of Paris recently set apart 12,000 francs to pay a professor of "biological philosophy," who is to demonstrate to the scholars that man cannot have been created by God. Heretofore religious instruction was at least allowed in the public schools of Paris, although parents were charged twenty francs extra per year if their children took part in it. But even this has now been forbidden. The result of the whole matter is that parents with positive religious conviction are taking their children out of the public schools and are establishing private schools, and this is the very game of the priest. Poor people, grinding between the millstones of lodgery and popery!

The great strike of the engineers and firemen on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road opens this week as far from settlement as at first. Every day the managers of the road are engaging scores of men, and by Saturday night had their passenger trains nearly all running and freight had begun to move. They were confident that the road would be under full service in a few days more. Accidents were to have been expected from new and untried men, but few have occurred; no fatalities. Mr. Arthur, of the Engineer's Brotherhood, would have compromised and ordered his men back, but the company refused to turn off the new men to whom they had given pledges. The bitter feeling between the Brotherhood and the Knights of Labor is seen in a statement drawn up by G. L. Eastman, "National Organizer" of the Knights, endorsed by the Reading employes, which accuses Arthur of perpetrating a great wrong on their order, and states by authority that the Knights have adopted the law of retaliation. There are threatenings from the New York and Minneapolis engineers that the whole Brotherhood must be withdrawn from every road in the country if necessary to carry their end. They see that defeat in this great struggle with the Burlington road means a blow to their order from which they will never recover; just as the Wabash strike two years ago was a deadly blow for the Knights of Labor. If they are rash enough to defy the public and stop all traffic by railroad, it may be a blessing by rousing the nation to put down this secretism in the trades. Were it not for this feature of their organization defiance and unreasonableness among men and employers would nearly cease.

THE MORAL ARGUMENT FOR PROHIBITION.

BY REV. R. C. WYLIE.

In the New Princeton Review for July, 1887, is an article by Sanford H. Cobb, entitled "The Theory of Prohibition." The main purpose of the article is to reprove Prohibitionists for using the moral argument in maintaining their position with reference to the liquor traffic. He says the theme naturally falls into two parts; civil law and moral precept. His position is that these two aspects are logically quite distinct and in some respects antagonistic. They have little or nothing in common. Law and morals have nothing to do with each other. This distinction, he says, is continually disregarded. One rarely hears an argument for prohibition that does not draw its strongest plea from moral considerations. He says, "This state of things shows a most lamentable confusion of ideas, resulting in much illogical and unchristian argumentation."

The author admits the possibility of maintaining the principle of prohibition, but denies the propriety of using the moral argument. "The only justifying ground for a prohibitory law, if found at all, must be found in the principles, not of morality, but of political economy." He gives five reasons why the moral argument ought not be used in favor of a prohibitory law.

1. The moral argument either supposes all drinking, and consequently all selling, to be sinful, and should therefore be prohibited by statute, or the abuse of intoxicants by some is sinful, and therefore they should be prohibited to all. He denies that all drinking is sinful, and maintains that to deprive all of the use of intoxicants by statute because some abuse them is a violation of the law of Christian liberty.

2. The moral argument is contrary to Christian morality. Philosophy teaches that you cannot make men virtuous by compulsion, and Christian morality says you ought not to try, and that you should not if you could.

3. The use of the moral argument is a confession of failure or of hopeless weakness on the part of Christianity. It declares that spiritual power must be supplemented by civil law in order to redeem the world.

4. It shows impatience. Those who use it are in too great haste to realize the reign of righteousness.

5. Its advocates do not go far enough. If the state may suppress one sin, because it is sin, it may suppress all other sins for the same reason.

I will not attempt to take up these arguments in order, but will simply set forth the moral argument for prohibition as I understand it. This method will, I think, enable any one to see that it is Mr. Cobb and not Prohibitionists who are illogical, confused and unchristian in argument.

1. The moral argument maintains that it is wrong to license any evil. It is maintained that the saloon system is evil and only evil, and that continually. It has not one redeeming feature. It breaks every precept of the Decalogue. It sets at defiance statute laws designed to suppress or regulate it. It obeys no law except the dictates of selfishness and greed. The only way in which it can be kept within the limits of law is to allow saloonkeepers to dictate the law themselves. It is both a moral and physical evil. It is morally wrong for the state to license evil. Though the traffic were only a material and not a moral evil, it would be morally wrong for the state to license it. This is evident from the nature of license. It has been decided by high legal authority that license implies the right to control, even to the extent of suppressing entirely. By a license law the government assumes responsibility for the traffic. So long as it keeps in the bounds of the law it enjoys the protection of the government. The first step in the moral argument does not at all say, as Mr. Cobb maintains it does, that the traffic should be suppressed because it is sinful. It maintains the sinfulness of the traffic, but upon this fact it simply builds an argument against license. The principle involved is that we are not to be partakers with other men's sins. If it is wrong for me to keep a saloon, it is wrong for me to be a partner with a saloon-keeper in that business, though he does all the buying and selling.

But the government does much more than this. It throws its protection around the saloon, and as far as in its power lies, makes the business respectable. Mr. Cobb makes the mistake of supposing that Prohibitionists never open their mouths except to shout "Prohibition." He thinks they intend every argument to count directly in favor of a prohibitory law. The truth is, there are obstacles in the way of prohibition, and part of their energy is directed against them. It is maintained that if any business is in itself sinful, this, apart from all other considerations, is a reason why the government should protect it.

2. The moral argument declares that it is wrong to make money or derive a revenue from that which is evil. An effort has sometimes been made to justify a license fee, a tax, or a revenue on the ground that it is of the nature of a fine. But a fine is levied for violating law after the deed has been committed. But the license, tax, or revenue is collected upon a business carried on under the sanctions and enjoying the protection of law. The government becomes a partner in the business by deriving financial profit in any of the above-mentioned methods.

3. The moral argument maintains that the state should suppress the traffic in intoxicating drinks because the traffic is a public evil. We wish the position now taken to be clearly understood. We have before declared the traffic to be a moral and physical evil. For both these reasons it should not be licensed, nor should the state derive a revenue from it. We do not now say that the state is bound to prohibit the traffic because it is in itself sinful; but because it is a public evil.

If a thing is evil in itself, we have a reason why the state should not pursue such a course as to become responsible for that sin. This is a reason why secret associations should not be chartered, but no reason for suppressing them. The reason for this is because they are an evil of a public nature. They are a continual menace to the rights of other people, and to the safety of the state itself. The inherent evil of the liquor traffic is all the reason we need for opposing license, tax and revenue, but no reason at all for prohibition. In this Mr. Cobb is right. We must not use an argument for prohibition which proves too much. If the saloon may be suppressed because of the general fact that it has inherent evil qualities, everything else that has inherent evil qualities may be suppressed for the same reason. It thus would become the duty of the state to suppress all moral evil. And as a consequence it should demand all moral good. Mr. Cobb does well to oppose this position. But it is not the position taken by any Prohibitionists, so far as their arguments are known to me. But Mr. Cobb opposes it by taking another position equally untenable. If in the nations of Europe in a past age, governments have gone too far in suppressing moral evil and requiring moral good, and thus became the agents of persecution, many now, like Mr. Cobb, go to the opposite extreme, and rule out all moral questions from the sphere of politics.

Mr. Cobb admits the possibility of the right of the state to prohibit the drink traffic, but not for moral reasons. "The liquor laws have not been, nor could they be enacted because the use or abuse of liquor is immoral, but because the use or abuse of it is injurious to society. If such abuse did not threaten the public peace and create enormous burdens of taxation for the support of courts, prisons, reformatories and asylums; if it were not the fruitful mother of crimes; if the immorality of this abuse were unattended by any material, physical or social ill-consequences, to the jeopardizing of the public good there would be no ground for interference by the state."

On the main position here advocated, namely that the state may suppress the traffic in intoxicants because their abuse is a material evil to the public, we will all agree with Mr. Cobb. But he certainly means to deny that the state may suppress what injuriously affects public morals. On this we disagree with him. Many of our Sabbath laws, our laws against blasphemy, our divorce and anti-polygamy laws are directed against moral evils. Not because they are sins in themselves, but because they affect injuriously the morals of society. Material and moral good and evil are so closely connected in the history of the human family that it is impossible to put them asunder in the argument. It is folly to say the state would have no right to interfere with a moral evil if no material, physical or social ill-consequences resulted. While God sits on the throne, material ill-consequences will fall upon men and nations as a judgment for moral evil. The individual man should be virtuous, both because it is right and to escape the threatened judgment. The state should take care of public morals both to avoid the material ill-consequences, and because it is right to do so. If the state may suppress an evil only because of its material, physical, or social ill-consequences, is it to wait until it is known whether such consequences follow before the act of suppression is resorted to? If so, why may not the state pursue the same course with the social evil, gambling and all other forms of vice? Why does the state suppress the trade in impure literature and forbid its transmission through the mails? Dire consequences of a material, physical and social nature no doubt follow the circulation of this kind of literature, and the state is not foolish enough to try the experiment of violating the law of purity to see what form and degree of judgment God would mete out to it before suppressing it. Does the state suppress in this case solely because of the material, social and physical consequences to be feared? Or has it a regard for the moral state of society? I maintain that the state ought to protect itself from harm, both material and moral. It should protect its citizens, both from material and moral harm. It has a right to crush out an evil whether material or moral, just at the point where it affects injuriously the rights, material or moral, of citizens or of the state itself.

4. The moral argument maintains that the suppression of the liquor traffic is a service the state is bound to render the cause of public morals. Mr. Cobb says that the principle involved in prohibition is adverse to the spirit, the method, and the aim of Christian morals. While Christian morals desire and seek the reduction of vice and the promotion of virtue, it is adverse to the method of prohibition by law. "The ideal of Christian manhood is in spiritual and moral power; in inward, gracious strength, not external safeguards; in the self-control of manly virtue; not in continuous pupilage to superior restrictive negations; in the victory that overcometh the world, not the safety of the coward who runs away from the battle."

Along with some things which are true in this quotation there is more that is utterly wrong, and the argument it contains is utterly fallacious. After every temptation to vice is removed that can be removed, there is still opportunity enough left to develop "ideal Christian manhood," to exercise the "self-control of manly virtue" and to obtain "the victory over the world." There will still be enough of the "world" left for us all to fight. There will still be altogether too much of it for some. The development of virtue does not demand that we be exposed to such an overshadowing curse as the drink evil. It is well for virtue to be tried. "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations." But the trouble with the saloon is that it takes hold of the young and tries them before they have any virtue. It utterly precludes Christianity from any fair opportunity to develop Christian manhood. Prohibition would restore to the church the chance of which the saloon has robbed her. Mr. Cobb is utterly mistaken in saying that this is opposed to the spirit of Christian morals. Is Christianity antagonistic to the idea, the ends and methods of civil government? If Mr. Cobb is right, it is. But this is an utter misapprehension of the origin and idea of government and the spirit of Christianity. The church and the state are of the same divine origin. They occupy different spheres and employ different methods. But there is no sort of antagonism between them. The church may say, "I employ no force. My weapons are spiritual, but the state may use force, and I instruct my members, as civil officers, to employ the arm of law to suppress evils that injuriously affect the public. I even require that the state, instead of putting barriers in my way in licensing and protecting evil, give me as clear a field as possible?"

Suppose we admit that the duty of removing vice devolves exclusively upon the church. Must the state make this task as hard as possible by shielding and upholding vice and making it respectable? May this be done on the plea that the result will be a higher type of "Christian manhood?" Can we excuse such a course by saying that though fewer will be virtuous, they will have a more "manly virtue" because of gaining the victory over a more terrible foe? This is what Mr. Cobb's argument implies.

In opposition to all this it is enough to say that while the methods of the state are not the same as those of the church they are not unchristian or anti-Christian. In fact, the state exists in the providence of God as a servant of Christian morality. The nation and kingdom that will not serve the church is threatened with ruin. Instead of Christian morality being in antagonism to the principle of prohibition, it really demands it. It demands as clear a field for the putting forth of its power as possible. True, it can do wonders in the midst of difficulties, but the difficulties are not desirable, they act as a hindrance. God has ordained the state to be the right arm of power in the work of subduing the world to his Son. "The powers that be are ordained of God. Rulers are not a terror to good works but to the evil. If thou do that which is evil, be afraid, for he beareth not the sword in vain?"

5. Finally, the moral argument requires that the law of God be taken as the standard of legislation on all moral issues that arise in the political sphere. We have heard it until our ears are weary of the sound, that expediency is the rule to be followed by the state. Now it is true that the rule of expediency has much to do in the political sphere, but when expediency is set over against the moral law and the state required to choose, we say let expediency be thrown to the dogs.

Webster defines expediency as "fitness or suitableness to effect a purpose intended, desirableness, advantage." As a secondary meaning he gives the "quality of aiming at selfish or inferior good at the expense of that which is higher; self-interest, self-seeking, often opposed to moral rectitude." In which of these senses is it the rule of action for the state? If in the second, we must repudiate the position entirely. If in the first, the moral law is still to be the standard of legislation on moral issues. I apprehend that what is meant by the advocates of expediency is, that the state is to be guided by what will conduce to the well-being of the state. It is to legislate not with a view to what is right or wrong, but with a view to what will be for the public good. I think there is much confusion here in the minds of many. As we have already shown, the moral law does not determine what subjects are proper for legislation. Some questions of morals are not in the political sphere. If the moral law were the guide, therefore, in determining the sphere of legislation, nothing in the whole field of morals would be excluded. Expediency in the best sense is to determine what the sphere of legislation is. It may also determine the form of the legislation on questions of an economic character.

But suppose expediency decides that we must have legislation on a moral question. May we then oppose expediency to the moral law, and lay the latter aside? Mr. Cobb and many others will say that every such question has a material as well as a moral side, and only the material side comes into politics. Let us see. The state makes law on the divorce question. Christ made a law on the same question "Every one that putteth away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adulteress." When the state becomes a party to the separation of husband and wife for other reasons, is there no violation of this law? No theory of government can practically banish morals from the political sphere. Though expediency may determine when a moral issue is in politics, when it is once in, the moral law is to be the standard of legislation.

Applying this reasoning to the liquor traffic, it becomes evident that expediency in the best sense is to determine when we need law on the liquor traffic, but it cannot determine fully the kind of law. The moral law comes in and forbids any infraction of its precepts in the name of expediency. It therefore forbids license, high or low, tax, revenue or any other device by which the public treasuries are filled with the price of blood, and schools of crime protected by law and barriers placed in the way of the church. Let Prohibitionists use the moral argument for all it is worth. It is the only argument that will reach the conscience. And what we need in politics is conscience. It is the only effective weapon against high license. And the means which Satan is now using most effectively to deceive the nation is high license.

Concerning communion wine, we commend the following to the learned brethren who insist upon the fermented article as necessary to the perfection of the service. Dr. Ellis, of this city, says that while in Egypt he "visited the American missionaries at Cairo, and was told by them that when they told the Copts, who are the descendants of the early Christians of Egypt, that the Western churches were in the habit of using fermented, or 'shop-wine,' as the Copts called it, as a communion-wine, 'they were horrified at the idea.' One of the missionaries said that the wine used by the societies under their charge was prepared by the Copts, who were members, by soaking raisins in water and pressing the juice from them. The day cannot be far distant when the members of the Christian churches of our land will be as much horrified at the idea of using an intoxicating wine at the most Holy Supper as are the poor, isolated, down-trodden remnants of the early Christian church in Egypt.—Baptist Weekly.

TANGLED TALK.

It is now a number of years since I first recognized that "secret societies are a powerful factor in social, political, and sometimes, I am afraid, in religious life."

It was on this wise: A cousin, a fine, manly, but Christless man, pursuing a lucrative profession, urged me to become a Freemason. The Word of God is the young man's guide (Ps. 119: 9). That saved me. At once, certain of the divine principles which had been lying more or less dormant, became aroused—yea, more, combatative. As they slowly cooled and crystalized, they took the form of many other crystals, hecagonal.

1. "For Christ's sake," "doing all to the glory of God," is the motto of every true Christ-child. Could I serve my Master more efficiently by becoming a Mason? The lodge met in a saloon ("The Black Ball"). Many of its representative men were inimical to piety, and patrons of the dram-shop. Thus I concluded that I could not help Christ's cause amid such environment.

2. Separation. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate." This would have truly been, and I know was a mixed multitude. So I turned to Nehemiah 13: 3. That settled it. O! what unholy alliances exist to-day, which even have a moral and elevating aim, but because of their Christic and Satanic elements, lack cohesion, and are but ropes of sand. Do not evil that good may come. O! that Christians would work only on the lines laid down in the Word.

3. Christless. "Whatsoever is not of faith is of sin." No faith, because no Christ for faith to trust in. I say no faith, advisedly. I know that the great lesson of all secret societies, and of Masonry in particular, is faith—BUT FAITH IN MAN. A mistaken faith is often worse than none at all.

4. Secret. The real, best and most valuable secret, the Lord's, is for the true man. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." In fact, it is an open secret. But just here is the foolishness of the secret society devotee. He keeps his valuable knowledge to himself. My friend, if these secrets be as valuable as you think they are, be a true philanthropist, be really benevolent and enrich the world with them. We cry in vain, but console ourselves. "The world by its wisdom knew not God."

5. Fraudulent. Benevolence is the great object of secret societies. Benevolence and morality—twin angels—the highest attributes of Deity, and the especial characteristics of the secret orders! Avaunt! How wicked! The very portions of humanity which need these blessings are denied them by Freemasonry. Come in, thou poor, sightless one, thou who hast never seen the light. Thou askest bread. They give thee a stone. Come in, thou poverty stricken. Dost thou ask a fish? Lo, here is a serpent. Come in, thou Ethiopian. Thou desirest an egg. Behold, a scorpion! Where are the ameliorating agencies of Freemasonry? Echo answers, Where?

6. Blasphemous. They usurp the throne of religion. The devil is an angel of light. Anti-Christ is veiled as Jesus.

Sometime ago I received a letter from two men personally known by me as two of the profanest of a fearfully profane town. They were the chaplains of two respective secret organizations. They asked me to conduct a united religious service over a number of bodies which had been suddenly quieted by the after-damp of a colliery explosion. Of course I declined. I saw them at the grave-yard. They were quarreling profanely for priority. Yet shortly afterward they dared impiously to turn their faces God-ward and address Him who is of too pure eyes to behold iniquity. Their service (burial) makes every member of the order a Christian; asks that God may give grace to follow the departed to the realms of light! Only one of those dead was known to be friendly to Christ. One who had been an influential member of a lodge, now a corpse, had publicly wished me and all Christians in hell but two days before, and I was requested to unite with those chaplains in seeking grace to follow the man to the realms of light? or the shades of Gehenna? Oh, what a patient God is ours! I feel jealous for him with a great jealousy. But I must leave off and ask you, good readers, at some other time to listen to "ORION."

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

THE DEBATE OF TUESDAY, FEB. 21.

REPORTED BY THE SECRETARY, REV. A. W. PARRY.

The hour appointed for the discussion of the question, "Resolved, that Freemasonry is not an anti-Christian institution," having arrived, by request of president Milligan, Rev. L. N. Stratton took the chair. After the agreement had been read, C. F. Ladd, "Grand Master," arose and said: "As I understand it, in this discussion no reference is to be made to the inner workings of the order, nor are any of the secrets to be revealed."

J. P. Stoddard replied: "I do not so understand it. The fraternity are at liberty to pursue what course they please; we do not require them to tell any of their secrets. We ought to have the privilege of pursuing what course we please in our discussion of this question."

Mr. Ladd assented to this, and the time of each speaker was limited to thirty minutes.

Rev. Marcus Dale, an M. E. pastor in the city, was called on to open the debate. He requested that the proposition to be discussed should be put in the positive form, so that he might know the arguments aganist the lodge; it might result in his conversion. He was not present to antagonize merely, he desired to know the truth. This suggestion was readily assented to, and Rev. J. S. T. Milligan opened the debate.

He said that Freemasonry was not designed to be a Christian institution. It was not conducted in the name or spirit of Christ. The spirit of Christianity is expressed in the following Scriptures: "Come out from among them and be separate." "Whatsoever ye do, whether in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." "Go ye into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind." "Swear not at all." "In secret have I said nothing." "Let your light so shine before men that they, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father which is in heaven." Freemasonry is opposed to these Divine principles. It is a fraternity of ministers, saloon keepers, assassins, Jews and Mohammedans. It rejects the mediation of Jesus Christ, the source of all authority and power. It is unmasonic to use that name, which is above every name, in the prayers and ritual of the order. It excludes the halt, the blind, and every one who has a physical defect. It is a system that requires all initiated into it to swear that they "will always conceal and never reveal," and binds the obligation with horrid and brutal oaths; and while it claims to be a true handmaid to religion, still hides its light under a bushel, and behind closed doors.

Rev. Marcus Dale was then called, and opened the debate for the fraternity. He said: I have not been here before to listen to the brethren in their discussion of this question. I desired to have the subject opened by the other side, thinking perhpas that I might be convinced. But I am not yet converted, and I am as fully persuaded as I was when I came here that Freemasonry is not anti-Christian in its character. The speaker just now said that the name of Jesus Christ was eliminated from the prayers of our order. There are degrees that are founded upon the crucifixion of Christ; no Jew or unbeliever in the Christian religion can enter those degrees. No, sir, it is not true that the order rejects Jesus Christ. All men who join come of their own free will, their right of private judgment is not interfered with. I can prove from the Bible that there is nothing wrong in secrecy. Solomon says: "A tale-bearer revealeth secrets, but he that is of a faithful spirit concealeth the matter." "A prudent man concealeth knowledge; but the heart of fools proclaimeth foolishness." Your president said that the order had oaths; I say that the best men that ever lived took oaths. Abram, the father of the faithful, said to his eldest servant, "Swear by the Lord God of heaven that thou shalt not take a wife unto my son of the daughters of the Canaanites among whom I dwell." Solomon said in his prayer at the dedication of the temple, "If any man tresspass against his neighbor, and an oath be laid upon him to cause him to swear," etc. Moses says if a neighbor loses an ox "take an oath." Ezekiel says, "Go tell them as I live, saith the Lord." This was an oath. God does not want us to take false oaths. Much has been said about coming out from among them and being separate. Jesus Christ came among sinners. He never could have saved them if he had not done so. The mission of the church is to save sinners. Suppose we come out, where would the poor sinners be? We must get close to the sinners if we would save them. We must put the leaven in the meal. This institution of Freemasonry is very ancient, and began in erecting magnificent fabrics and edifices. It teaches that God is the Creator of all men and things. A Mason can never be atheistical.

During this address the friends of the lodge applauded frequently, and thought that the argument produced was unanswerable. They were, however, surprised when J. F. Browne, principal of Howe Institute, New Iberia, followed, and in a cool and emphatic manner showed up the fallacies of the last speaker's position.

He said: Freemasonry professes to make men good. Mr. Dale admits that bad men belong to it; it is, therefore, a failure. I propose to prove from Masonic authorities that the name of Christ is left out because it is un-Masonic to use it. Christ is not left out of anything where he is put in. He then quoted from Webb's and Sickle's monitors and Mackey's Ritualist to show that in 1 Peter 2: 3, 4, 5, 6, and 2 Thess. 3: 6, 12, the omission was an intentional one. As to there being degrees where the name of Christ is permitted, I acknowledge it. This is in what is known as the Knight Templar degrees. The highest Masonic authorities (here he read from them) claim that the Knights and the chapter degrees are not a part of Masonry. The use they make of the crucifixion scene is merely a drama, a mimic theater, a sacrilegious performance. A man has to take a number of degrees from which Christ is excluded, before he reaches Knight Templarism. Dr. Pierson says in his "Traditions," page 30, "If we would be Masons we must yield private judgment." When a candidate approaches the door of the lodge room, with a hoodwink over his eyes, a cable-tow around his neck or his body, and in a half-clad condition, he does surrender his right to private judgment. It was said by Rev. Mr. Dale that it was necessary that a tyler stand at the door to keep out improper characters. But, brethren, the same tyler stands there to keep out the D. D. and the good Baptist deacon, as well as the libertine. There is no discrimination.

Rev. Marcus Dale came forward to speak again, as Rev. Mr. Hurley, who was expected, was not present.

He said: This rejection of Jesus Christ is an important point. Now we all know that in English grammar we have what we call ellipsis. Prolong it a little and you get the preposition and the noun. Now if the name of Christ is omitted it is merely an ellipsis. The landmarks of Freemasonry point to Christ.

This statement caused considerable merriment among the brethren of the convention, and even the speaker laughed, and evidently did not believe his own statement.

He said further: A man cannot accept of God without accepting of Jesus Christ. Adam, Seth, Noah, and Abram were all Masons. Seth erected two pillars, and engraved upon them the truths contained in Masonry.

Here the speaker seemed to be at a loss for something to say, and closed with a flowery tribute to the institution; telling us that it would, like "Moses's bush, be unconsumed in fire;" and notwithstanding the hatred of men would survive the "wreck of matter and the crash of worlds." Mr. Dale occupied but fifteen minutes of the time allotted to him, and sat down amid the cheers of the fraternity.

The third speaker for the affirmative was Elder R. N. Countee of Memphis, a seceding Mason. He said: The cause you are trying to defend must be a glorious one, when you can find only one man to speak in its behalf. You claim to be defending secrets. These secrets have been exposed since Morgan's time, a space of sixty-seven years. I think in the defence of secrets you are too late. The secrets of all these orders are dead horses. These orders are every one of them swindling institutions. They tend to deception. You can buy at the door books, sold by this Association, for seventy-five cents which contain all that I or you ever got for twenty dollars. Now the lodge cheated me, and it cheats everyone of you, out of nineteen dollars and twenty-five cents. We, as a race, have emerged from one slavery to another. The former was nothing compared with this tyranny. We are here to discuss principles, not men; to give a post mortem examination of the system. We are here to frown down these anti-Christian institutions. Freemasonry is a religion; it has its altar, worship, priests, and prayers. Often a horse jockey is the Most Worshipful Master. A gambler often says prayers. An unclean and ungodly man is sometimes the bearer of the Bible in the public processions. I ask, is this the religion of Jesus Christ, who was holy and separate from sinners? No; this is a false religion.

These scathing statements produced a stir in the files of the brotherhood, which caused some noise and clamor for a little time. Grand Master C. F. Ladd and Rev. Marcus Dale arose and requested the members of their order to be quiet and listen patiently to the speaker on the floor. This was very commendable in these gentlemen. Had it not been for their timely advice and the firmness of President Stratton, we should have had a Masonic uproar. When the turmoil had ceased Bro. Countee proceeded.

He said: There are but few of our colored men that know what Freemasonry is. The brethren of the fraternity have violated their obligation in inviting and participating in this discussion.

At this point in the address some persons present undertook to stop the speaker, who, thinking it best to desist from further remarks, after expressing his good will for those present, took his seat.

Mr. C. F. Ladd was the next speaker for the lodge. He said: I am very sorry that the little unpleasantness has occurred. It is unfortunate that the Association put Bro. Countee up to debate this question. I expected the brethren would not listen to him. Bro. Countee is right when he said that if our first lesson had been heeded we would have kept away from this discussion. It is un-Masonic to speak or debate this question. On entering a lodge a man has to recognize a supreme being. We receive in our lodges in this State no one who is a liar, thief, or gambler. It seems to me that if such was the complexion of the lodges in Tennessee, Bro. Countee, after having had the offices so long, should have brought it up on a higher plane. We are a handmaid of Christianity. Masonry was established long before Christ, hence cannot recognize him. We claim to be a society, not a religion. This system prepares men for the world to come. There are seven degrees in Masonry, and no Jew can become a Knight. If Masonry were not a handmaid of religion, it would have been destroyed long ago. We purpose, in our ceremonies, to bring men from darkness to light, and to free them from sin.

Mr. Ladd here called on Col. Lewis, a hotel-keeper, to finish for the defence.

Mr. Lewis said: I think the Masons have made a good defence, and one which no one can overthrow. We have our opinions, and I presume we will adhere to them. I am surprised that, with the ability these men manifest, they did not discuss this question with men of the white race. We have these shows coming and going. Here we have a show of cheap literature. In all these cheap shows they must have some actor. Mr. Countee seems to be the clown and the actor for this show. Mr. Countee's record is known by us, and we could read it to you if it was necessary. If it was not for these secret organizations, we could not look after our poor, nor bury our dead. Our organizations ameliorate and allay the unfortunate and sad conditions we find in society. One of the objections raised here was that the name of Christ is not mentioned. We don't find the name of Christ in the Lord's prayer. Such an objection is too silly for me to speak of. If this Association wishes to sell cheap literature, you are on the right track. Keep at it.

Rev. J. S. T. Milligan spoke again for the affirmative.

He said: We have had here to-day a specimen of the order observed in the lodge. Christ is "Our Father which is in heaven." Isaiah said of him, that he should be called "The Everlasting Father." The peculiar characteristic of early Christians was that they offered prayers to Christ. Every dollar invested in massive Masonic temples, paraphernalia, and lodge dues drains from the funds of the church. If Freemasonry is a handmaid to Christianity it should put itself in subordination to Christ, who has the "government upon his shoulders." The facts are that it teaches salvation by obedience to Masonic law instead of faith in Christ. Where are these two pillars to which reference has been made by the opposition? Who has got them? What we want is "lively stones," built up in a spiritual house. The Jews were before Christ. He came to them and they rejected him. They did it to their own injury. Freemasonry purposely rejects the Son of God, as shown by the highest Masonic authorities. We believe in judicial oaths, and all of the oaths referred to in the Bible are judicial. They are in the name of the Deity. The oath of Moses had reference to civil jurisprudence, not to "always conceal and never reveal." We object to the character of Masonic oaths. They are extra-judicial. No one has a right to administer an oath but the civil magistrate, the power ordained of God. These oaths have appended to them the most fearful penalties, to be inflicted on those who violate their vows. In the fifth libation the candidate drinks wine out of a human skull, and in connection with it drinks to himself double damnation. The Christian religion is not propagated by the sword. The Knight Templars swear to defend it with such an instrument. How contrary to the teachings of the Prince of Peace.

At the conclusion of Bro. Milligan's address Mr. Ladd arose and stated that the agreement had been met, and so far as the fraternity was concerned the debate was ended. Some of their number retired from the room, but most of them remained to hear Prof. J. F. Browne make the closing speech for the affirmative. This address was a very able one, and consisted of quotations from the most reliable Masonic authorities, answering every objection raised by the champions of the fraternity. Bro. Browne has wonderful power as a debater, and when he strikes he hits hard. This speech settled the question with several who up to this time had been unconvinced.

The scene that followed will never be forgotten. It was two o'clock, and most of us were tired and hungry; but one after another testified, so that we did not adjourn until five o'clock P. M. It is impossible to report all the testimonies that were given in defence of the truth. I note only a few.

Rev. M. C. B. Mason, pastor of Mallalieu M. E. chapel, stepping up to Bro. Countee and grasping his hand, said: Dear brother, the sympathy of all God-fearing people is with you. I want to share with you in your persecution. I have been a Mason, but never knew until to-day that it was un-Masonic to use the name of Christ in the lodge. I am out, never to return. There are yet 7,000 people who have not bowed the knee to Baal.

Rev. A. S. Jackson, pastor of Common Street Baptist church, and ex-Deputy Grand Master and Chaplain of the Masonic lodge, then addressed the body and made some very emphatic statements. Bro. Jackson is Grand Master Ladd's pastor, and has been associated with him in the work of initiating several of the brethren, who were present, into the sublime (?) degrees of Freemasonry. He is the leading Baptist minister in the city of New Orleans, and, therefore, his actions and words carry with them a great deal of weight. Among some of the excellent things he said were these: "I have come to a definite conclusion in regard to this matter. I have been opposed for some time to the outside workings of secret orders. From henceforth, by the help of God, I will preach against secretism and all sin, as I know it. I take this stand, not because these brethren are white. It was Bro. Countee's trouble that converted me. The bullet that he carries in his head, shot by the hand of a would-be assassin and would-be Mason, or instigated by the fraternity, killed all the Masonry in me. If I must go as Stephen did, as the early Christian preachers did, I am willing. With Paul, I am ready to die for the Lord Jesus. I am not afraid to be sacrificed for the sake of the truth, for I have confidence in the power of truth. I am going to combat this thing, not as a bully but as a Christian. I am being girded with Divine strength. Brethren, I am glad you came. You have done us good."

Rev. J. Lindsay, a licentiate preacher in the Baptist church, arose at this point and said that he had been converted during the debate. He thanked the Lord and the brethren for bringing to him this light.

Bro. McKeever, a Baptist deacon, said he was convinced of the wrong of secret orders, because of their balls and wine suppers, and it was to him the "seat of the scornful." I am glad to see these ministers coming out.

Rev. J. F. Marshall, presiding elder in the M. E. church, said that he had spoken to a great number of ministers, regarding the work of the N. C. A., and the object of this convention, and only three had spoken against it.

Revs. Davis, Green, Bradford, Lyon, Claiborne, Evans, Clay, Davidson, Davis, and several others gave in their testimony against the lodge and those that belonged to the order said that they would from this time sever all allegiance to secret organizations.

Rev. M. L. Berger, D. D., Professor of Theology in Straight University, with his devoted Christian wife encouraged us very much with their presence, and gave us hearty endorsement. Just before the close of this interesting service Dr. Berger stepped to the front and made some very appropriate remarks. He said: I have no inside knowledge of secrecy. President Garfield told me, when a student at Williams College, that there was a great deal about secret societies that was clannish. I have no quarrel with any man, but I have with the institution. I believe it does the church harm. It is the duty of the church to look after its sick and dying. It is the height of impertinence for any organization to come in between the pastor and the people. While I was laboring in San Francisco I attended a funeral at the Masonic temple. The Chaplain of the lodge undertook to read a portion of Scripture, but he was so inebriated that he could not read without making serious mistakes. I was disgusted. We must get away from these affiliations of darkness; away from these grips and secret signs. They should have no place in our Republic. It is our duty to enlighten the people, and show them how these secret orders interfere with the church. Dr. Hitchcock has truly said: "The church is the mother of all reform." All secret combinations, no matter what their profession may be, are useless in their character. We can do better without than with them.

The following resolutions were then offered and adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this audience that the proposition, "Resolved that Freemasonry is an anti-Christian institution, has been fully sustained."

Four persons only voted in the negative. Secretary Stoddard presented the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That we commend the candor and fairness shown by Mr. C. F. Ladd, in inviting and participating in a discussion of the Masonic system, and while extending to him our thanks for the past, we express the hope that the discussion will become general, and will always be conducted in a Christian spirit.

A vote of thanks was tendered J. P. Stoddard and H. H. Hinman for their faithful labors in working up this convention, also Rev. G. W. Bothwell and the trustees of Central Church, for the use of their church edifice.

President J. Blanchard made some farewell remarks, in which he referred to the apparent insult offered by Col. Lewis. He was deeply moved, and it was with difficulty that he could give utterance to his thoughts. Every one was deeply effected by the words of this devoted and faithful servant of Jesus Christ.

Rev. Bradford took up the thought, and in a most eloquent and earnest manner expressed the kind feelings of the colored people toward the white men who were so deeply interested in their welfare.

After a little miscellaneous business and prayer, this day's work was ended.

As near as the secretary could ascertain, between forty and fifty Christian ministers, representing the Baptist, Congregational, Methodist and independent churches of the city, put themselves on record, most of them for the first time, as enemies to the lodge and all that is anti-Christian. A Methodist pastor, himself a Mason, remarked to the writer that the convention was the death blow to secretism among the colored people in the South; for, said he, all the men that give moral tone to these orders have left, or will now do so.

SECRETARY STODDARD'S ACCOUNT.

New Orleans, Feb. 24, 1888.

If to attempt the impossible is presumption, I ought not to venture upon an effort to convey any adequate idea of the last session of the grand convention which closed here Tuesday afternoon. It began by fervent prayer and closed with victory and shouting, and the echoes are still heard among the churches. Each meeting was characterized by a devotional spirit, and while arguments were strong and testimonies pointed, there was scarcely an unfortunate word or untimely expression on the part of an N. C. A. speaker from first to last, to mar the effect of truth, and give the opposition advantage.

The debate was, however, the feature of the occasion. It did more to establish the doubting and bring the wavering to take a decided stand than all that preceded. There was from the first a marked increase of interest; but the acceptance of Grand Master Ladd's tender of a discussion by the N. C. A., with arrangement for a special session to accommodate the "brethren," gave a new impetus to the movement. The attendance was largely increased, and an opportunity thus afforded to reach some who had stood aloof until the hour for discussion came.

The two opening addresses, both affirmative and negative, received respectful attention, and it was only when Bro. Countee took the stand that the boisterous element came to the surface. After several interruptions Bro. Countee wisely, I think, declined to proceed; when Mr. Ladd spoke briefly and with apparent candor and sincerity. He was followed by Col. Lewis, a politician hotel-keeper (with a bar attached), and making no pretensions to Christianity, who spoke like a "rabble-rousing politician," saying some very bitter things. At the close of this speech the opposition seemed, by common consent, to rest their case, and the rougher element withdrew, with the apparent purpose of "stampeding" the audience. If such was their purpose it was a signal failure. Quiet being restored, Bros. Milligan and Browne brought forth their strong reasons, while the men of brain and piety listened and were convinced.

When the time came to hear from the "pews," a a scene began which surpasses description. The entire audience was moved by one spirit, and a half-score and more were on their feet at the same time, seeking recognition by the chair. Renunciation after renunciation came in quick succession, and one after another of the "strong young men" walked to Bro. Countee, and, while grasping his hand in theirs, avowed their hatred of what they had once loved, in words that would grace the speech of a Fred. Douglass or John B. Gough, and some even asked to share the approbrium that had been heaped upon him, and pledged their lives in defence of his person and his right to speak.

It was a scene long to be remembered; and while I cannot give the number who renounced and testified against the secret system, I feel safe in putting it at more than twenty-five. It was a staggering blow to the opposition, and they are beginning to realize it. Bro. Countee had been engaged to preach in Bro. Jackson's church in the evening, but under the circumstances it was deemed by his friends the part of prudence that he should not appear again in public at present, and a number of the pastors and friends accompanied him to the depot, where, with Bro. Milligan, he left for his home on a 5:30 P. M. train. Bro. Jackson explained to his people why Bro. Countee was absent and left results for the Lord's ordering. It is fairly presumable that even the bad cause of secrecy will gain little credit in New Orleans or elsewhere by attempting the suppression of free speech, and resorting to threats of violence if a man and minister dares preach the preaching that his Master bids him.

Bro. Francis J. Davidson has been of great service to the cause here, and is now canvassing among the churches and ministers with tracts and Cynosures. The expense of this convention will be nearly or quite $200 in excess of receipts, but I feel that no money has been better invested, and I trust some of the friends who are able will send what they are willing to give to Treasurer W. I. Phillips, Chicago. The African M. E Conference is now in session in this city, Bishop A. W. Wayman, D. D., presiding. I dropped in a few moments and was introduced to the Bishop, and by him to the conference, and hope to spend some time with them later when they get fairly organized. J. P. STODDARD.

REFORM NEWS.

THE SOUTHERN LECTURER HOME FOR A VACATION.

Florida's Chautauqua—Savannah's Gala day—Impressions of the National Convention—The Estimation of Freemasonry among the Negroes—Washington Notes.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Feb. 23, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I left New Orleans at 8:10 P. M. of the 21st and reached here in a little over twenty-four hours by a very pleasant route. One of the finest places I saw was De Funiak Springs, West Florida, where is the Florida Chautauqua. We stopped twenty-five minutes and saw a young city made up of large new buildings and in striking contrast with many of the sordid little places that are stuck here and there in the pine woods. There were assembled the elite of the literary and religious world. It was easy to see from their countenances and appearance that they were superior people. A band of music entertained us while we stayed. The place has many rural attractions.

At Savannah I found all the hotels crowded to their utmost capacity. President Cleveland had just left, and to-day is a grand procession in honor of Sergeant Jasper, of Revolutionary memory. I got in at a respectable boarding house, but in the night a drunken man, who had mistaken my bed for his own, came, and with curses and threatenings attempted to pull me out. I had to alarm the whole house; but finally he said he would forgive me for getting into his bed, and hoped he hadn't hurt my feelings.

This morning I visited Beech Institute, the school of the A. M. A. They have about 250 students under the care of Miss Holmes, assisted by six other teachers. By invitation I addressed the students on the lodge question and had most respectful attention. I also called on the Congregational pastor, Rev. L. B. Maxwell, a graduate of Atlanta University, and a cultured gentleman. He expressed sympathy and interest in our work. This is one of the most beautiful of the Southern cities, and I expect, God willing, to visit it again and address some of the large colored churches, some of which number several thousand members. To-day the city, notwithstanding the rain, is covered with bunting and greatly enjoying the display. I go from here to Charleston, Wilmington, Richmond and Washington.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The New Orleans convention served to demonstrate both the strength and the weakness of the secret lodge system. Its strength was manifested in keeping many away by all the various forms of terrorism that it knows how to exercise over its members, and those dependent on its patronage. This kept away large numbers who were expected to attend and influenced many who, as pastors of churches, were much in sympathy with the objects for which we met. Race prejudice kept many away. It was hardly to be expected that a mixed convention in a Southern city would be attended by many white people. Nevertheless the attendance was fair and a number of the white city pastors came in and expressed their sympathy with our work. Their weakness was shown in their evident surprise that their system should be attacked, and their utter inability to adopt any line of defence. Most of those connected with these orders had never heard of any objections to the system, except on account of the abuses which grow out of it. These were supposed to pertain to the minor societies. With great unanimity, the people have regarded Freemasonry as very ancient, thoroughly religious and highly respectable. I have been repeatedly told how King Solomon and Saint John the Baptist and Evangelist (you know) were Masons, "and so were all the good men of ancient and modern times." The only line of defence that colored Masons have been called to take is that their Masonry is just as ancient and honorable, and comes from the same source as the white man's. When they found that this was conceded, and that the attack on the system was because of its relations to Christianity and the Christian church, they were utterly confounded.

I was greatly interested in the experience of Bro. W. B. Stoddard in the lecture field in Ohio. On one occasion he found that the more clearly he proved the Masonic system to be anti-Christian, the better pleased were the Masons and their sympathizers. Why should they not feel so? They manifestly hated Christ and habitually blasphemed his name; and why should they find fault with a system that put intentional dishonor on him?

I have had similar experience on several occasions, but not so in the South. Faulty as is the character of Southern people in many respects, they have their virtues; and all, both white and colored, especially the latter, pay at least an outward respect to Christianity and its Divine Lord. When they found that it was Freemasonry especially that was assailed, the Grand Master supposed himself quite able to defend it, and expected an easy victory. He, with others, had supposed that if Freemasonry, like the Roman Pantheon, made room for Christianity, in common with the other religions of the world it could not be opposed to it. The mistake was the same that all men make who do not understand Christianity. It asks not a place, but the place: that "the kingdom shall be given to the saints of the Most High and that they shall possess the kingdom." When it was plainly shown that Masonry purposely ruled out the name of the Divine Master from its hymns, its prayers and its Scripture readings, the effect was most powerful and convincing.

Nor could the argument against being "unequally yoked together with unbelievers," be any more successfully opposed. Of course this argument has no weight with those who do not profess to belong to the Christian church. They have no occasion to "come out from among them and be separate." But to the professed Christian it has great force. No sophistry can justify their uniting in another brotherhood which is NOT the brotherhood of Christ, and another religious worship in which unbelievers as well as believers are expected to unite.

For these reasons I think the South altogether the more hopeful field for the prosecution of our reform. There, as elsewhere, the field is "white already for the harvest." In this city the difficulties are far greater. These men and women may have good standing in the church and fill important positions though they visit the theaters, dance, play at cards, drink wine, or attend the lodge. To those whose moral vision is so dim that they can see no harm in some of these, it is not expected that they will see much harm in others.

The question of amusements was discussed yesterday in the Sabbath-school of the First Presbyterian church, and the conclusion reached was that these were all matters about which Christians differ, and that every one should do what is right in his own eyes, and no one should question his privilege to do so. Why they should not accord the same right of conscience to the Mormon polygamist was not explained. Nevertheless the anti-secrecy reform has made a marked progress in this city. In the Central Union Mission, where there come together the most earnest and aggressive Christians, there is but one opinion as to the character and influence of the lodge system. Strangers who visit the city sometimes speak of some of the secret orders in a way which implies no disapproval; but among the regular Christian workers, they are not unfrequently talked about.

The death of W. W. Corcoran, the millionaire philanthropist, is the special and sad topic of interest. To-day he is being followed to the grave. He was eminently respected in private life, gave largely to benevolent objects, and on several occasions rendered important aid to the National Government. No one claims that he gained his great wealth by illegitimate means, or that he oppressed the poor. Nevertheless, it will not be forgotten that his sympathies were with the rebellion to such an extent that he incurred the just suspicion of being an enemy to the government. It is said that nothing but the personal friendship of Charles Sumner saved his property from confiscation. Doubtless this was an error of judgment which the people of this city have long since condoned. The great Art Gallery and the Louise Home will remain as noble monuments of his munificence.

One of the far-reaching effects of the Edmond's Act for the suppression of polygamy in Utah, is that it is made an efficient means for the suppression of vice in this city. There have been a number of arrests recently, and it is greatly to be hoped that Mr. Edmonds and the National Congress built more wisely than they knew, since they aimed a boomarang at Utah, which strikes back at the filthiness of this wicked place. If Senator Platt's Prohibition bill shall become a law, there will have been made an immense stride in the direction of moral improvement. H. H. HINMAN.

THE IOWA REPORT.

GOOD MEETINGS IN MONROE COUNTY.

Feb. 23, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Oskaloosa I came to Hickory in Monroe county, and called upon that staunch friend of reform, Henry Elder, at whose house I am always made welcome. From there I went to Avery and visited Rev. Mr. Thompson, the pastor of the Hickory Grove Covenanter church, and also Mr. Acheson, the pastor of the Seceder church near Hickory Station.

It was arranged that I should preach in Avery, in the Miner's Institute, a hall that is occupied on the Sabbath by the M. E. church. By the evening of Sabbath the appointment had become well circulated, and a good audience was out to hear the Word.

An appointment was made for a general discussion of the lodge question on Tuesday night, at which time Rev. Mr. Acheson opened the meeting with prayer. I then addressed the meeting, and was followed by Rev. Mr. Thompson and Mr. Acheson. Questions also were asked and remarks made by some of the Methodist brethren, who were Knights of Labor.

According to appointments made, I went the next night to Half-way Prairie and lectured and dis-

CORRESPONDENCE.

STANDING BY THE TRUTH IN NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 27, 1888.

Masonry has long been hideous to me, but I am learning more of its brutal and barbarous nature every time its true inwardness comes to the light. It was with great pleasure and profit that I listened to a sermon last evening by Rev. A. S. Jackson. It was clear, pointed and scriptural. It was one in a series of services held in his church, and at the close four penitents presented themselves for prayers. Their requests were remembered in two most earnest prayers by the deacons, in which I believe every devout Christian present heartily joined.

After the usual order of the evening the pastor said he had something he wished to say to his people. He referred to the happy relations that had existed between them for six years and to the unanimous call they had but recently given him to remain with them another year. He spoke of the convention that had recently been held in Central Church, in which he had taken part, and added that he was glad it had occurred. He said it had come to his knowledge that some of his brethren had taken exceptions to the course he had taken, and said unpleasant things about him. He regretted to lose the good opinion of his brethren, and thought such a sudden change a little remarkable. He was out as soon as he was in the lodge, and had often expressed his views privately to his brethren for three years and had advised them not to join the secret orders. He had refused positions tendered him in the lodges, and refused to admit their parades and celebrations into his house of worship on the Sabbath. He had noted their effect on the spirituality of church members and was thoroughly convinced that the church as a body and the members in particular had suffered from their effect. He felt it his duty to speak out and warn his people against that, as other sins; and whatever course those differing with him might take, he should "obey God rather than men," and take the consequences. If, as had been threatened by some, an attempt was made to starve him out, he was prepared to meet them on that ground, and his family were willing to share with him. He said he had well considered his position and that he stood on the rock,Christ Jesus,and should never go back.

He referred to Bro. Countee and explained why he did not preach as advertised on the previous Tuesday evening. He knew Countee in his home, and loved him as a brother, and spoke strongly against the way he was treated in the convention and the attempt that was being made to blacken the character and injure the influence of one of God's ministers. He said he should use his liberty in selecting his own texts and the lines of thought he should present, but had not decided just what course he should take with those who were in, but should do what he could to prevent others from joining. He reminded them of God's promises of protection to his servants and of his judgments upon those who opposed them in the performance of duty, and gave a faithful warning against interfering with any who felt it duty to come out and be separate from sin.

He did not use the term secret societies, and I do not profess to give his words, only some of the points he made, which indicate the position he took, and proposes, by the help of God, to maintain. No one, not even the Grand Master, who listened attentively, could mistake Bro. Jackson's meaning or the particular sin he had in mind. His manner was calm, but firm as a rock. His expressions were mild but pointed, and not a man, woman or child in that large audience doubted the sincerity or unyielding purpose of this man of God to stand by his convictions at whatever cost. Let us pray for Bro. Jackson, for he will need great grace to "endure to the end" of this conflict into which he has just entered in earnest. J. P. STODDARD.

CHICAGO, AWAKE!

MARYSVILLE, MO.

My advice to the people of Chicago is this: At once take lawful steps, in harmony with the United States Constitution, to put such brakes on the new movements of the anarchists in your city as will plainly convince them that it is unconstiuttional to blow up cities, towns, homes and men. God has the right to blow them down, but the devil should be taught to wait God's time; for he once confessed he did not want to be tormented before the time. My plan is this:

1. Call out Gideon's three hundred and surround them. They can learn from God how to cast the devils out of them. I would have them manage so as to keep the devils out of the hogs; for they would run them all into the lake and choke them to death.

2. If there are a few the devils will not leave cast them into prison—devils and all. Then I, for one, will agree to go and preach to those terrible spirits in prison, and give them one more chance to be pulled out of the fire. I have hopes of them. Be it remembered by all you who live in Chicago, if you do not take steps at once to stop that anarchist paper, and close those secret meetings, you better get ready,as they say,"When the trumpet sounds the signal." R. SMITH.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION LETTER.

BOMBAY, India, Jan. 27, 1888.

MY DEAR BROTHER:—Permit me to thank our dear friends of the National Christian Association for the kind donation of books and tracts which they have sent. It may seem a very small supply for "all Asia" to send only two or three cubic feet of reading matter upon your special line of work. But we remember how the five loaves and two fishes fed a multitude, and we expect this small stock of reading matter to do an immense amount of good.

As I before suggested, I shall circulate the tracts and leaflets largely through the newspapers. You see one sewed in with the present issue of the Watchman. I shall have this done with other magazines, and thus they will be spread abroad largely over the land. This will create a demand for the books, and the supply you have kindly sent me will serve as an initial supply. The cash I receive from the sales of these books will all be applied in advertising the crusade against the dominion of secrecy, and in publishing information about the secret kingdoms.

It may seem presumption to call this small labor a "Foreign Mission Department"of your Association, but such it really is. I am sure it will cheer the people of God who are working so hard against the works of darkness in our native land to feel that they are co-laborers with us in the great conflict here.

You are aware that the power of Masonry in the British Empire is strengthened by the great influence of the royal family. The Prince of Wales is the head centre of the order. His brother, the Duke of Connaught, is the present commander of the Bombay Army, and he also is a great leader of Masonic mummeries. The glittering tinsel and ritual of Freemasonry seem to suit well the "pomp and circumstance" of regal display.

We have, as you see, a great fight on hand here against both native and English heathenism, and we trust that the people of God in America will "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty," and by their prayers and practical sympathy strengthen the hands of those who are the messengers of God and his church in these Eastern lands. Yours in victory, W. J. GLADWIN.

PITH AND POINT.

THE MAXWELL MURDER CASE.

Extract from a letter received in this city from a preacher of the Gospel: "I see that Masonry is being used in an attempt to defeat the ends of justice in the Maxwell case, St. Louis. He has been condemned by all the courts to be hung for the murder of Preller. The present effort is to overcome our governor and get the sentence commuted. I am growing heartily indignant. Are we to have no protection? Let the Masons take care; they have no right to seek to overturn the decision of the highest court in the land. These efforts however may open the eyes of the people a little wider." Yes, but what will be said now that this Masonic effort to thwart the delayed execution of this notorious murderer has been successful? What next?—T. H.

A GRIEVOUS WAKING.

The minister of the Baptist church here joined the Masonic lodge and it waked them up in the church. He has left here, but it has set them to thinking, and therefore they want more light and go West instead of East for it. —T. HUDSON, Wolcottville, Ind.

THE VETERANS.

If I am not mistaken I have taken the Cynosure ever since the third number was published, with the exception of one or two short intervals. Without any exception it is the best religious and reform paper for the family in my judgment I ever saw. I have six children, three daughters and three sons; all heartily endorse the principles advocated by the Cynosure; for which I give praise to God. God bless the editor and all connected with the work.—JOHN MOTTER, Lyons, Kansas.

Mr. Armour desires me to say that he has been a subscriber for the Cynosure from the beginning.—P. H. W., Sterling, Kansas.

IN EARNEST FOR PROHIBITION.

As I am a faithful reader of the Cynosure and see so many calls for workers in the temperance cause, it has induced me to take up my pen. We take three papers; I think the Cynosure is the best and my prayer is that it may be circulated throughout these low lands of sin and sorrow. As I was reading in our last Gazette I came across a place where it said "free whisky and nobody's business." I threw it down and said that was too bad for anybody to read. I am a prohibitionist through and through, and I would to God that everybody in this broad land would say the same. My daily prayer is that the Lord may send conviction and conversion to every saloon keeper O Christians everywhere, be on bended knees asking God to remove this great curse from our land; for see the fathers, see the mothers and the children sinking down. Christians, pray that holy manna may be showered all around. I trust the day is not far distant when the flag of our country will wave in the breeze of peace and quietude.—MARY ELLIS, New Martinsburg, Ohio.

ENGLISH LAW AND SOCIAL PURITY.

Your esteemed correspondent J. M. Foster, in whose letters I take great delight, to my mind states an error in "Our New York Letter" in issue of 23d Feb. instant. He says "England licenses houses of ill fame. They call it the Contagious Diseases Act." In the first place the "Contagious Diseases Acts (Women)" have been repealed for several years. Second, they never were considered a license to "houses of ill-fame;" their most ardent advocates never urged for them more than sanitary measures. Third, the acts were not universal, but for certain military and seaport towns of England and Ireland.—J. C. YOUNG, Custer City, Pa.

NOTE.—The British government continues the operation of that obnoxious law in the East Indies.

REMEMBERS THE MORGAN TIMES.

I am now nearly seventy-nine years of age; have been opposed to secrecy from my youthful days. My father was a Mason. He never denied the murder of Morgan by the Masons, but seemed to think because he had nothing to do with it, he was not guilty in the matter. But his companion and children could but see the evil effects of Masonry on his morals and finances. The system was popular then because its dreadful oaths, penalties and crimes were not generally known, but the nature of the lodge was fully shown in Morgan's Exposition, and in his taking off. I have been a subscriber for the Cynosure from its commencement, and expect to be while life and reason are granted me.—DARIUS REYNOLDS, Seneca, Lake Co., Fla.

[From Peloubet's Notes.]

"There was a certain householder which planted a vineyard." The opening words at once suggest a comparison with Isaiah (5: 1-7). No doubt our Lord here takes up the prophecy there, the more willingly building on the old foundations, that his adversaries accused him of destroying the Law. The image of the kingdom of God as a vine-stock or as a vineyard runs through the whole Old Testament (Deut. 32: 32; Ps. 80: 8-16; Isa. 5: 1-7; 27: 1-7; Jer. 2: 21; Ezek. 15: 1-6; 19: 10); and has this especial fitness, that no property was considered to yield so large a return (Cant. 8: 11, 12). None was therefore of such price and esteem. It no doubt belongs to the fitness of the image, that a vineyard does, if it is to bring forth richly, require the most diligent and never-ceasing care; that there is no season in the year in which much has not to be done in it. Virgil presses this very strongly in words not unworthy to be kept in mind by all to whom a spiritual vineyard has been committed. (See Georg. 2: 397-419.)—Trench. The vineyard represents the kingdom of God as realized (1) in the Jewish nation, (2) in the spiritual Christian church, and (3) in the individual soul. This kingdom is in each case planted by God, and is his by creation, by preservation, and by redemption.—P. A ministerial charge is a vineyard; so is a Sunday-school class; so is church membership; so is wealth; so is knowledge.—R. Glover. Every blessing of the world—the Gospel, the truths of redemption, the influences of the Spirit, natural talents, spiritual gifts, providential opportunities—is the vineyard God has given us to cultivate.—P. The husbandmen represent the rulers of the Jews (ver. 45); but the people as a whole, a nation or a church, are included (ver. 43.)—Schaff. And also each person to whom God has committed powers, opportunities, and influences for the building up the kingdom of God in the world and in his own soul.—P.

"He sent his servants." Every special call to love and serve God, every service at the church, every providence of God, every voice of the Holy Spirit, every season of revival, is a servant whom God sends to us for the fruits that are due him.—P.

"That they might receive the fruits of it." The fruits were obedience, love, righteous living. teaching the true God to the nations, etc.—Olshausen. We have always to pay rent for every privilege. For their land the Jews must pay the rent of national purity, justice, patriotism; for their spiritual privileges, the rent of faith and obedience; for office, the rent of service to God and man. Every one has some vineyard which he is to work, not exclusively for his own pleasure, profit, or honor, but for the furtherance of God's cause. From every such vineyard—as pastoral charge, Sunday-school class, office in the church, church membership—we may extract that which will enrich ourselves. For every such vineyard we must pay a rent to God. And when we do, we shall find that no part of the produce pays ourselves so well as that we pay to him.—R. Glover.

"Took his servants, and beat one, killed another, and stoned another." Some of the prophets were not merely maltreated, but actually put to death. Thus, if we may trust Jewish tradition, Jeremiah was stoned by the exiles in Egypt, Isaiah sawn asunder by King Manasseh; and, for an ample historical justification of this description, see Jer., chaps. 37, 38; 1 Kings 18: 13; 22: 24-27; 2 Kings 6: 31; 21: 16; 2 Chron. 24: 19-22; 36: 16; and also Acts 7: 52; and the whole passage finds a parallel in the words of the apostle (Heb. 11: 36).—Trench.

"He sent other servants." The conduct of the "lord of the vineyard" is a vivid representation of God's dealings with man. It is a faithful picture of his merciful dealings with the Jewish church. It is a no less faithful picture of his gracious treatment of the Gentile churches. They have repeatedly tried him by false doctrines, superstitions, and contempt of his word. Yet he has repeatedly granted them seasons of refreshing, raised up for them holy ministers and mighty reformers, and not cut them off, notwithstanding all their persecutions. We have probably little idea of the extent of our obligations, and of the number of gracious messages which the lord of the vineyard is constantly sending to our souls. Mercies before conversion, mercies after conversion, mercies at every step of their journey on earth, will be revealed to the minds of saved saints, and make them ashamed of their own thanklessness.—Ryle.

"But last of all he sent unto them his son." It is only by placing together the three accounts that we can understand the full beauty and power of this passage. "Then said the lord of the vineyard, What shall I do? Having yet therefore one son, his well-beloved, he said, I will send my beloved son. He sent him also last unto them, saying, They will reverence my son." This was the last and crowning effort of divine mercy; after which, on the one side, all the resources even of heavenly love are exhausted, on the other the measure of sins is perfectly filled up.—Trench.

"Let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance." A sort of faith in the greatness of Christ is at the root of the intense hatred men feel toward him. They know him to be the heir, feel Christ's divine right to rule them, that he is man's best teacher, highest example, rightful Lord; and yet this knowledge increases opposition. Lord Byron said of the Gospel, whose guidance he would not accept, "The worst of it is, I believe it."—R. Glover.

"And they caught him, cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him" on the cross of Calvary. They killed that they might possess; but it was the shortest road to entire loss. Those who reject Christ in order that they may keep possession of themselves, their pleasures and hopes, have taken the shortest and surest way to lose them.—P

"The stone which the builders rejected has become the head of the corner." A reference to the union of Jews and Gentiles in Christ, as in Eph. 2: 19-22, may be included (so Alford); but the main thought is that the Messiah, even if rejected by the "builders," should become the corner-stone of the real temple of God (his new spiritual kingdom).—Schaff. Every temple that is to stand, be it nation or church or individual soul, must have Christ for the corner-stone, or it will perish. For the time is coming when Jesus shall be king of all in heaven and on earth.—P.

"And whosoever shall fall on this stone," etc. They fall on the stone who are offended at Christ in his low estate (Isa. 8: 14; 53: 2; Luke 2: 34; 4: 29; John 4: 44); of this sin his hearers were already guilty. They on whom the stone falls are those who set themselves in self-conscious opposition against the Lord; who, knowing what he is, do yet to the end oppose themselves to him and to his kingdom. These shall not merely fall and be broken; for one might recover himself, though with some present harm, from such a fall as this; but on them the stone shall fall as from heaven, and shall grind them to powder.—Trench.

OBITUARY.

Elder John G. Miller died at his home in Coulterville, Illinois, May 18, 1886, aged 72 years.

He was born at Ryegate, Vermont, in 1813, and in 1827 moved to Randolph county, Illinois. He united with the church by public profession, in the Eden congregation, but at the organization of Church Hill congregation he was chosen and ordained to the eldership, which office he held until his death. He leaves a wife and several children in the communion of the church to which his own life was so tenderly devoted. Among the resolutions adopted by Church Hill session on the death of Elder Miller, was the following: "We bear witness to the faithfulness of our brother in contending for the crown rights of King Jesus, and defending the testimony of the church; his tenderness in dealing with the erring, his wisdom as a counsellor, his promptness in performing the work assigned him by the session or congregation, his love for and punctuality in attending upon Gospel ordinances and church courts. His place in the sanctuary, Sabbath-school, prayer-meeting and session was seldom vacant, and he was always on time"

"Some of the points in Elder Miller's Christian life," writes Bro. James Mathews, "deserve notice. He was an earnest and zealous supporter of the Cynosure and its principles. Having been a subscriber nearly from the first, he showed me the first copy I ever saw of the paper, then in four-page form. He urged me to take it. Said he, it is a small paper, but it advocates great principles. He was the means of placing the Cynosure in many families. He gave his papers to every one in his town (Coulterville) who would read them, Masons and Christians alike, and had many interesting discussions and arguments and some strange experiences with the fraternity. He was kind and courteous to all, and left a good impression even on those that opposed him. He went about doing good and in such a manner as to gain the esteem and good will of all, and had fast friends even among Freemasons."

FARM NOTES.

LESS LAND AND LARGER YIELDS NEEDED.

It is not in additional acreage that the progressive farmer must look for his gains, but in making less land yield more substance. This means, primarily, the bestowing of more labor upon small areas; and to the average farmer this seems synonymous with neglect of his larger acreage of grain. To harmonize these apparently conflicting methods is the task of the intelligent farmer of today. The two principal methods by which the value of the product of a limited portion of our acreage can be increased, are: the growing of vegetable supplies for our home markets throughout the season; and the growing of field crops of vegetables for shipment to city markets in the fall and winter. The first of these is particularly applicable to those farmers who are located near medium-sized towns—say of from three thousand to ten thousand population. Regular market-gardeners usually locate near the larger cities; and these smaller towns are dependent for their supply of spring and summer vegetables upon the scant surplus of some farmers' gardens or upon shipments from the cities. The second method noted can be advantageously pursued by such as are located near cities, as their entire product can be there disposed of to a wholesale merchant; or by those remote from cities but near railroads over which their crops can be shipped in bulk to the city commission dealer.—American Agriculturist for March.

—The following preparation applied to the surface will prevent any rusting on plows or any other metal surfaces: Melt one ounce of resin in a gill of linseed oil, and when hot mix with two quarts of kerosene oil. This can be kept on hand and applied in a moment with a brush or rag to the metal surface of any tool that is not going to be used for a few days, preventing any rust, and saving much vexation when the time comes to use it again.

WOMAN AS A MARTYR.

History records the sufferings of countless martyrs, and we read of them with wonder and sympathy. But there are living to day in our midst thousands of other martyrs who have far stronger claims upon our consideration—women who are sufferers from those ailments peculiar to their sex, our wives, daughters and sisters, perhaps, whose lives are an unremitting round of suffering. "Is there no relief?" they cry. Yes, there is; Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will remove that "dragging-down" feeling, will banish that backache, will restore every function to its normal condition. To all sufferers from female complaints—and their name is Legion—we say: get the "Prescription" at once; it will be worth far more than its weight in gold to you.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 1888.

THE THOUSAND COLORED PASTORS.

SHALL THEY HAVE THEIR PAPER?

Week by week generous friends of the colored race answer, YES. The fund for this purpose reaches $744 91, as the treasurer reports and cheering letters show the enthusiasm in this enterprise of all who realize the nature of secretism. Every letter from the South justifies our efforts, and approves the judgment that no expenditure of an equal sum will bring so great returns.

The $900 contributed for this purpose in the two years and a half after June, 1885, placed the Cynosure in the hands of hundreds of colored pastors, but few of whom could have paid for it themselves. Note the grand results which have followed, chiefly because of this work:

1. The Louisiana Baptist State Convention representing 70,000 church members has voted against the lodge.

2. The Texas Baptists will probably take the same stand at their next meeting.

3. The Methodist Episcopal church in Texas is nearly ready for like action.

4. So are the Arkansas Baptists, a prominent association having already so voted.

5. The same churches in western Tennessee are coming out against secretism.

6. So in Alabama the Good-will Association is standing against the orders.

7. Many of the Congregational churches in the South are opposing the lodge, encouraged by the American Missionary Association.

8. Two schools for higher instruction have been organized within a year which maintain this principle, while nearly every institution for the education of the Negro is open for instruction of the students on the dangers of the lodge.

9. Christians at the North should hasten this work with all zeal, because the reflex influence upon their churches will soon be powerfully felt.

The Cynosure has proved the best agency in accomplishing this work in the South. A fund to send a thousand copies to as many colored pastors is being raised. Dear reader, has not the Lord given you means to help it on?

CHICAGO JESUITS AND BOSTON MASONS.

Eight years ago this month, when the National Convention was held in Boston, free speech against the lodge was a commodity not in that market. It was not to be had for "love or money;" for we tried both. And we are not indebted to the powerful Catholic influence in that city, which imprisons men for preaching on the Common, for any aid or comfort in the struggle against the pretended foe of Rome.

The headquarters of Dr. Justin D. Fulton's crusade against popery are in Boston, where his great success with his book, "Why Priests Should Wed," began, as our Boston correspondent wrote us some weeks ago. Dr. Fulton began to speak in this city on Monday of last week in the First Methodist church. Mr. Bolton, the pastor of that church, had preached a sermon the day before for the benefit of a lodge called the Patriotic Sons of America, an anti-Catholic society. Tuesday the Romanists got in their work and made such disturbance as nearly to break up Dr. Fulton's meeting. Next night Bolton, who fights the Catholics with the lodge, bolted the door on Dr. Fulton, who fights them, like a man, in the open.

There was much quiet sympathy with the suppressed movement, but comparatively little manifestation of it since Dr. Fulton and his manager seemed able to carry on their own battle. Their advertisements filled columns of the daily press. Monday night of this week they opened again in Battery D., where they had room for thousands and promise of police protection.

This incident is but one feature of the Jesuit plot against our Republic. They would suppress free speech, as they did in the sixteenth century. They have practical control of the Indian Bureau to-day. Two years ago they managed thirty-eight out of the fifty schools supported by the Government among the Indians, and they now have control, it is believed, of even a greater proportion. Close by here, in Notre Dame, Indiana, in connection with their great university, built by money wrung from the business men of Chicago, the Jesuit lodge has set up an indulgence market, like that of Tetzel which Luther smote in 1517. A German Catholic paper, the Gememde Blatt, prints the following:

"Consecrated rosaries, giving the owner, if he is in a state of grace, for every devout 'Pater Noster' and 'Ave Maria,' remission of 500 days in addition to that of Brigid of 100 days and the blessing of the holy father, gifts of grace to be offered also for poor souls, can be had from the reverend fathers of the holy cross at Notre Dame, Ind. Those desiring to order them will apply to Rev. A. Granger, C. S. C., Notre Dame, Ind. Not less than one dozen can be ordered, and the order must be accompanied by the sum of $1 for expenses."

We have not room to more than refer to Prof. Townsend's fearful arraignment of the Jesuit lodge in the two numbers of Our Day now issued. Those articles should be read in every family, Protestant or Catholic. The land must be awakened on this question, until we understand that this evil is fundamental, and we can never be truly a free people while our President and the vast machinery of our political parties is subservient to Rome.

PROHIBITION NOTES.—It is one of the hopeful signs of the times which the old parties must not disregard that for the first time in the history of Kansas City the saloons were closed last Sabbath. Not one was open, front or rear. Saturday the Law and Order League gave notice of the enforcement of the law; the police authorities issued proper orders; and knowing that sharp prosecution would follow, it is reported that not a dealer dared attempt to sell liquor all day. Bravo, Kansas City! Thank also your neighbors across the Kansas border for helping to this good result. If this can be done one day it can another.——In Indianapolis, too, the Prohibitionists are moving for the entire eradication of the saloon nuisance. The dealers are alarmed and preparing to fight in the courts. The approaching National Convention of the Prohibition party warrants friends in the city to be active and new temperance societies are being formed.—— The appointment of the National Democratic convention at St. Louis, June 5, has made new and unpleasant complications. The National Prohibition Committee meeting in Chicago, Dec. 1st last, fixed on June 6th. They hoped to be in the field so much earlier than the old parties as to have the benefit of their action in its influence on individual voters and conventions. The papers, too, will be so full of the Democratic business on the 6th that little space will be left for the Indianapolis meeting. It is, therefore, proposed to meet in May, a week or two earlier. The change will probably be made.—— In Chicago we hail another Prohibition paper, the Chicago Prohibitionist, a weekly published by the Cook County Central Committee of the Prohibition party. It is a bright little paper and deserves to grow, so long as it keeps to the right line of clean-handed Prohibition, until it becomes, like the Voice of New York, a national exponent of a great party of Christian principle.

How St. Louis got the Democratic National Convention is a standing joke in the political papers. Among the excellent reasons why the gathering should be held in the Bridge city were the following: (1) Beer. (2) More Beer. (3) STILL MORE BEER. President Cleveland is a mighty man, but he must remember old dog Tray.

—The readers of the Cynosure must be congratulated in securing such an argument for the prohibition of the liquor traffic as Rev. R. C. Wylie writes for them in this number. Its reasoning is most able, and as it is not especially a "third-party" document it will not offend the tender feelings of any one.

—The Cynosure has also secured a new contributor whose first article proves that he will be one whom we shall highly esteem. "Orion" is a Presbyterian minister of wide travel and experience, now residing in the Indian Territory. He is heartily with us against the lodge and will be a giant, like his pseudonym, in our moral conflict.

—Secretary Stoddard lighted on a bonanza in the old book stores of New Orleans in the way of Masonic Grand Lodge reports during the war. A glance shows their value in determining the complicity of the lodge with the treason of the South. These documents should be thoroughly examined, and their valuable contents given to this generation.

—In a few days' visit to Beloit, Rockford and Freeport, cities near Chicago, Rev. Byron Gunner received donations of some $75 in cash, a windmill, and some valuable tools for Howe Institute, New Iberia, Ia. The Presbyterian church of Freeport will take up the matter under Dr. Jenkins, the pastor, and the Congregational church at Rockford is much interested and will take some share in the enterprise.

—The Watchman of Bombay, India, comes to us across continents and oceans with an N. C. A. tract securely stitched inside the cover, and our letter from India on the 6th page assures us that the whole edition bears thus a messenger to thousands of readers testifying against the orders. This is a good work and the friends in America must stand by Bro. Gladwin in this earnest effort to publish the truth in the great Eastern Empire of Victoria.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard, the Ohio agent, after several days canvassing in Chillicothe, Lyndon, South Salem, Greenfield and Jamestown, started with Mrs. Stoddard for Pittsburgh on Thursday, where they will visit her father's family and see what can be done for the reform in Eastern Ohio and Western Pennsylvania. A letter written from Pittsburgh indicates that there is much work demanded and he may remain in the vicinity several weeks.

—Many of the old residents of Chicago have marked with regret the removal of the old dwelling which was for so many years the Chicago home of Philo Carpenter. For a generation the tides of business have swept by on either side until the city has grown for miles to the westward. Still the old home stood, holding its place in the center of a goodly block, as if guardian angels were preserving it from the encroachments of trade. There was something tender and venerable about the place, and no doubt Mr. Carpenter regretted to see it disturbed. Here his family was reared, and Mr. Hildreth, the former N. C. A. treasurer, occupied it for years; and in one of its quiet rooms Mr. Carpenter met the N. C. A. Executive Committee after the great fire of '71. But the old house was fast going to decay and must be moved while it could hold together. The block will probably be divided among the heirs of Mr. Carpenter's estate, and ere long fine buildings will cover from sight a thousand memories of early Chicago; but the share that old home has borne in establishing the truth of Jesus Christ in anti-slavery days and in our own time will never be forgotten.

—In a recent note in these columns it was stated that the county treasurer of Hyde county, Dakota, was a defaulter to a large amount, which is not fully determined as yet, but estimated to be from ten to twenty thousand dollars. The management of such things in Dakota is marvelous. The defaulter went scot free, labeled, This is an honest man; only he was too good-natured and free-handed as a politician and office-holder in charge of public money. We imagined he was well lodged, and the supposition was correct. He is a Freemason, Odd-fellow and Good Templar. A majority of the county board are secretists. The sheriff is a Freemason, an Odd-fellow and a Grand Army man; and he is reported as saying that he would never turn a key on ex-treasurer James. The Territorial auditor is investigating matters, and it is found that the defalcation is larger than first reported. The money is supposed to have been largely used in purchasing political influence in the different townships, and the stealing is regarded as that of a secret ring rather than that of one man. The indignation of the people is rising, and it is reported that an order has been issued to re-arrest James, who is now in Iowa.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Secretary and Mrs. Stoddard reached Chicago Friday morning in company with President Stratton. The return trip was without incident, and all are in improved health.

—President J. Blanchard was last week regaining his strength which had been somewhat overtaxed during the New Orleans convention and by subsequent labors. He left New Orleans last week for New Iberia and other points west of New Orleans.

—Gov. St. John proposes to leave San Francisco April 5 for Hawaii, Sandwich Islands, and to return May 13. The Hawaiian friends believe that with about a week's work in Honolulu and a speech at some other points, they may be able to abolish the liquor traffic from the kingdom.

—The death of R. G. Patton, of Monmouth, Ill., January 9th last, removed to his reward one of God's faithful men of testimony. He was a prominent Prohibitionist, and an earnest promoter of the reform against the lodge. The Christian Statesman publishes his portrait and biography.

—A late note from Bro. M. N. Butler, brings the unwelcome news that his wife has been two weeks sick and confined to her bed, and his two little girls have also been sick. We hope to learn soon of the recovery of all the circle so dear to him. Though confined at home Bro. Butler keeps his pen busy, and our readers will profit by his work.

—The Republican papers are clamoring that General Clinton B. Fisk has disqualified himself for Presidential candidate on the Prohibition ticket by endorsing the local option bill passed by the Republicans in the Jersey Legislature. General Fisk probably knows what he is about, and uses his good sense where an ordinary politician goes by party claque.

—Rev. Mr. Woodsmall, says the Head and Hand, published at LeMoyne Institute, Memphis, finds a home with the teachers of the school for the remainder of his present stay in Memphis; an arrangement which we are sure will be mutually agreeable. God's work in this world is one work, and it is good that his workers in different fields can fraternize and help one another.

—Ex Senator Bruce spoke on the Race Problem in Farwell Hall, this city, last Thursday. Speaking of the tokens of the elevation and growing intelligence of the blacks, he said they were forming Freemason, Odd-fellow and Knights of Pythias lodges. Mr. Bruce is too intelligent a man to speak so inconsiderately. He should know that this lodge business is degrading his people, and it should be with shame that he should confess their fault.

—Bro. A. W. Parry, agent of the Evansville, Wis., Seminary, deserves a unanimous and universal vote of thanks for his efficiency as secretary and press reporter for the National Convention. He not only kept the daily record and reported for the New Orleans press, but assisted in the Cynosure report of the convention proceedings last week, and wrote out entire the interesting account of the discussion which our readers have been waiting for almost with impatience.

NOTICE.—Rev. Francis J. Davidson, of New Orleans, has been employed as colporteur and agent for the National Christian Association in the Southwest. He is authorized to take subscriptions for the Christian Cynosure and orders for books in the line of our work. He will keep on hand at his residence, 152 Clara Street, New Orleans, a limited supply of anti-lodge literature and will give prompt attention to all communications addressed to him respecting his work. We bespeak for our Bro. Davidson a helping hand from the ministers and churches on his field of labor, and feel confident that in going forth to "sow beside all waters" he is responding to the call of his Master, who has laid upon his soul this work. WHEATON COLLEGE.

The winter term of this institution closes on Friday, March 9th, and the spring term opens Tuesday, March 20th. There are at present one hundred and seventy-five pupils in attendance, nearly forty of them being in the College classes, about one hundred of them on preparatory work and the remainder being engaged on music and art. The year thus far has been one of quiet, steady growth and the outlook for the spring term is encouraging.

There has been little sickness among students; several members of the Faculty were for a few days hindered from their classes by diphtheretic difficulties, but all are now in health. The location of the College is particularly favorable; epidemic disease is almost unknown, and during the last twenty-seven years no death has occurred among those in actual attendance at the College.

A few more young ladies can be accommodated in the College building. The location of the school, the advantages offered in modern languages, the extended and thorough character of the College courses, the Bible study and earnest Christian character of the institution commend it to the consideration of those who desire a thorough and comprehensive training. We earnestly desire young gentlemen and ladies who are in earnest about work as students. No idlers, tobacco-users, frivolous, or evil-minded persons are knowingly retained. The business of the College is: 1st, Religion; and 2nd, Honest, hard work at study. All those interested in such a school are invited to visit it or send stamp for catalogue. Address, CHAS. A. BLANCHARD, Pres't.

—The midnight mission of Copenhagen has collected in three months as many as 150,000 signatures to an address which will be presented to the government, demanding the abolition of the State regulation of vice. This is in addition to a ladies' petition, which stops short at demanding a government commission to study the question.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Feb. 28th, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Dr. Meredith lectured last Thursday evening in the Y. M. C. A. Hall on "The Study and Use of the Bible," to a large audience. Three things are necessary in such study: Intelligence, honesty of purpose and faith in its teachings. The multiplication of commentaries and helps is not an unmixed good. The Bible is a plain, common-sense book and each one should study it for himself. There are mysteries in it, but if we obey we shall obtain the light. "If any man will do his will, he shall know the doctrine."

Only a believer is a competent witness as to the truth of the Bible. It is remedial. It offers a cure for sin, and only those who have tried it know anything about it. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." A man is brought into court charged with murder. Another comes forward to testify. The judge asks him, "Did you see this man commit the murder?" "No."

"Do you know anything about the case?" "No."

"Then what are you here to testify against him for?"

"I feel that he is guilty."

"You go away. You are no witness."

That is the infidel testifying against the Bible. He doesn't know what he is talking about.

A man makes a chart of the Atlantic coast, the rocks, shoals, and sand bars, all marked. An individual from beyond the Mississippi river, who never saw the sea, comes forward and says, "That is not a true chart, for the name of Samuel Smith is written on one corner, and I can prove that he is not the author of it."

"Well, what's the difference who made it; the question is, is it a true chart?"

"It cannot be a true chart, for it is dated 1884, and I can prove it was not made until 1887."

"What's the difference when it was made! Is it a true chart? Do you know anything about the places marked ?"

"Oh, no. I never saw the sea."

"Well, you go back beyond the Mississippi."

An old sea captain comes up and says, "That is a true chart. I have been over the places marked, and every thing is correct."

You are willing to listen to him. Now the Bible is a chart of the sea of life. The infidel is the ignoramus prating about "the mistakes of Moses" and the inaccuracies which he fancies he detects in dates and names. The Christian is the sea captain who has tried it. "O, taste and see that God is good." Who ever heard of a mother calling her sons and daughters to her bed-side in her dying hour and saying: "Thirty years ago I accepted the Bible as God's book and have tried to follow its teachings. But I find I was mistaken, and I warn you against that book." Not a single case can be produced. How many thousands can be produced on the other side!

Last Sabbath afternoon I preached on the Sabbath question in the Willoughby Avenue Reformed Presbyterian church. Two Baptist ministers were present. We had a much larger turnout than usual. The hearts of the faithful are trembling for the Sabbath. Railroad corporations, their presidents, stock-holders, officers, engineers, brakemen, drivers, conductors, have all conspired to break down our Sabbath. A church-member in this city is a conductor on the street car. He was remonstrated with because he worked on the Sabbath.

"I must support my family. It is either work on Sabbath or lose my position."

Why not steal; that is only a violation of the Eighth Commandment. The Eighth Commandment is no more sacred than the Fourth. There are some families in this city occupying high places in society, where the wife and mother goes regularly to a house of ill-repute and sells her body for merchandize that they may have the means to maintain their position. That is only a breach of the Seventh Commandment. That is no more sacred than the Fourth.

"Will a man rob God, yet ye have robbed me, even this whole nation." We take his time. Why must the bell-punch be hung around the neck of every street car conductor? Because their employers know that a man who habitually, knowingly and wilfully breaks the Sabbath-day cannot be trusted. Every time that bell-punch comes down it sounds out "thief." The company deliberately cuts the jugular vein of their employes' morality in requiring them to break the Sabbath, and then they hang the badge of the thief upon his neck—all for the sake of a little gain. This is a disgrace to our Christian civilization. And the churches that tolerate such a thing in their members are guilty before God.

Sabbath evening I preached in the York Street M. E. church, Rev. Corcoran, pastor. This is the original down-town church. There was a full house and the usual close attention. The Methodists take to National Reform as naturally as ducks to the water. I have not received such a warm reception in many a month. Dr. Henry I. Van Dyke told me I was doing wrong in preaching three times every Sabbath. But no consideration of a personal nature could induce me to forego these glorious opportunities to preach the crown rights and royal prerogatives of the Lord Jesus Christ. I believe God is blessing the work, for the door is wide open, my health was never better, and the hearts of his people are opened to contribute the means. Let his name be praised. The New York Weekly Witness gave over a column to discuss National Reform Feb. 8th.

The strike on the Schuykill cost both sides perhaps $4,000,000. We are reminded that a pyramid in Egypt which served as a monument to one of the kings took 360,000 men twenty years to build it. The royal palace of Peru took 20,000 men fifty years build it; and the royal palace in Mexico took 200,000 men fifty years to build it. At the rate of wages paid in America the workmen on the pyramid would have received three thousand millions of dollars. They only received two cents per day. Perhaps the trades unions and Knights of Labor are becoming oppressive to honest capitalists. It is only when employer and employe are actuated by the spirit of brotherly love and are willing to faithfully apply the Golden Rule that "the rich and the poor meet together."

The Presbyterian Ministers' Meeting last Monday discussed "the Cathedral and the Parish." The paper told the truth in a laughing way. Dr. Hall said the cathedrals on the British Isles were not the outgrowth of Protestantism. They were built by the Catholic church, and when the Roman Catholic authority was repudiated and their property confiscated, these cathedrals were on the hands of the Established church and they tried to make the best of them. The parish system would be impossible here in a Republic. But for each minister to have a certain territory for which he is responsible has very great advantages. Presbyterianism should be emphasized. Another brother said, we must distinguish between the cathedral and episcopacy. The cathedral is not primarily a place for preaching, but the seat or palace of the bishop, who, in the Prelatic Establishment, has civil authority. The two ideas of centralized authority and individual congregational responsibility meet in Presbyterianism.

THE TURKISH FAMINE.—The latest news from the famine districts in Turkey received at the rooms of the American Board Feb. 25 is that thousands who had sold even their clothing for food are now both hungry and naked. Missionaries on the Cilician Plain can think of little else than the sufferings of the people. The government, though in one or two sections hindering the work of relief on account of a false charge that the "missionaries were buying Protestants," is supplying the farmers with seeds and with some provisions, while the contributions from America and England are being distributed with great care. It is astonishing how far a small sum will go toward relieving distress. Numerous instances are given where the sum of $75 or $80 has brought unspeakable relief to a whole village of starving people. At Adana some 400 men are given work at 15 cents each per day, and on this pittance they manage to keep alive not only themselves but about 400 others dependent upon them. A suit of clothes can be furnished for $1 50. Four thousand dollars a month for the next three months are imperatively needed to meet the most pressing of the calls from Central Turkey alone, and the famine in Eastern Turkey shows no sign of abatement. In the name of our common humanity let these calls for aid be responded to at once. Contributions may be forwarded through Langdon S. Ward, Treasurer of the American Board, No. 1 Somerset St., Boston, Mass.

—The Baptist Weekly of New York, the successor of the old American Baptist, beloved by so many faithful men while in charge of Dr. Nathan Brown, has become the Christian Inquirer, since the recent death of Dr. Patton. The new paper is a union of the Weekly and the Gospel Age. Revs. J. B. Calvert, R. T. Middleditch, R. S. MacArthur, L. A. Crandall and John Humpstone form its able editorial corps, and it promises to take a place among the ablest religious journals of the country.

The Home.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

Judges 5: 28.

BY A. B. CURTIS.

O'er Tabor's height the setting sun
Had cast his last faint ray,
While mighty deeds of Zebulun
Had crowned the closing day.

A queenly mother stands alone
With sadness in her eyes,
And through the lattice a low moan
Comes mingled with her sighs.

The twilight shades were brooding o'er
The fields of nestling grain,
As through the window zephyrs bore
These words of love and pain,—

"Where is my son, my Sisera?
Why stays his chariot so?
Hath Deborah's band, a tool of Jah,
To Jabin's hosts brought woe?"

Fair maidens press on every side
And strive to soothe her fears,—
"Your son will come at eventide
And turn to smiles these tears."

But each face tells the tale she fears;
Her woes come back amain;
"My son, my son, staff of my years,
Return to me again."

And still the mother stands alone,
The sad tears in her eyes,
While through the lattice a low moan
Comes mingled with her sighs.

SPIRITUAL DYNAMITE.

"How is it with thee to-day, sister?"

Mrs. Hart looked up from her sewing-machine, whose rattle had prevented her from hearing the door open.

"Father Price! How glad I am!" And she sprang up, holding out both hands to welcome the venerable old man, whom she had learned to revere, as well as love, from her early childhood.

Rev. Joab Price was one of those country clergymen of the elder time, who was content to live and die in a small and lonely parish on a meager salary, straitened oft-times for clothes to wear and food to eat; but bound to his people by such anxious love, such a spiritual paternity, that he would as soon have left his children according to the flesh, or his patient wife, as the flock for whom he had prayed and toiled ever since he entered the ministry, and began his first pastorate in Plowden. Wife and children had both left him now. He was past the allotted years of man, but he was still "Father Price" to all the people of Plowden, and to the many men and women who had gone out from the still waters and green pastures of that pleasant village among the hills to dwell elsewhere. Sarah Allen was the daughter of one of his deacons, and was born on the same day with his own daughter. A bright, gay, willful child she was, as different from his placid, obedient Ruth as one child could be from another; but they loved each other the better for that difference. When Sarah married Harry Hart, a young merchant in Kingston, Ruth really pined for her comrade; and when Ruth was smitten with one of those mysterious and deadly fevers that spring up now and then among our New England hills, in spite of keen, pure air and the clear water of granite springs, and gave up her sweet soul to the Father above, whom she had loved and served from her childhood, Sarah Hart mourned her only less than her parents did, for she was the sole sister she had ever known. And it was under Father Price's ministry that Sarah began to lead a Christian life, and joined the church on earth. It had been his wise counsel that had taught and encouraged her so long as she lived in Plowden; and, on her annual visits to her home, she had counted on seeing him almost as much as on the visit to her own father and mother.

But now for three years there had been no one at home for Sarah to visit, and Father Price's wife and his two sons were all laid by Ruth in the village graveyard. He had many things to tell Sarah, and her tears fell fast as he told them, though his benign face was placid and serene, as befitted one who waited on the very edge of the river for the messenger to take him over, having already received his token, "At evening time it shall be light." When they had well recalled and reviewed what had passed during their separation, Father Price turned his benign face toward Sarah; his soft yet keen eyes fixed themselves on hers.

"How is it now with your soul, Sarah?" he asked tenderly.

Tears sprang afresh into Mrs. Hart's eyes.

"O Father Price, I don't know what to tell you! I believe I am a Christian woman, but I have got such a temper! You don't know what it is to have such a temper as mine. It's just like gunpowder; the least spark, and out it flies, and I am so ashamed, so bitterly sorry, for I know people think—I have more than once known that they said—'And she professes to to be a Christian with such a temper!' Father Price, I do try; I do endeavor to keep hold of it, but it takes me by surprise; it shames and grieves me; I am not consenting unto it. I feel sometimes as if I were possessed by an evil spirit."

"Lay nothing to the charge of others, my child, not even to the messengers of Satan. You have a birthright to this temper; it was a trait of them who went before you. Do not despise it, either; what doth the old divine say? 'Anger is one of the sinews of the soul; he that wants it hath a maimed mind.' Use your temper for God, Sarah, and it will do good instead of harm."

"Use my temper for God!" said the astonished woman, unable to believe her ears.

"Yes, even so. Take the analogy of earthly things: gunpowder, dynamite, were first, it may be, used for evil, for war, for murder; but see what service they have been, nevertheless, to the world of man. How have they laid low mountains and hills, and so exalted valleys; made crooked ways straight and rough places plain, preparing in the desert a highway for our God, that so the glory of the Lord may be revealed. Look at the barriers they have swept away between heathendom and Christendom, and then remember the Word: 'Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee!' 'Be ye angry and sin not; let not the sun go down upon your wrath.' There is a way to use every trait inherent in our nature for the glory of God, my child."

"I want to do it, Father Price; I do want to live for and in Christ, but I don't know about this. Oh, how I have shuddered over those texts in the Bible that rebuke anger, and tell of the meek and lowly Jesus! It does seem as if I never, never could be like him!"

"Sarah, do you remember the day when Christ entered the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers? Or the time when he rebuked the scribes and Pharisees? He was in all points tempted as we are, yet without sin. I doubt not, nay, I fully believe, that in his mortal body were sown the seeds of evil, that his divine spirit might show us how to overcome them; yea, as far as man can, I know what unspeakable horror, what agony of conflict the adherence of sin to his human garment must have wrought in the God who dwelt with men, and suffered their evil inheritance to company with his stainless purity. But see how he used the temper that belonged to his manhood; not to confound his enemies, not to resent his injuries, but to scorch and chase from before him greed, hypocrisy and uncleanliness. He made it a power to work good, not a weapon of offense. Do the like, in your measure, my child, with your temper; look to your Master every hour; open not your mouth for your own good, to assail your enemies, or abuse them who persecute you, if such there be; but open it wide with holy indignation at all evil, all injustice, all wrong-doing; make your wrath into spiritual dynamite, wherever you can so prepare the way of the Lord through any high hill, or across any darksome depth of valley. You do some work in and for your church, I suppose?"

"Yes. I have a class in Sunday-school, and one in the mission school."

"Then I doubt not," said Father Price smiling, "that you will need to explode your dynamite often where soft-words of peace would be wasted and thrown before swine."

"Oh, if I can only remember! It seems still so hard to curb such a flash as my temper is."

"Sarah, the Lord's time is eternity. Even below, he works with small, persistent, atomic forces; have patience with Sarah Hart. In the fulness of time is a word we should dwell on more. Perhaps it will help you to know that every word you say repeats my own experience. I have striven with the passion of wrath from my youth upward; I shall be struggling therewith till I leave the flesh. My watchword is, 'He is my defense; I shall not be greatly moved.' For he hath opened my eyes even as the eyes of the prophet Elisha's servant; and behold, the mountain is full of chariots and horses of fire round about me, and I know that they who are with me are more than them that be against me."

The tremulous old voice thrilled, and grew steady as a trumpet note, and the dim eyes lit up with the fire of love and faith as Father Price spoke.

Mrs. Hart could but wonder and revere. It was the last time she ever saw her wise and beloved friend. He went home to Plowden from her house, and very shortly afterward home to heaven from his earthly tenement; but the lesson he left was an abiding help to Sarah Hart. She found it hard enough to silence the quick speech of anger at trivial shortcomings, unintended slights, unkind words or deeds by which she suffered, for a long time. It was hard to keep her lips closed when the hot wave of wrath dashed against them; sometimes she left the room, fled to her chamber, and there with bended head implored strength; and the very consciousness of speaking to the Master changed the attitude of her soul and calmed its tumult. In the air, even of the outer temple, evil dies of nostalgia; for it is the breath of prayer ascending and its answer descending that fills that court with life, and sin does not find it native air. So day after day, persistent, if not always patient, Sarah kept on her way; and there came many a time when she found the use of the spiritual dynamite Father Price had spoken of, and which she kept stored for legitimate uses. Once, on the round of visits she made to her mission-class scholars, as she groped her way up the dark and filthy staircase of a tenement house she was stopped on a landing by wild screams and entreaties from a door at her side.

"Oh, don't! Don't ye! Oh, father, don't kill her!" with a chorus of groans, oaths and blows smothering the heart-broken appeal. Mrs. Hart opened the door at once; there lay a wan, wasted girl of fifteen on a dirty bed, her hands clasped in entreaty, her face streaming with tears and convulsed with terror, and between her and the door a thin, delicate woman writhed in the strong grasp of a drunken brute who held over her the handle of a broken broom, just about to descend on the shoulders of his wife as he turned to see who came in. Then the anger of Mrs. Hart's soul rose in might; it seemed to her like fire in her veins instead of blood; her feet flew. Only those who have felt the like possession can know, or tell, what it is that makes the flesh light as smoke, and the spirit a flaming fire. Without one thought of fear or danger, she sprang at the man's arrested arm, wrenched his weapon from his hand, and poured upon him a stream of righteous indignation in hot words that struck shame into his brain, and cowed the brutality that was elementally a coward's, the low nature of a man who could strike a woman.

It was the opening of a new interest for Mrs. Hart; she found the man to be, as might have been expected, a drunkard; that day furious because his wife's scant earnings had been spent for food for their dying child, instead of drink for him. He was astonished at the interference of this slight young woman who had no fear of him, and respected her for what he called her "pluck;" and the two poor women were ready to fall at her feet, for it was the beginning of deliverance to them. A year after, when the daughter had lain months in her peaceful grave, this man—clothed and in his right mind—came up to the altar and confessed Christ, and dated his first impression of the power and reality of religion to courage of the Christian woman who had not feared his rough anger. Here was evidently the province of Sarah Hart's "spiritual dynamite."

Again, its force helped her to break up a ring of boys, two of them from her own class, who were surveying and urging on a dog fight, just as she came round the corner of a street into Potter's Court, one of the slums where her work lay. Her hands had force enough to grasp Jim Pierce by the collar and drag him out of the ring; and her clear, forceful voice was heard in a torrent of disgust and reproach, ringing through the air till every boy slunk or sneaked off, and the miserable dogs ran off yelping from their unwilling conflict.

"Ki!" said Sammy Pierce, Jim's bigger brother. "Didn't them eyes o' her'n snap an' shine? I felt some as though I was struck by lightnin' when she begun for to jaw us. Crickey! she's some punkins! You bet the' a'int nobody a-goin' to be sassy nor bumptious round where she is!"

"The' isn't nobody goin' to be mean nor hard, neither, ef she gets at 'em!" echoed Jimmy.

"I'd ruther ketch the flat of mar's hand acrost my chops forty times than hev Mis' Hart speak as though I was about too great a cuss to be 'round. I tell ye, she means it every time!"

Yet in her own home Harry wondered what new sweetness and strength had visited his "peppery little wife," as he used to call her. The children ceased to look at her when they transgressed, as if shrinking from a sharp word or a quick slap, for they received neither; the servants learned to respect and love her, for she had learned that great lesson of an honest Christian life, that there is not only a requirement, but a possiblity, of "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."—Rose Terry Cooke, in Congregationalist.

QUESTIONS.

Can you put the spider's web back in its place
That once has been swept away?
Can you put the apple again on the bough
Which fell at our feet to-day?
Can you put the lily-cup back on the stem,
And cause it to live and grow?
Can you mend the butterfly's broken wing
That you crushed with a hasty blow?
Can you put the bloom again on the grape,
And the grape again on the vine?
Can you put the dewdrops back on the flowers,
And make them sparkle and shine?
Can you put the petals back on the rose?
If you could would it smell as sweet?
Can you put the flower again in the husk,
And show me the ripened wheat?
Can you put the kernel back in the nut,
Or the broken egg in the shell?
Can you put the honey back in the comb,
And cover with wax each cell?
Can you put the perfume back in the vase
When once it has sped away?
Can you put the corn-silk back on the corn,
Or down on the catkins? say.
You think my questions are trifling, dear?
Let me ask another one:
Can a hasty word ever be unsaid,
Or a deed unkind undone? —Wide Awake.

MR. "TEN MINUTES."

A touching story is told of the late Prince Napoleon. He had joined the English army, and was one day at the head of a squad riding horseback outside of the camp. It was a dangerous situation. One of the company said: "We had better return. If we don't hasten we may fall into the hands of the enemy." "Oh," said the prince, "let us stay here ten minutes and drink our coffee." Before the ten minutes had passed, a company of Zulus came upon them, and in the skirmish the Prince lost his life. His mother, when informed of the facts, in her anguish said: "That was his great mistake from his babyhood. He never wanted to go to bed at night in time, nor to arise in the morning. He was ever pleading for ten minutes more. When too sleepy to speak, he would lift up his two little hands and spread out his ten fingers, indicating that he wanted ten minutes. On this account I sometimes called him "Mr. Ten Minutes."

How many have lost not only their lives, but their precious souls, by this sin of procrastination! When God calls we should promptly obey.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

THE HARD PROBLEM.

I know of a boy who was preparing to enter the junior class of the New York University. He was studying trigonometry and I gave him three examples for his next lesson. The following day he came into my room to demonstrate his problems. Two of them he understood, but the third—a very difficult one—he had not performed. I said to him, "Shall I help you?"

"No, sir. I can and I will do it if you give me time."

I said, "I will give you all the time you wish."

The next day he came into my room to recite another lesson on the same study.

"Well, Simon, have you worked that example?"

"No, sir," he answered; "but I can and will do it if you give me a little more time."

"Certainly, you shall have all the time you desire."

I always like those boys who are determined to do their own work, for they make our best scholars, and men, too. The third morning you should have seen Simon enter my room. I knew he had it, for his whole face told the story of his success. Yes, he had it, notwithstanding it had cost him many hours of the severest mental labor. Not only had he solved the problem, but, what was of infinitely greater importance to him, he had begun to develop mathematical powers, which, under the inspiration of "I can and I will," he has continued to cultivate, until to-day he is a professor of mathematics in one of our largest colleges, and one of the ablest mathematicians of his years in our country.

My young friends, let your motto ever be, "If I can, I will.—Evangelist.

The heart that is not entrusted to Him for searching will not be undertaken by Him for cleansing; the life that fears to come to the light lest any deed should be reproved can never know the blessedness and privileges of walking in the light.—F. R. Havergal.

TEMPERANCE.

"YOUNG FELLER, YOU'RE A-FIRE, THERE!"

BY W. F. DAVIS.

It was a crisp morning on the 29th of November, 1881.

Having held a Gospel Temperance meeting with the men of Bennett's Camp the evening before, Bro. Mills and I had walked down to the track of the Saginaw Bay and Northwestern Logging R. R., and were waiting for the next logging train to take us to Pinconning, Michigan, near the shore of Lake Huron.

Several stout woodsmen near us were trundling pine logs upon the skidways beside the railroad, when an old man appeared, walking down the track, accompanied by a boy of seventeen. Smoke was pouring from the mouth of the man, but this seemed to surprise no one. A glance of the campmen at the boy, however, from whose right hip-pocket smoke was also issuing, led one of them to shout, "Young feller, you're a fire, there!"

The lad quickly pulled a pipe from the smoking pocket, and beat out the fire from his clothing, which, having caught from his pipe, had, until the woodsman's warning, smouldered unobserved.

This little incident occasioned me to wonder greatly—

1. That any one should be more alarmed to see smoke coming from a man's pocket than from his mouth.

2. That the consumer of tobacco in pipes and cigars seems to forget that every time he puffs smoke from his mouth he burns a hole in his pocket.

3. That so many behave as though their health is better than they need, and therefore deliberately and repeatedly poison themselves.

4. That persons of usually neat habits will, by tobacco-smoking, make of themselves nuisances to others.

5. That the wide extent of this evil should occasion any one to think lightly of it.

6. That so many should pretend that it is necessary to practice that which everybody knows needs to be abandoned.

Young fellow! Old fellow! Any fellow who may be "afire there," God designed your person and your purse for a nobler sacrifice than to become a holocaust upon the altar of the filthy, unhealthy and unwealthy tobacco abomination.

"Thy words were found and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart; for I am called by thy name, O Lord God of hosts."—Jer. 15: 16.—Tract.

$453,790,000 PAID FOR WATER.

How far do the by-products of brewing make up the confessed loss from the shrinkage of grain in malting? This shrinkage is about twenty-eight per cent. One brewer tells me that the sale of the by-products, brewers' grain, kilndust or sprouts and yeast will not make up even one-sixteenth of the loss.

As the shrinkage is stated at nearly twenty-eight per cent, we may fairly conclude that there is a net loss of twenty-five per cent in malting alone.

Another question is, what is the cost of the water and alcohol respectfully in the total of alcoholic beverages used in this country annually?

Prof. Felix Oswald states from the statistics of the Treasury Department that the year's average for the past ten years of the nation's drink bill is:

Whisky and other distilled liquors	$428,000,000
Wines	59,000,000
Ale and beer	140,000,000
Total	$624,000,000

The honest estimate for evasions of revenue is 15 per cent, adding for this to above figures we get—

Whisky, etc	$492,000,000
Wines	64,400,000
Ale and beer	161,000,000
Total	$717,600,000

Allowing 50 per cent as average for the alcohol in distilled liquors, 12½ per cent for wines and 6 per cent for beer, we find that of the total drink bill of $717,600,000, there was paid—

For alcohol	$263 810,000
For water	453,790,000

On the supposition that the alcohol is the useful and valuable part of such drinks. I have, it will be seen, made such a liberal allowance for its presence in the various drinks that I am confident the figures given for it include the value of whatever other substances, sugars, tastes, smell, etc., are in the drinks and that in fact the nation pays in its drink bill of $717,600,000, at least $453,790,000 for the WATER in such drinks.

In the foregoing alcohol and water have been reckoned at the same value per gallon. Giving alcohol its commercial value would of course change the figures. For the use it is put to its value is nil, the water only of the drink being a true nutriment.—Law and Order.

In Louisville, Kentucky, last year, there were 893 arrests, 700 of which were cases of drunkenness.

A certain area of New York City comprises a population of 360,000 and contains 31 Protestant churches and 3,018 saloons.

A W. C. T. U., the first ever organized in Mexico, has just been formed in the City of Mexico. The meetings will be conducted in the Spanish language in order to reach the Mexican women for whom the work was instituted.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, a city that next to Sioux City has had the most rapid growth of any in the State, had, in the days of license, seventeen hard worked policemen. Now it has only eight, and the most they have to do is to preserve eternal vigilance.

Senator Chace has introduced in the Senate, and Mr. Hemphill in the House, a bill prohibiting the selling or giving away of tobacco in the District of Columbia to persons under 16 years of age, under a penalty of thirty days' imprisonment or $25 fine.

James Albert, the winner of the six days' walking match in New York City, made a speech in which he expressed the belief that total abstinence was the prime factor in his success. A local paper, in commenting, says: "His bit of oratory made a good temperance appeal."

The city of Boston has nine rum-sellers in its council, and five men engaged in the same business are members of the State Legislature. The police of the State last year made 30,681 arrests, 19,640 of which were for drunkenness and violation of the liquor laws.

At Madison, Wisconsin, on New Year's Eve a committee of Y. M. C. A. workers visited 24 out of 62 of the saloons of that town, and found in them 232 men between the ages of 16 and 40. At the same time there was a big spree going on at Turner's Hall where about 1,000 men were either drinking or drunk.

The Anti-Prohibition Society of Milwaukee brewers and liquor dealers, has sent the following letter to Senators Sawyer and Spooner: "Considering that there are now pending before the Senate, or will be submitted to its decision, several bills in favor of prohibitory laws for the District of Columbia, the undersigned Board of Directors of the Wisconsin State Anti-Prohibition Association, have, as representatives of 12,000 members, resolved to request you respectively, as their representatives in the United States Senate, to use all your influence to protect the perfect enjoyment of personal liberty in the District of Columbia by opposing such bills tending to oppress personal liberty. Respectfully, P. V. Deuster, President; Andrew F. Fruelich, Recording Secretary."

Senator Ingalls in the Chautauquan for February: "Prohibition is so rigidly enforced in Kansas that there is not an open dramshop or saloon from the Missouri River to Colorado. The consumption of alcoholic liquors has not ceased. A vast amount of beer whisky and other intoxicants is imported surreptitiuously by individuals and convivial associations. The drug stores dispose of immense quantities of bitters and elixirs for indigestion and malaria, which seem to be alarmingly prevalent in localities heretofore considered remarkably salubrious; but the bar room has disappeared. I am not a believer in prohibition as a practical remedy for the evils of intemperance. It diminishes but does not destroy them. The appetite that craves indulgence will be gratified, often at the expense of other moral restraints which are barriers and safeguards of society. My disbelief in prohibition renders me a more disinterested observer of its results, and I do not hesitate to say that though attended with some deplorable tendencies, it has been of great advantage to the State, both morally and from the material and economic standpoint. Very few, if any of its citizens would willingly return to the dominion of the dramshop, with its attendant crime, disorder and social misery. Whether the people would prefer prohibition to high license, I am not sure; but between prohibition and free whisky they would be practically unanimous for prohibition."

tributed literature. I was kindly entertained while here at the home of J. H. McRissick. He and his wife are noble-spirited Christian people.

The next forenoon I spent in visiting Wm. Grey. He is ardently devoted to the anti-secret society reform. He has done much to circulate anti-lodge literature in the past, and I was glad of the opportunity to visit him and invite his co-operation in carrying forward the Iowa work. I also called upon John Wilson. Each of the parties named gave substantial tokens of their interest in the reform.

I had visited the Dunker minister at Cuba and arranged with him to announce a lecture for me at the Cuba school-house, one-half mile distant from his church, on Thursday night. At the time appointed I went to Cuba to lecture, and to my surprise I found the Dunker church lighted up, and a congregation gathering there. I inquired what it meant and learned that one of their ministers had come from Des Moines, who was held in high repute, and an appointment had been made for him. As the arrangements for my lecture had been made with the pastor of the Dunker church, and my lecture had been published by him, and was intended for his congregation, I felt as though it was hardly worth while to go on another half mile to the school-house. But, thinking that possibly a few might come to the lecture, I concluded to go over and explain the matter to them. To my surprise, I found that a good congregation had gathered, who were anxious that I should lecture according to appointment, which I did. The Dunkers were not there, as I had hoped, but Presbyterians, Methodists and citizens generally.

I told them the secret lodge system is one great wedge driven by Satan between its votaries and Christ to separate them from God and heaven. I showed that Freemasonry and its kindred orders were Satanic substitutes for the religion of Christ. I showed that the secret lodge system is a Satanic conspiracy to popularize deistical infidelity; and hence that no person who comprehends the situation will give aid and comfort to the devil, by joining or holding fellowship with the Freemasons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias or any other infidel society, who acknowledges Christ Jesus as his Lord and Saviour, or even cherishes a respect for our holy Christianity.

An Odd-fellow who was present arose immediately on the conclusion of my lecture to defend the secret society system. He seemed anxious to throw a shield over Freemasonry. I had mainly assailed Masonry as exhibited in her manuals and monitors, and taught by her representative men, especially those who have been appointed by her Grand Lodges to instruct the brethren, and who have put their instructions in book form for the more permanent edification of the "craft." He opened his remarks by saying, "I would like to ask the gentleman;" but went right on with his interrogative declamation, without giving me any chance to answer. He spoke as though the books I had quoted were forgeries, gotten up by the enemies of Masonry; and with great declamatory power he asked, "Is it possible that the millions of good men in this country and England and in Europe, who are members of the Christian churches, would adhere to Masonry if they were forbidden to pray in the name of Christ?" He confessed that he was not a Mason; he knew nothing, he said, of Masonry; but he was an Odd-fellow, and he could recommend the young men to join the Odd-fellows, and the Knights of Pythias, and the Foresters. The lodge sympathizers seemed frantic with delight, especially when he called in question the authenticity of the Masonic works from which I had quoted. They cheered so wildly that it seemed at one time as though the "hells were risen up" and we were to have pandemonium on earth.

I had listened quietly to his fiery utterances, and when he had finished I asked the champion if he had examined the books from which I quoted, giving the name of the author, the title, and the page, so as to know that the quotations were not correctly made; or that the books were not published at Masonic publishing houses, and covered with Masonic emblems, and endorsed by high Masonic authority as the genuine works of their reputed authors? He confessed that he had not; that he knew nothing of them.

It was interesting to see how suddenly the balloon, which had been inflated to such dimensions, collapsed; and the spirit of exultation was gone, as the mortifying fact began to be realized that he had spoken words without knowledge. I then took up the question he had raised, whether, if the rituals of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship are deistical, the church members and ministers of England and America would belong to these orders. Questions were asked by other gentlemen, and answered. A quantity of literature was distributed, and the meeting adjourned in a very quiet manner. The defender of the lodge came to me and shook my hand and said, "I beg pardon, sir, I did not mean to insult you." And so I left, with an open door, through which I may return again if the Lord please.

Religious News.

—The Moody and Sankey revival meetings began at Sioux City, Iowa, Feb. 22, in the old skating rink, which was packed at all the meetings, and hundreds were unable to gain admission. Over two hundred clergymen from neighboring towns were in attendance.

—Rev. D. McAllister, D. D., of the Pittsburgh Reformed Presbyterian church, sailed on Saturday, March 3d, in company with Mr. Henry O'Neill, of New York, for a visit to the mission fields of Syria, and to attend the Council of Reformed churches in London July next.

—The revival services in the Friends church, at Whittier, California, have closed. There were twenty-five professed conversions.

—J. W. Butler reported to the late Protestant General Assembly in Mexico, the following statistics: "There are 18 different missions in the Mexican Republic; 11 different denominations; 123 foreign workers; 12,135 communicants; adherents about 30,000; there have been 59 martyrs; there are 88 ordained native preachers, and 65 unordained.

—At Kioto, Japan, there are 550 students in the training school of the American Board, 64 of whom are in the theological department.

—A general conference on Foreign Missions is to be held in June next. This meeting to celebrate a Century of Missions grows in magnitude and importance. There is a prospect of a gathering of an unprecedented number of representatives from almost all the missionary societies of the world. Between eighty and ninety societies in Britain, America and the Continent have already intimated their intention of sending delegates to the meetings to be held in Exeter Hall, London, beginning on the 9th and continuing to the 19th of June.

—Before the establishment of the British Bible Society there existed only about thirty-three translations of the entire Bible, although there were a good many partial ones. Now the number of entire translations is eighty-three, and of the New Testament alone 171.

—A great revival has recently been experienced at the Ohio Wesleyan University. President Payne held religious services with the students every afternoon and evening for two weeks. Seventy-five professed conversion and hundreds of others were led to a higher plane of Christian experience.

—It is prescribed by law that each year 4,000 copies of the Bible and 10,000 of the New Testament be distributed, when needed, in the German army. Since 1859 there have been distributed in this way 143,000 complete Bibles and 700,000 New Testaments. The emperor appoints a special officer to attend to this matter.

—Nearly one thousand people have attended the Akron, Ohio, revival meetings each night, and already between 200 and 300 have professed conversion. Evangelist Patterson has greatly stirred the people, and many who cannot be drawn into a church attend the rink mass meetings.

—The Reformed Episcopal church, now of about fourteen years' existence, numbers some 30,000 adherents, 100 clergymen and ten bishops.

—The Presbyterian church of which Rev. Dr. John Hall is the pastor supports three missions in and about New York city, and on a few Sundays ago took up a collection of $12,000 for them.

—The money given by the women of the Presbyterian church in the United States during the past sixteen years amounts to $2,150,000—representing the entire support of more than two hundred women missionaries, two hundred native Bible readers, and more than one hundred and fifty schools.

—The Archbishop of Canterbury, as the Premier of the English Established church, has called a meeting of all the bishops of the church for July 3 of the present year at Lambeth Palace, the residence of the Bishop of London. The object of the convention is to discuss ways and means to remedy the evils endangering Christianity and society, especially intemperance, immorality, polygamy and socialism.

—The Gospel missionaries of the W. C. T. U. in the lumber camps of Michigan and Wisconsin have been doing a grand work through the winter. Many camps have been visited and scores of lumbermen have been converted.

Literature.

"Why Priests Should Wed."—Rev. Dr. Fulton's new book on Romanism seems destined to become one of the most celebrated of these times. When the old and highly esteemed publishing house of Rand Avery Company of Boston decided that it would not print the book, on the ground that its contents were so obscene as to be unfit for its female compositors and proof-readers to set the type or read the proofs, it was generally supposed that Dr. Fulton would give up its publication. But his friends came forward and said that he should not be crushed, that his work should not be stopped, and that his book should be printed. He was advised to allow its pages to be modified by the substitution of awfully suggestive plates for those facts which were supposed to be too obscene, and thereby gain all the strength of his original book without the risk of violating the laws for the suppression of immoral and obscene literature. Its contents, were the book made in the commonest form, and had it been printed in the quietest manner possible, would have attracted world-wide attention, for it is brimful of statements which, if true, should arouse every American to the need of some instantaneous action. But can Dr. Fulton be mistaken? Can he be uttering and printing falsehoods? It would seem as though he must know of the things about which he writes and talks so freely. He has had a career of nearly forty years as a clergyman and throughout his whole lifetime he has always been esteemed for his fearless denunciations of wrongs and vices. He has gone forth from his family, his parish and his friends to do what he believes to be his specially ordained work, and in spite of the efforts to crush his work and to suppress his book he seems likely to maintain himself nobly before all the world, and to secure for his book a circulation never before heard of in the annals of book-making. The book has queer, black borders, with the indicative insignia, black edges, striking illustrations, gaudy covers in cloth, illuminated in black, white and red, with terrible designs. Price $1.50. A. A. Woodbridge, publisher, Box 161, Boston, Mass.

A narrative paper of thrilling detail in the March Century is Captain Frank E. Moran's account of the planning, mishaps, and finally successful execution of the tunnel at Libby Prison, the narrator having been one of the party who escaped. The article is illustrated. The Lincoln History also reaches to the beginning of the war and deals with "The Call to Arms," the story of Sumter being retold authoritatively, the narrative being as before, with the aid of unpublished material, and of intense interest. Mr. Kennan continues his revelations in regard to the Russian state prisons, the details of which are remarkable for interest and bear every evidence of authenticity. An interesting incident related by Mr. Kennan is the celebration in the House of Detention at St. Petersburg of the Centennial Fourth of July. In "The Home Ranch," Mr. Theodore Roosevelt gives a continuation of his graphic papers on the daily life of a ranchman, accompanied by illustrations by Frederic Remington, done from the life, and of striking faithfulness in detail. Mrs van Rensselaer's paper in the "English Cathedral" series is devoted to Salisbury. Mr. John Bigelow gives an interesting biographical paper in his "Franklin's Home and Host in France," the host being M. Donatien Le Ray de Chaumont. The unpublished letters from Franklin, Adams, and others help to complete the record of this friendship. The illustrations include portraits of Franklin, M. de Chaumont, and a drawing by Victor Hugo of the house occupied by Franklin This number contains also two full page portraits of Bismarck, one after the bust by Roth, the other (which appears as a frontispiece) is from a photograph and shows the Chancellor in his garden with his two hounds. A paper by the Rev. T. T. Munger considers a pressing question under the title of "Immigration by Passport."

The second number of Our Day blazes with light like the first. Prof. Edmund J. James, of the University of Pennsylvania, is editor of the department of Labor Reform. He discusses the "Socialists and Anarchists of the United States" in an article with such candor, philosophy, clearness and force, that the reader feels the profound satisfaction that this writer does not, for the sake of making out a case, overlook or neglect any single factor of the great problem of social philosophy as related to labor. Prof. Townsend of Boston University writes again of the Jesuit lodge. He swings the battle-axe of a Cœur de Leon. The strategies, the refuges of lies are laid open by his strokes. The fearful indictment he lays upon the Romish priesthood is in this article called out by the repeated and desperate attacks of Rome upon our public schools. J. Macdonald Oxley, an attache of the Dominion Government, and a frequent and popular contributor to our American magazines, writes on the Fisheries Question. From Joseph Cook we have the first Monday Lecture of this year, "Did Christ Teach by Inspiration," with a prelude on "Assassination as a Weapon of the Saloon," with special reference to the Haddock case. Published at 28 Beacon St., Boston. $2 per year.

In addition to the monthly Library Magazine which is largely an eclectic, Mr. John B. Alden of New York last week issued the first number of an illustrated weekly entitled Literature. Maurice Thompson contributes "Some Notes of Creole Literature. The list of new books and of index of magazine literature is a valuable addition. $1 per year.

Artistic Modern Houses of Low Cost.—The Co operative Building Association of New York send out another book of designs by Shoppell. These are sixty in number and vary from the six room cottage costing $600 to the large house of ten or twelve rooms costing $4 000. Full building specifications are furnished with any plan for an architect's fee. It is interesting to note the changes that have been made within a few years, combining artistic exterior effects with greater economy and convenience of inside arrangement. A majority of the plans in this publication are some combination of the square style, which always gives most room for the money.

season and the difficulty in procuring workmen he can hardly insure the completion of the canal in 1890. The statement shows that 110,000 000 francs were in hand Jan. 1, 1888. Pending the decision of the government regarding the lottery loan it has been decided to proceed with a third issue of bonds of 1 000 francs each to the value of 600,000,000 francs.

A dispatch from Baracoa, Cuba, eighty miles from Havana, states that a mother murdered her four children in cold blood. She chopped off the heads of two of them with a hatchet, and the other two she held in a tub of water until drowned, and then cut them up. She said, when arrested and taken to jail, that the devil tempted her to the crime.

Official news was received at London Friday that the condition of the German Crown Prince is alarming. Upon receipt of this intelligence the Lord Chamberlain communicated with the Queen and was ordered to prepare to postpone the receptions at the shortest notice. Arrangements are being made privately to transport the German Crown Prince to Berlin. On account of the animosity felt in Berlin, Dr. MacKenzie will not accompany the prince, but will proceed direct to London. A dispatch from San Remo to the North German Gazette says that persons who have seen the Crown Prince state that he looks many years older than when he left Berlin. His beard is white and he has become very thin, weighing now hardly 154 pounds. His handwriting, however, is as clear and firm as ever. He has written his will and a political testament for his son, Prince William.

A South American Congress will be held at Montevideo beginning July 18, having for its principal object the making of a treaty for the determination of questions of international rights pending between South American countries.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.

A profuse and many times excessively offensive discharge, with "stopping up" of the nose at times, impairment of the sense of smell and taste, watering or weak eyes, impaired hearing, irregular appetite, occasional nausea, pressure and pain over the eyes, and at times in the back of the head, occasional chilly sensations, cold feet, and a feeling of lassitude and debility, are symptoms which are common to catarrh, yet all of them are not present in every case. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures catarrh in its worst forms and stages. It is pleasant to use, and contains no poisonous or caustic drugs. Of druggists, for 50 cents.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, bnt because it gives much valnable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pnre negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining fnll and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOW THEY BEGAN HOUSEKEEPING.

Mr. Youngman of St. Anthony Hill married a very pretty and sweet little lady a few days ago, and he furnished a house to establish her in as soon as the nuptials were completed. He was congratulating himself on having bought everything that would be needed in the proper running of a well-organized household, and was not a little surprised the second morning after the wedding by his wife handing him a card on which was written a list of articles which she requested him to bring home when he came from work. The list ran as follows:

Stove-polish.
Hard soap.
Oatmeal.
Curtain fixtures.
Picture hooks and cord.
Coal-sieve.
Rolling pin.
Dust-pan.
Broom.
Stove-brush.
Paper eight ounce tacks.

Mr. Youngman reads over the list, and tries to remember that he bought all of these things when he furnished the house, but he can't.

"Hadn't you better go down with me and order them yourself, darling?" he says.

"No, no, dear," she replies. "You can get them well enough."

"But I might not get just what you want," he suggests.

"O, you goose," she says, smilingly, throwing her arm around his neck and dropping a kiss on his lips; "you know I'd be satisfied with anything you buy me."

"I wouldn't be single again for anything," mused Mr. Youngman, as he tripped lightly down stairs.

That noon Mr. Youngman brought home the desired articles and laid them on the table. Mrs. Youngman looked over the articles, and said:

"O, Will! what'd you get this kind of stove-polish for? It isn't half so good as the other. And this soap! Why, my mother never would have that brand in the house. How much'd you pay for this oatmeal?"

"Twenty-five cents."

"Twenty five cents! Why, you can get splendid oatmeal at Schwab's for 15 cents a package."

"Those curtain fixtures are an inch too wide for the windows. I wonder you didn't know that."

"O, you got green picture cord, didn't you? Well, I won't use it. I always want red picture cord."

"That coal-sieve is too coarse. It'll let half the good coal through it. Why didn't you think of that?"

"That rolling pin is altogether too heavy. I wanted a light one."

"I was in hopes that you'd get a bronze dust pan instead of this yellow one."

"That broom is too heavy. A lighter one would have done just as well, and it wouldn't have cost so much."

"The bristles in that stove brush are too stiff. I wanted a softer one."

"O, Will, why didn't you get galvanized tacks? Those iron ones rust out so quick. They ain't good at all."

Mr. Youngman waits until his young wife gets through, and, wondering what has brought such a change over her since morning, puts his arm around her and says:

"What is the matter with my little wife?"

Her dainty head falls on his shoulder, and between the sobs that shake her slight frame, she says:

"Wi-Will, I fe-eel so ba-bad. I wanted to make some bi-bi-biscuit this noon, a-a-and got the wa-wa-water and sa-sa-alt and ye-ye-yeast; but there's something mi-mi-missing, and I can't think wha-wha-what it is."

Mr. Youngman smiled quietly, and, clasping his young wife to his watch pocket, he placed his lips to her ear and whispered "Flour."

SWEEPING BY THE DAMP CLOTH SYSTEM.

Helen Campbell claims that sweeping is far less a frequent need than is supposed. The dust must be removed, but a damp cloth is a key to its removal, and the damp cloth system a saving of much hard labor as well as wear and tear to the carpets. Says the authority mentioned: "Put a spoonful of ammonia in half a pail of warm water, and wipe the carpet with a cloth wrung out from this water. The dust is removed, the colors freshened and every stray moth—a possibility everywhere in these days of furnaces—finds a sudden end. Fluff, insidious and unconquerable, forming itself in mysterious rolls under beds and in corners, is reduced to its lowest terms, sinks into almost impalpable unpleasantness before the damp cloth, instead of sailing triumphantly before the broom. The broom will still be an essential, but as servant, not monarch, and even where one cannot afford a carpet sweeper need never again involve the amount of hard work associated with it.

—To keep cake from sticking to the pan, without using paper, after greasing the pan, sift a little flour in, then turn it over and shake out all that you can.

A VOLUNTARY STATEMENT.

The writer of this paragraph once had an elder and only brother. Brought up together, we were almost inseparable, hopeful and ambitious. Exposure planted the seeds of consumption in the elder, and in a few weeks, in the month of May, "good store of flowers were stuck round about his winding-sheet." Every attention and every remedy that love could give or obtain were unavailing. Since that sad day, I have learned, through the most trustworthy authority and from experience in its use, that a real remedy now exists, that of Dr. Pierce, called the "Golden Medical Discovery." A thousand pities that it was not discovered ages ago, but how thankful the present generation should be that it can now avail itself of so potent a remedy.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequaled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS.

Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century."

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

President Cleveland on Tuesday directed that the new military post at Highwood, near Chicago, be known and designated as Fort Sheridan.

The national debt statement, issued Thursday afternoon, shows that the reduction of the public debt during the month of February amounted to $7 756,366 Total cash in the Treasury, $572,390,989.

Ex Justice Strong of the United States Supreme Court, questions the constitutionality of the Blair Educational bill, and expresses the opinion that his views are those of his former associates, now on the Bench. This is a strong argument against the measure and will exercise no little influence.

At the evening session of the lower House of Congress Friday twenty five pension bills were passed.

The Secretary of the Treasury is advised of an organized movement for the emigration of German convicts to this country, and has taken steps to guard against the landing of all such passengers.

CHICAGO.

Emma Lang, a pretty Geman girl 16 years of age, living at 318 Clybourn avenue, committed suicide yesterday by taking "Rough on Rats." A severe whipping the night before by her mother, in the presence of the whole family, drove her to the deed.

Chicago has raised over $15,000 for the afflicted people of Mt. Vernon, Ill.

A change in the city engineer has made way for discovering numerous peculations and gross mismanagement. The big engines which were the pride of Grand Masier Cregier are almost ready to be condemned.

COUNTRY.

Washtenaw county, the first in Michigan to vote against prohibition, gave a majority of 1,550 for the "wet" ticket. Thirty counties in the State have voted for the new law. Berrien county, Tuesday, adopted the local prohibition law by a plurality of 525. Emmet county gives a plurality of 235 in favor of prohibition.

The law enacted by the last Legislature of Wisconsin, permitting drunkards to be sentenced to the inebriate asylum, was Tuesday declared invalid by the State Supreme Court, on the ground that the statute virtually makes drunkenness a crime.

Samuel Morrison, an Indiana surveyor and pioneer, died at Indianapolis Thursday on his 90th birthday. His first recorded achievement was a map of Indiana, published in 1816; the one he was proudest of was a map of Vicksburg sent to General Grant, in which he claimed he originated the plan of the capture.

The Supreme Court at Montgomery, Ala., decided the act establishing a colored university to be unconstitutional, on the ground that the money appropriated was part of a fund which had been declared by the constitution to be for common schools, and which could not be used for a university.

Miss Clara Barton, president of the Red Cross Association of the United States, accompanied by Dr. Hubbel, field agent of the Association, and Mrs. Dr. Debrur, of Evansville, is visiting Mt. Vernon, Ill. Miss Barton comes in response to an invitation of the Relief Committee. After a personal inspection of the ruins she expressed great surprise at the extent of the damage, and says it exceeds her expectations; that the loss of life is greater, and the number of wounded larger, and the situation generally much worse than she supposed.

While a farmer named Miller and his wife were at church Monday night at Fairhaven, Minn., their house was burned and their three children, aged 13, 10, and 7, perished in the flames.

New Yorkers have seldom witnessed such swift destruction by fire as that of Thursday, when all the big factory buildings in the block east of Lexington avenue and between Forty first and Forty-second streets, were wiped out of sight in less than an hour. Part of the elevated railroad on Forty-second Street was wrecked. There was great excitement in the neighborhood, particularly in the Hospital for Ruptured and Crippled Children, which was for a time in danger. The losses amounted to about $1,000,000. Several persons were injured, and for a time there was a belief that some lives had been lost.

The Union Square Theater, at New York, was totally destroyed by fire Tuesday afternoon, and the Morton House, adjoining, was badly damaged. Six firemen were severely injured and burned, being caught under the falling roof of the theater, and many of the guests and employes of the hotel had narrow escapes. The loss is estimated at $750,000.

News reached Houston, Texas, Tuesday, of a terrible tragedy at Spanish Camp, a disreputable place sixty miles from Houston, of the burning of a negro cabin by whites, who killed five of the negroes as they ran out and wounded another, while two were burned in the flames. No arrests have been made. The cause of the crime is said to be a suit over the title of the land where the negroes lived, which had just been decided in their favor.

The case of Horace Murray, sentenced in Kalamazoo, Mich., Tuesday, to fifty years' imprisonment for the rape of his 9-year old cousin, was the second case tried under the new age-of consent law of last winter. The first was that of Francis Herbert, who received a life sentence for assaulting Anna Myers.

The Ohio House Friday passed a measure to close saloons on Sunday throughout the State by a vote of 70 to 20.

The land and emigration agent of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, sold a tract of 51,000 acres of farming and grazing land situated thirty four miles north of Mobile. The purchasers are well known residents of St. Louis, Shelbyville, Ill., and Vincennes, Ind., who intend to build a large hotel on the property and start a town to be called Deer Park.

Dr. McGlynn was granted a permanent injunction at New York Friday restraining Henry George and his followers from incorporating the Anti-poverty Society.

Athens, Ga., was much aroused Friday when it was publicly made known that Mormon elders had suddenly appeared and were getting ready to issue cheap excursion tickets to Utah. The matter will be immediately investigated. In the meantime the elders will probably disappear. It is thought that several converts have been made recently.

At Clinton, Iowa, Friday afternoon, Mrs. Frank Brown and her babe were fatally burned by their clothing taking fire from an exploded kerosene lamp.

A cyclone struck Newton, Kansas, at 5 o'clock Friday. The cloud approached from the southwest. The north wing of the carriage works was unroofed and William J. Lacey, in attempting to run from the building, was caught by the falling roof and instantly killed. A cluster of dwellings, nine in number, in the southeast part of the city, was struck by the storm and seven of them totally destroyed, and in the wreck of one of them two ladies were caught and one is thought to be fatally injured. Reports from the country adjacent to the city are that several houses were destroyed.

FOREIGN.

A large number of unemployed workingmen engaged in a riot at Rome Thursday. Bake shops were broken into and pillsged, and the police who attempted to arrest the rioters were driven away with stones. Finally the mob was dispersed by troops. Many of the rioters were arrested. No blood was shed.

The negotiations between the Vatican and Russia have proved fruitless. Russia demanded impossible concessions, stipulating that Catholic Bishops throughout Russia should be appointed by the Czar; that the Russian language should be exclusively used in Catholic churches in Russia, both in preaching and catechizing, and that the offspring of mixed marriages should be educated in the orthodox Russia church.

M. de Lesseps, in his report to the extra meeting of the Panama Canal Company in Paris, states that the ill will of the opponents of the canal, which resulted in compelling the company to borrow money at a higher rate of interest than was expected, is the only cause of the increased cost and of the intimidation of certain of the company's contractors. Owing to the prevalence of the rainy

In their Monday meetings some months ago, the ministers of several of the religious denominations in this city petitioned the mayor and common council to close all saloons located within one square of all houses of worship and of the public schools of the city, unless such saloons were licensed by request of a majority of the legal voters residing within the distance of one square of the church building or school. The appeal was in such general terms that the city officers promptly ignored it, but the other day when the faculty of a medical college asked that no saloon be licensed within a certain distance of their institution, Mayor Roche granted the request immediately. Let us try again for the public schools.

Chairman Dickie, of the National Prohibition Committee, has officially announced that the time of meeting of the National Prohibition Convention in Indianapolis has been changed from June 6 to May 30. Professor Dickie states as the reason for this change that, "from both the United Press and the Associated Press we learn that it will be impossible to secure adequate reportorial and telegraphic service and newspaper space to properly report two National conventions at the same time. This fact, together with the general desire of leading prohibitionists to have our convention at an early date, has induced the executive committee to take such action."

In the campaign of 1884 the platforms of the Prohibitionists of the District of Columbia and of Cincinnati were widely commended because they feared not to speak with disfavor of the secret manipulations of the lodge in politics. The declaration of the District Union, published in the American last week, reiterates the decision of four years ago, "that confidence in politics can only be preserved by perfect openness, as opposed to all secret methods." This proposition is so self-evident that he must be too warped and prejudiced to be a Prohibitionist who denies or opposes it. The whole platform is ably drawn.

While we are trying to rouse our grave and punctilious Senate to appreciate the demands of present reform and slough off the traditional secret session, let us ask in the name of justice and of the Republic that no more agents of monopolies, rings or lodges be sent to misrepresent American patriotism in that body. "Behind every one of half of the portly and well dressed members of the Senate," says the Chicago Tribune "can be seen the outline of some corporation interested in getting or preventing legislation, or of some syndicate that has invaluable contracts or patents to defend or push." The Times of New York is even more explicit in its charges: "There are sitting in the Senate of the United States sixteen Senators who owe their election entirely to the indirect use of money and the exercise of corporate power and influence of their respective States. Why mince words. The Democratic party can not throw stones at the Republican harlot. They are not without sin."

Dr. Fulton attempted again to address the people of Chicago on the evils of Romanism last week. Battery D. was engaged for Monday evening, but the thousands who gathered before the door found it closed. It was explained that the new police superintendent Hubbard had interfered and prevented the meeting. His story is that several influential men,—whose names he keeps in his own possession, like a good Mason—called on him with the assurance that there would be a great row if the meeting went on. In the interest of the peace of the city, he asked that the hall be closed. But there are other explanations which are not so flattering of Mr. Hubbard's bravery as even his own. The fact is, doubtless, the word of priests and politicians weighed more than official duty or patriotism. There seemed to be no disturbing element among the people who assembled, and no one of them feared trouble. Mr. Hubbard will always find men to protect Ingersoll in his abuse of religion; but if the valuable American commodity of free speech in Chicago is to be at the disposal of the chief of police, Mayor Roche must find one who has at least got a back-bone.

We commend to Mr. Hubbard the example of Mayor Hewitt of New York. As everybody knows the 17th inst is "St. Patrick's day" and the Irish are to be out "a-wearing of the green," while Orangemen fret to fly at them with brick-bats and curses. Irish politicians dominate in New York and they have sent up word to Albany for Governor Hill to come down and grace their show. He humbly replies that he will obey, for he is holding his hat for Presidential chestnuts. Then Mayor Hewitt was visited. The delegation asked him to review the parade and reminded him that Irishmen vote the Democratic ticket and made him Mayor. The reply they got stunned them like the tap of a shillalah: "I may be a candidate for Mayor or for President next fall [with a smile], and may want all the Democratic votes I can get. The Irish votes cast for any particular candidate in this city would elect him. But for the purpose of getting this vote I will not come down to the level of reviewing any parade because of the nationality of its members—either Irish, German, or Italian. I will review no parades except those I am officially called on as Mayor to review."

The old Emperor William passed away Friday morning, sincerely mourned by the German people, and amid expressions of sympathy from every quarter of the globe. None were more sincere than from France, whose people are touched with generous emotion at the spectacle of a venerable monarch sinking into the grave, and the Prince, his successor, struggling manfully with a fatal disease while in his prime. For the moment war and vengeance are forgotten. The new Emperor Frederick and the Empress Victoria, eldest daughter of Victoria of England, returned to Berlin Monday from Italy. He may also succumb in a few weeks, and upon his son, Prince William, a young man of twenty-five, all eyes now center, and great hopes rest. Bismarck looks upon him as a future leader; and many Germans, since the young man joined a Protestant society of Berlin which is endeavoring to counteract anarchy with religion among the working classes, have prayed with hope that he might be a man whom the Lord hath chosen.

SECRET SOCIETIES ARE AN INJURY TO THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

PAPER BY MISS JOANNA P. MOORE, LELAND UNIVERSITY, BEFORE THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION.

God's church as he organized it is the only agency needed to carry forward his work. There, all the forces should be marshalled that are needed to fight sin and Satan in all their forms, and the great Captain of our salvation should have all the glory. The soldiers must be actuated only by pure, unselfish motives. They must have the "mind of Christ." But as soon as we take the unconverted into our ranks to help, then we upset all God's plans. A mixed multitude always brings confusion. The formation of societies by Christians should be carefully guarded, or they will open the door for the world to come in.

Our reform societies, such as those for temperance, missions, anti-secretism, etc., seem to have grown out of the fact that the church was not doing her duty. They have acted like a committee within the church to do the work of the church, and therefore were a part of the church. But in so many instances the churches did not respond to the efforts of these good men and women to purify the church. Hence these organizations have been obliged to go forward with their work independent of the sanction of many of the churches. But the best of all the churches were with them. It was the work of the church, because the workers were church members, and the great head of the church had the glory and the honor of the work done, but how much better it would have been had the church itself done the work!

A Christian friend once told me that he could not have gone all over this world so safely had he not been a Mason—they had helped and protected him all the way. I replied, "I do not know how far Masonry has extended, but surely not far beyond the Christian religion. The password, Christ Jesus, ought to open all hearts and homes. It does so for me, and to me it seems wicked to exalt any name above the name of Christ. Besides, when I receive this kindness for Christ's sake, I have the consciousness that the poorest disciple has the same privilege without paying money for it, and God gets all the glory; but with you Masonry gets the glory."

To a certain extent the church has been to blame for this. Nearly all secret and benevolent societies have been formed to protect us when in trouble and care for us when sick. The church has not used the hospitality the Bible requires. She has in so many cases failed to remember, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

But the great evil is that these societies went outside of the church and mixed up with the world. We have in this State and other States a number of so-called benevolent societies, not secret. They are the result of the lukewarmness and negligence of the church as regards her duty to the poor. All they do should have been done by the church. A treasury should be formed and a systematic way of caring for the sick and poor and burying the dead should all be inside of the church. We need this work to keep our hearts aglow with the pure love of benevolence; Christ should be our inspiration in work for the poor. O, it is a sweet—it is a grand thing to do a kindness to a poor person, feeling, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me!"

How close this brings us to Christ! What a blessing comes to the church through this loving work for God's poor! That suffering brother does not need help, more than I need to give it, in order that I may grow in grace and become more like Jesus. This care for the poor is a great means of grace, of which the church has been robbed by the formation of these outside societies.

All that is good in any of these societies they have stolen from the Christian religion and given to Baal the honor which belongs to God. It takes away the Christian sweetness of this benevolent work. When the members of these societies receive a kindness they say, "I paid my monthly fees. You have a right to take care of me, so come right along and do it."

These are not secret societies, but they are training schools for the secret orders. At first they were only formed of church members, but now they take in the unconverted and are often controlled by them. Many of them wear a regalia and bury their dead with as much pomp and parade as do the secret orders. Cannot you see that they prepare the way for secret societies?

All these organizations, secret and non-secret, seem to have only one object in view, namely, taking care of No. 1. They are purely selfish from beginning to end. There is no Christ in it at all. We want the "love of Christ to constrain" every Christian heart to rescue the perishing, care for the dying and push forward every good work. No indifference on the part of the recipient can cool this love, because it gets its inspiration from the never-failing fountain of God's love. What is there in any worldly organization that any Christian wants? Is not Christ his satisfying portion? If a child of God goes out into the world for help or amusement he is sure to get wounded. We have one very common way of going out into the world to get money for the church and for God's cause in general. This has wounded many, and well nigh killed the spirituality of the church. "Come out and be ye separate."

The one thought that I want to leave with you and in my own heart is this: All that is done for God's cause and the good of mankind should be done through his own organization, the church. If you give the work into any other hands, you rob the church of her strength, of her glory. You take the Christian's money and the Christian's labor and lay it on the altar of Baal. The world gets the praise due to God's name. A great injury has been done to the cause of Christ. The power of the church is weakened. She is even treated with contempt, and we are told over and over again, "other societies will do more for me than the church will." God help us to see this dangerous point!

I accept this anti-secret society as a part of the church,—the best and purest part, the part that has seen the great evil of Christians mixing up with the world, and are, therefore, united for the purpose of purifying God's church, rather than forming another society. I am with you heart and hand. I can only do a very little, but I want to do my very little with as much earnestness and enthusiasm as if the success of the whole work depended solely on my efforts.

Finally, my brethren, "Be strong and of good courage, and do it. Fear not nor be dismayed, for the Lord God, even my God, will be with thee. He will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the house of the Lord." 1st Chron. 28: 20.

LIMITATIONS OF THE RIGHT OF CONSCIENCE.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

In the Sabbath-school of one of our leading churches there recently occurred quite a discussion as to the relation of professed Christians to amusements: such as theater-going, dancing and card-playing; and though wine-drinking, tobacco-using and membership in the lodge were not mentioned, they might have all been included. With scarcely a dissenting voice, it was decided that these were matters of conscience, about which the individual Christian should exercise his freedom, and that no one had a right to lay down any absolute rule for his conduct.

It seemed to me that they might with equal propriety have gone a step farther, and included dueling, slave-holding, gambling, polygamy and numerous other practices that either are or have been tolerated in the professed Christian church, and upon which the consciences of Christians are not equally enlightened.

It is manifest that this freedom of conscience, or right of private judgment, in matters of faith and practice, which is the central idea of Protestantism, has its limitations. While we cannot admit the idea of an infallible pope or church, we must and do admit that there are great landmarks, both of doctrine and morals, that no one can transcend without a forfeiture of his right to the Christian name, and that there is a general consensus of Christian morality which, though it may vary in different ages and under different circumstances, does constitute a practical tribunal, which all believers are bound to respect. Honest differences there doubtless may be, both as to doctrine and practice. Such differences existed in the primitive church, and apostolic rule was toleration. "One believeth he may eat all things; another that is weak eateth herbs. Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not; and let not him that eateth not judge him that eateth; for God hath received him." "One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." Rom. 4: 3, 5.

So there have, all down the ages, been questions of Scriptural interpretation and religious opinion, about which all men may exercise their rights of judgment. Such questions as, Who are the subjects and what should be the mode of baptism? What is true of the doctrines of election, decrees and of the saints' perseverance? After endless discussion, Christians equally excellent, have continued to differ. Upon such questions there has come to be a universal agreement of toleration, and no one is denied Christian fellowship on account of the views he entertains.

But there is another class of questions, the decision of which depends not so much on men's intellectual apprehension of doctrine as on their knowledge of the nature and extent of the Divine law. They are questions of morals and not of opinion merely. The difference in conviction and course of conduct on this class of questions has been even more marked than in the former class. But it was a difference like that about the shape of the earth and its relation to the heavenly bodies; a knowledge of the facts of the science brought immediate changes.

The Christian church once tolerated dueling. The trial by battle was once considered a Christian method of settling, not only international, but individual disputes. Some devout Christian men have been slave-holders and slave-dealers. Men of unquestionable piety have been polygamists, dram-drinkers and dram-sellers. There are to-day people who most sincerely trade in lottery tickets, visit the theater and belong to the lodge. And yet these are not questions about which there is, as in the other class, the right of private judgment, for they are all capable of settlement by a simple knowledge of the truth. A man may honestly think that the earth is flat, and that the sun revolves round it, but a better acquaintance with the science would make him think differently. Men may have been quite sincere in defending slavery, polygamy and war, but it is only because they had an imperfect and perverted conception of their obligations to God and humanity.

When the men of science have demonstrated a truth in astronomy or geology they do not accord the right of private judgment to those who, because of their ignorance, honestly dissent. No one will forbid Elder Jasper the right to say, "The sun do move;" but very few would think his opinion as worthy of respect as that of Sir Isaac Newton. People dance, play cards, go to the theater and the Masonic lodge because of their low and poor conception of the nature of Christian obligation. Those who have attained to a better type of Christian experience have had such spiritual enlightenment that they do see and know that these things are, at least, hurtful to spiritual progress. We would scarcely admit Bro. Jasper as a judge in astronomy, and would not hesitate to brush aside the opinions of those who defend his theory, regarding them as entitled to no consideration. So we may rightfully treat the defenders of the theater and the lodge. If we look to those who have profound knowledge of science, as the teachers and leaders of public opinion on scientific questions, so we may also look to the conclusions of eminent Christians who have given this subject of amusements a careful investigation.

No; it is not a matter of private judgment whether a Christian shall dance, go to the theater, join the lodge or drink wine. The fact that other Christians do these things and defend their conduct does not make it so. The consensus of the Christian world (at least the truest and best part of it) condemns these things as wrong, and as obstacles to the coming of the kingdom for which we pray.

So far as the toleration of these practices in the Christian church is concerned, there is certainly no right of conscience. People do not dance, go to the theater, drink wine, or belong to the lodge from any sense of duty. When selfishness suggests withdrawal they withdraw, and have no compunctions of conscience. The practice of these things is an offence to the brethren and an occasion of stumbling to the weak. An enlightened conscience would condemn it for this reason, if for no other; and it is not the unenlightened but the spiritually-minded whose voice should be heard. Least of all, should moral imbeciles be placed in the position of teachers of Christian ethics.

THE CONSTITUTION, BOSTON COMMON AND THE JESUITS.

BY AN OLD LAWYER.

That the Pilgrim Fathers and Mothers were devoted Christians is proved by those most valued instruments: The Declaration of Independence; the Articles of Confederation; the Constitution of the United States; the Act of Virginia, 1783; the Deed of Cession from Virginia, 1784; the Ordinance Passed by Congress, "setting under" the Articles of Confederation of the United States, July, 1787; and the Act of Virginia, 1788. All remarkable as being done "in the year of our Lord," evidently intending to convey to coming generations that the Government of these United States is founded upon Christian principles; love being the foundation stone upon which the whole governmental edifice is built. Acknowledging Christ as the Saviour of mankind by calling him "our Lord," is a wonderful testimony appearing spread out upon the records of these United States—to-day a living evidence that they clung to the promises of God to be fulfilled in them and in succeeding generations, as they should continue to follow after their blessed Lord.

What a rebuke this should be to the present infidel legislators of the land! They are the men who, with their coadjutors, are sapping the foundations of the bulwark of our liberties, civil and religious. There is not a State Legislature in the Union that is not polluted with them. There is an abhorrence, and open disregard among such men of the words Anno Domini. It is looked upon as a burden to write them; and if written, it is considered at most a superfluity and meaningless designation; whereas the opposite is the fact. The figures 1887 are without signification as they stand, but if we write: A. D., 1887; B. C., 1887; or A. M ,1887, then there is a definite signification. Anno Domini, 1887; before Christ, 1887; and Anno Mundi, 1887, signifying respectively, "the year of our Lord," "Before Christ," and "the year of the world."

No wonder then that the infidel City Council in Boston in 1885 passed an ordinance making "public preaching of the Gospel on Boston Common a criminal act." Under this ordinance one W. F. Davis was sent to Charles Street Jail in the city of Boston, "suffering persecution for freely preaching the blessed Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in places of common, public resort in the principal city founded by the Pilgrim Fathers!" Where are John Hancock, Samuel Adams, John Adams, Gerry, Dana, Lovell and Samuel Holden, who, for the State of Massachusetts, signed the Declaration of Independence and the articles of Confederation? Such perfidy in a city honored like Boston, as being founded by the Pilgrim Fathers, is enough to sink it like Sodom and Gomorrah into utter infamy.

Imagine the court before whom the Davis cases must come for trial listening to the several witnesses testifying that Davis did preach on the Boston Common on such and such Sundays, and Davis himself admitting the same to be true and that he had no license from the Boston Fathers for doing so, and the court desiree to sustain the city ordinance,—how can the court close its eyes to the existence of the Constitution? This is something courts are bound to take notice of. Judges and justices, being sworn to support the Constitution, they cannot ignore its requirements and provisions no matter how ignorant of these the attorneys representing the prosecution or defence may be. A law or ordinance is vulnerable or not, according as it agrees with, or contravenes, the Constitution. If the ordinance abridges any right secured by the Constitution, it cannot stand. It must yield to its superior. Davis was denied the use of the Common, notwithstanding it was a place laid off, set aside, and reserved, for the special use and benefit of the inhabitants of Boston, where they could congregate in numbers great or small, few or many, as time or occasion might call. It was a reservation for the pleasure and enjoyment of the people of the city, but not to any particular person more than another, or to a greater or less number of individuals. It was a place of public resort for one person as much as for a thousand. If, then, Davis was prevented from preaching thereon it was a denial of his rights guaranteed him by the Constitution, and to which the people have bound themselves to assist each other against all force offered to or attacks made upon them, "or any of them, on account of religion, or any other pretense whatever."

The Common was a place of public resort. Davis had a constitutional right to be there if he chose. He had a right to address such of the people as chose to listen to him. It was a Constitutional right alike to him and every person who should "demean himself in a peaceable and orderly manner, never to be molested on account of his mode of worship or religious sentiments." (Article I., Ordinance of 1787.)

Davis had a constitutional right to teach and educate the people in religion and morality because "religion, morality and knowledge" are "necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind." Any law or ordinance that cuts off or abridges any one or more of these is unconstitutional and cannot be sustained before any court that knows its duty and will do it. It was equally a denial of the Constitutional rights and liberties of all who may have assembled around Davis to listen to him preaching, to prevent him doing so even if they did so out of pure curiosity or to laugh at and ridicule him. If on the other hand some desired to listen for the purpose of gaining knowledge, they also had an equal right to hear and enjoy his preaching, no matter how different in character that enjoyment might be to either class of the listeners, and no law or ordinance can stand before the Constitution that thus seeks to strike at the foundation of the bulwark that secures to us our liberties, and such must be the language of every State Constitution and the aim of all legislative enactments or city ordinances within these United States touching the personal rights and liberties of her people, who are the beneficiaries of these trusts, W. F. Davis and those on the same mission included.

It looks, however, at present as if the time was drawing near, very near, when these rights and liberties so sacred and dear to the American citizen will soon be things of the past. Papacy comes boldly to the front, and through one of its orators in the first German Catholic Convention assembled at Chicago, in a gathering from all quarters of 3,000 people, in unmistakeable language declares and publishes to the world in open meeting, "That the Catholics should support the Pope by secret obedience, and if NECESSARY, BY RESISTANCE, COMPEL THE TEMPORAL AUTHORITIES TO MAKE THE REQUIRED CONCESSIONS."

A few years ago at a political meeting down East, a person hastily it was thought cried out, "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion." Now it is here, and here with a vengeance in its threefold capacity. The great pests of society have invariably been found clinging to the Catholic church. Under her shelter crimes are committed with impunity. Courts and juries are dictated to by her favorite votaries, and her confessional chambers are legalized places of concealment for the most horrid of crimes. Popery is rampant, and Pope Leo XIII. is coming to establish his See in the United States and have a monument erected to his Holiness in New York! Why, it does look as if it was true, as Pope Gregory XVI. once said, that "he was nowhere completely the Pope except in North America." Does not this account for the utterance of that deliberate and brazen untruth spoken by President Spaunhorst at the close of this first convention of German Roman Catholics, that, "as freedom in the United States had supported Catholicism, so would the Catholic church be the salvation of this great country. Had it not been for the assistance of the Catholic church in years gone by, freedom in this country might long since have perished." God help the United States if the freedom of her people depends upon the autocrat of Rome. Is not this an attempt to put the lie upon our articles of confederation, and our State and United States Constitutions?

DIVORCE AND MORALS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

In the Bibliotheca Sacra for January, 1888, there is an article on "Some Relation of Divorce to Social Morality," by Rev. Alexander R. Merriam, Grand Rapids, Mich. He gives a brief historical sketch showing that lax marriage laws and licentiousness went hand in hand in Greece and Rome; animadverts upon the celibacy and refusal to divorce in the Catholic church, and the revolt of the Reformers on the continent and the Puritans of New England which led to the opposite extreme of laxness; and mentions this growing injustice that "good women, who will not touch the harlot with their little fingers, yet suffer the society and advances of men who make harlots."

Then come the facts. "Divorces have doubled in proportion to marriages in the thirty years from 1850 to 1880. In Connecticut it had become in the latter year one divorce to every ten and four-tenths marriages; in Rhode Island one to eleven; in Massachusets one to twenty-one; in Maine one to ten; in Vermont one to fourteen; for all New England about one to fourteen. In twenty-nine counties in California in a recent year, an investigation found one divorce to seven and four-tenths marriages. In San Francisco in one year one to five and seven-tenths, and in one solitary county in California as low as one to three. In Ohio the number has increased since 1870 ninety-five per cent, while marriages have increased only twenty-nine per cent, and population only thirty per cent. Bishop Gillespie, of Michigan, collected a few years ago, facts from thirty-four counties, which show about one to thirteen. I have personally obtained from the proper officers in Grand Rapids the fact that, from October, 1884, to October, 1885, one divorce was granted to four and a half marriages, as the record of Kent county. For 1886, from the figures so far collected, it will be about one to six, making Kent county one of the banner counties in the country in its disgraceful record against the home."

Judge Jennison, of Michigan, calls this "the dry rot of our society, eating out its life with awful certainty, however strong and prosperous the surface may appear." But the showing against the Protestants is worse when we remember that the Catholics grant no divorces. Also mark this fact: In Massachusetts "between 1860 and 1880 the population increased 45 per cent, marriages increased 25 per cent, and divorces 145 per cent." The same is true throughout New England and presumably elsewhere. And this should be noted likewise.

Families, especially among the better classes, are smaller than formerly; so that we have to face the combined force of four facts, viz: (1) Population is rapidly increasing, and yet (2) there are fewer marriages in proportion to population; (3) more divorces in proportion to marriages; (4) smaller families in marriages."

"The problem then is: Fewer families formed in proportion to population; more homes broken up in proportion to those made; smaller families raised in marriage, especially among the better classes; ignorance and indifference to this whole question among our better Protestant citizens; and yet the lower classes, with their irreligious and socialistic ideas of the family life pushing their way up in a free and unrestricted state, and threatening to dominate legislation of the land on this as on other matters. Here is our problem. Is it not a vital one?"

As to present regulations he says: "South Carolina allows no divorce at all; New York allows only the one cause. Massachusetts gives nine grounds and Michigan seven. Other States vary from three or four to ten. Some of the States, after enumerating a long list of grievances which may sunder the bond, add yet an omnibus clause," unlimited discretion of the court. A divorce granted in any State is legal in every other. After narrating a flagrant case a man designated it "consecutive polygamy" as contrasted with the "contemporaneous polygamy" of Utah. A uniform National Divorce Law is needed. The writer urges in cases of incompatability the vigorous use of legal separation "from board and bed" as the best possible means of future reconciliation.

MISDIRECTED URGENCY FOR FUNDS.

There is an urgent and constant demand for funds. Every department of the work of saving men calls for money with an urgency and emphasis that presses down upon the souls of conscientious Christians with the weight of the atmosphere. The call is for foreign and home missions, for colleges and schools, for the education of ministers, for building churches and parsonages, for the support of superannuated ministers,—well, if I should mention every object for which funds are solicited it would fill the whole sheet. One home missionary society is in debt $25,000, and it requires $55,000 per month to supply the present number of missionaries in the field; and this is not received and churches have been given up.

Then there is a loud call for funds to educate and train more ministers, while there is not money enough contributed to sustain those already in the field. A small number of conscientious Christians have responded, and have practiced rigid self-denial to save money to meet these calls. Children have given their pennies and widows their nickels, boys their quarters and poor laborers their dollars, and still the cry is louder and louder, and the destitution is greater and greater, and the work seems to go backward instead of forward, and still the pressure grows heavier upon this small class of warm-hearted Christians.

Is there not something wrong in this procedure? Is this the way the work of God should be done? Does Christ want any more churches and ministers and colleges, and professors and teachers, like the great average of those that now exist? Are they doing Christ's work of saving sinners? When Luther and Melancthon had a controlling influence in Germany, Christians, churches, and colleges did the work of Christ; and who would not aid with the last penny the work as carried on by those devoted servants of Christ? Men of all classes rushed to their support, and they counted not their lives dear. Not only their money—their lives were devoted. The Wesleys and Whitfields did Christ's work in Christ's way, and both Europe and America felt their power, and both men and money were at their command. Finney, Cowles and others, worked with Christ with his Spirit and in his methods, and Oberlin rose like magic in the wilds of Ohio and towers above colleges of over a century's growth, the peer of the oldest institutions. Christians can afford to give money and labor and time and prayers to build institutions like this. All these, from Luther down to Finney, preached unpopular truths. They faced the world and stood by Christ, and preached his truth and attacked everything that opposed it. They said with Peter and John, "Whether it be right to hearken unto God, or unto you, judge ye." Are the colleges, churches and ministers that we are called upon to build, of this stamp, and will they do Christ's work in this way? Plainly, does Christ want any more of this kind? I speak not of the exceptional ones that are struggling in a right direction, but the great average, just such as are proposed to be built.

Doubtless the world would be blessed and Christ would rejoice to have the whole earth planted with institutions and churches that would do his work in his spirit and his way. But does he want any more such as the great average are and such as we are called upon to build? There is money enough in the possession of professed Christians to do it. But are they called upon, or are they expected to do it? Nay, verily. There is more money given by professors of religion to build up secret societies than would be necessary to carry the Gospel to every part of the globe, and say nothing of their wickedness, their ruinous character, their perfect obstruction of the progress of the work of saving men There is not a minister or professor in the average church or college we are called upon to give money to build, that will speak what they know to be truth in this matter, and say they have no right to give the Lord's money in this way, that every penny must be given to do Christ's work in his own way. No, but they will press the uninformed, conscientious disciples of Christ to deny themselves, and practice a rigid economy to build churches and raise up and support ministers to supply them, that will use the most of the Lord's money to support these institutions of Satan.

Where is the minister or college officer that dare say what he knows to be true in this matter? It is true there are some exceptional men who will do it, and there are many who will speak with bated breath, in an undertone, what ought to be spoken boldly on the house top; and the enemy of Christ knows their cowardice and pusillanimity. Professors of religion pay out more money for tobacco than would be necessary to send the Gospel to the destitute everywhere, and who is there that will not say that tobacco is not only useless, but a decided injury? Few pretend to doubt it, and yet the men who will tell the people the truth about this matter and insist that the Lord's money can't be used in this way can be counted on your fingers. But the great majority go right on, pressing the conscientious children of God to deny themselves and give to build up churches and colleges that will perpetuate this most pernicious and harmful practice.

Is it not time to call for a pause and look over this whole subject and see what Christ wants his people to do, and how he wants them to do it? Is it not plain, when we are required to choose Christ with the loss of all things, that in building churches or other institutions for him, we must expel from them all secret lodges and tobacco-using and every kindred vice? On a basis like this, Christian institutions and churches will be clothed with power. God's people will rally to their support and money will flow like streams at flood-tide and banks overflowing. Treasurers of mission societies will be full. Missionaries will be sustained in every part of the earth. The Gospel will be preached to every creature, and the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of the Lord and his Christ.

Faiend of Missions.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. ELVIRA M. THOMSON.

A life was in the noon of strength;
Behind, the way was rough and steep,—
A journey of a weary length,
Beset by many a robber keep.

Yet on she went from height to height,
With half a life of battles won,
Till o'er her pathway fell the light
From lands that lie beyond the sun.

More gently rounded grew the hills
O'er which her future pathway led,
And sweetly musical the rills
That o'er the soft green uplands sped.

The gloomy rocks receding far,
That long had walled her narrow way,
Let in the light of moon and star,
And gleamings of the coming day.

Hope, smiling, woke,—abrupt and bold,
A huge, black, mountain barrier rose;
And from its frowning summit rolled
The banner of the king of foes.

Unscaled the awful summit lay,
The pilgrim's onward way to bar;
Yet was there one dark, tunneled way,
T'was lighted by a single star.

She raised her face, it caught the gleam
Of hope triumphant o'er her fear;
And when she viewed that one star's beam,
We watched and saw her disappear.

Her work is done, her rest is won,
No more of toil or doubt or fears;
The lives she blessed must follow on
Whereone day is a thousand years.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. C. F. Hawley, Iowa agent, was last week with his family in Wheaton for a short visit.

—Rev. S. A. George, of Mansfield, Ohio, late Secretary of the State Association, read a paper on the Christian Sabbath, before the Pastor's Association of the city. It is an able argument, and was considered of so much interest that it was published in the Mansfield Daily Herald of next morning.

—John J. Whittier is pre-eminently the temperance and reform poet, and the work of his life appeals strongly to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Miss Willard suggests to them as a tribute of respect that Whittier's old home in Haverhill be purchased and preserved. This is a very appropriate suggestion.

—Rev. W. R. Cox, United Presbyterian pastor at Lenox, Iowa, lately preached an able sermon on prayer, in which he took boldly the ground that because of our indifference as a nation to the liquor traffic, when the party conventions were called upon in 1880 to act against it, God turned away his ear from hearing our prayer for President Garfield when he was shot by Guiteau.

—Dr. J. L. Withrow, who came from Boston to take charge of the Third Presbyterian church in this city, is nearly alone in his approval of the C. B. and Q, engineers' strike. Last year when the "Brotherhood" met in this city, Dr. Withrow invited their lodge to his church and patronized them famously, to the discredit of the brotherhood of Christ, which he is supposed to maintain against all illegally forsworn organizations.

—Bro. Edward Mathews, from whose African experiences we hoped to hear once a month, has gone on a trip far into the interior of the Congo country and will not be heard from probably for three months. We regret that our readers and Bro. Mathews' family must forego his interesting letters for so long a time, but we must all pray that he may be protected while on this difficult and dangerous journey and be able to aid materially in opening the way for the missionary and the Word of Life.

—Rev. B F. Mills, who is become Dr. Pentecost's associate, is a new evangelist, whose sermons, says Words and Weapons, are clear and close expositions of the great principles which underlie the proclamation of the Gospel. His appeal is to the reason and conscience rather than to the emotions. In many respects his sermons and manner remind those who were familiar with him of the late Dr. Finney. His success has been very great, and his ability and spirit are heartily commended and approved, especially by the ministers of the churches among which he has gone preaching the Word.

—Dr. L. W. Munhall, who is one of the best-known of the evangelists, has closed a series of most successful meetings with the Methodist churches in Baltimore, and is now at work in Buffalo. He goes thence to Cincinnati for two months to work with the Methodist churches in that city. Dr. Munhall is a very positive man, has ideas of his own, and presses them with tremendous vigor upon the hearts and consciences of his hearers. By ideas of his own is not meant extra scriptural views, but that he has a well thought out scheme of truth which he has drawn from the Bible, and which he regards as essential to success in winning men to Christ. He is peculiarly successful with his men's meetings, which are a specialty in all his evangelistic work.—Words and Weapons.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

A bill has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Gorman, for remodeling the U. S. Patent Office and its laws. This seems timely in connection with the wail that is coming up from inventors all over the country to the effect that they cannot get patents, mingled with the wail of the patent lawyers that they are powerless under the existing state of affairs in the Patent Office, where work is months and months in arrears. In the spring of 1884 the U. S. Patent Office made a spurt and did an enormous amount of work. The then Commissioner of Patents hoped to be retained by Mr. Cleveland, and he issued an order that those examiners who were behind with their work should work additional hours until they had cleared their dockets. The way those examiners worked both during regular and extra hours had more edification in it than was ever claimed by a mountebank for his side show. In six weeks those who had been four and five months in arrears had caught up, and it was possible for an inventor to get his patent in a week or ten days after application. That Commissioner of Patents ought to have been retained, and it is not too late to reappoint him. The present Commissioner, Mr. Hall, is an educated, intelligent man, so erudite, indeed, that the patent lawyers cannot get at the meaning of his rulings. He ought to have retirement and leisure to write abstract treaties on the divisions of applications. His presence is an obstruction to business, and his genius is not in accord with a practical people and a progressive age.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations lately gave a respectful hearing to Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, president of the National Temperance Society of New York, and W. T. Hornaday of the Smithsonian Institute, who spoke with much effect in regard to the suppression of the liquor traffic now carried on from this country to Africa and the Pacific Islands. *

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT

has received an apparent backset from the unfavorable report of the Senate Committee on Mr. Platt's bill. But, like the attempt to dam up the Mississippi, the on-rushing sentiment is not to be arrested, but goes forward with an impulse all the stronger for the effort at restraint. It is proposed to give the people a chance to vote on local option, and an opportunity to determine for themselves what shall be the law. Such an enactment would be better than nothing. A vigorous campaign for prohibition in the District, however it might result, would do much good. It would affect the large colored population, many of whom are scarcely reached now. But to the earnest aggressive workers, this action looks like an evasion. It is well known that the best Christian sentiment demands prohibition, and that there could be no question presented that would array so completely the vicious element on one side and the pure and peace-loving on the other, as this. Congress has been appealed to over and over again, by the people of the District, and is at no loss to know what are the convictions of the better classes of society, and of all who are not under the control of a morbid appetite, or a sordid self-interest.

Wednesday there was a notable meeting under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. in the First Congregational church, presided over by ex-Governor Long of Massachusetts, and addressed by Congressmen Kerr of Iowa, and M. C. Cutchen of Michigan; also by Mrs. La Fetra, president of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Russell, Miss Chase and Mr. Faxon. It was noteworthy that while all pleaded for prohibition, all the Congressmen abstained from any allusions to political action. Not so with the ladies and Mr. Faxon; both, in their speeches and their resolutions (which were most emphatic), looked toward political prohibition. Last night I listened to an admirable address by Mrs. Hunt in the Waugh M. E. church on Capitol Hill, and the whole city fairly bristles with aggressive temperance work.

The mutual boycott of the Knights of Labor and the brewers is a conflict that will be regarded with great complacency, if not with extreme satisfaction, by all lovers of justice and good order. For some time past the Knights have declared a boycott on certain breweries and the beer that they make, wherever sold; and now, in retaliation, the brewers have determined to boycott the Knights by dismissing them from their service wherever employed, and hiring only non-union men. Such a conflict cannot but result in an immense benefit, however it may result. If the Knights shall adhere to their pledge to drink only such beer as their order has manufactured, they will make an immense saving in time, money, and morals. If they are compelled to engage in some other employment than brewing, they will be so far removed from temptation and the influence of a most demoralizing business. If the brewers shall be crippled in their business, no one will weep over it; and if they succeed in breaking up the organization of the Knights, there will be an immense gain to the great army of non-union laborers who are sorely oppressed by the action of the Knights. Whatever may be the result it will be a benefit to humanity.

Congress is wrestling with the tariff question. All parties see and concede that there must be a reduction of the national revenues; the only question seems to be where it shall be made. There seems to be a purpose to so change the duties on sugar as not to offend the sugar planters and to conciliate those who demand reduction. The duties on sugar ought to be removed. There is no one article so universally consumed by all classes, the rich and the poor, on which we pay so large a tax for our privilege of buying and consuming. All tariff duties are an invasion of the natural right of all men to buy in the markets where they can buy the cheapest, and sell where they can sell the best. All tariffs are framed for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many; but in no other instance is the few that are to be benefited so small and the number to bear the burden so large as in the matter of sugar duties. If it were not for the hope of making political capital for one party or the other, there would be no trouble in making the adjustment.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

AN INTERESTING REVIEW OF THE CHURCHES AND THEIR WORK.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Last Sabbath evening I preached on National Reform in the Lee Avenue Congregational church, Rev. Henry A. Powell, pastor. His congregation has a membership of over 500. There was a great houseful—700 people. They listened for an hour with the closest attention. After service Bro. Powell said: "I have always scouted the idea of God in the Constitution as being of any value. But the way you presented it tonight no Christian can be against it. You began at the foundation, the supremacy of the Divine law, and built up until your conclusion is inevitable. I am with you throughout. I am glad you came, and that I have heard what you said. I wish to have you back again."

Bro. Powell has had a wide experience. He was born a Hixite Quaker, baptized a Methodist, ordained a Presbyterian minister, installed as pastor of a Dutch Reformed church on Bushwick Avenue, where he served for seven years, and for the last five years has been pastor of the Lee Avenue Congregational church. He "has accepted the Chaplaincy of the 47th Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., to succeed Dr. Newland Maynard."

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church proposes to raise a large sum for Ministerial Relief. A few weeks ago a meeting was held in the interests of this object in New York, in the Brick church, Rev. Dr. Van Dyke, pastor. Dr. Crosby said: "A singular division of the people of Christ's kingdom is made by Isaiah. He calls them 'Churls' and 'Liberals.' The churl looks after his own spiritual interests and neglects those of his neighbor; the liberal is one whose soul is so full of love that he cannot help but go out and give and minister to others. The liberal givers in the church are always the few. Notwithstanding the fact that he has to spend years in hard study and preparation for his work, the average salary of the Presbyterian minister in this country was less than $700. In this city, where the ministers are better paid than in the country, there would seem to be no use for a provision for old age, but it was for the ministers in the vast territory outside of the cities this help was needed. Even in this city there are ministers who, notwithstanding their eminent qualifications, only receive $1,200 per year, with no chance to lay up a competence for years of declining health and age."

The Dr. related an instance of finding in a poor, filthy lodging house in Chatham street a broken-down minister, who was compelled to live in such a place because he could get his room for twenty-five cents per day. "This minister had, during thirty years, in all weathers, and most of the time on foot for lack of means to keep other conveyance, gone up and down in the wilds of Nebraska and Dakota doing the Master's work, and had planted over thirty churches. On one of his trips he suffered a sunstroke, and when seventy years old found himself a helpless occupant of a twenty-five cent lodging house—he who had done so much for our church and our common Lord; he our brother and fellow laborer." The Dr. had gotten him a comfortable resting place in the Bruen Home at Perth Amboy, where a few months ago he died. The mother of this old minister, aged ninety-three years and a recipient of charity in Vermont, wrote to Dr. Crosby pouring out her earnest thankfulness for his kindness to her "boy." This "boy" of seventy years is not an exceptional case.

Drs. Hall and Paxton followed with eloquent appeals. Mr. Warner Van Norden spoke last. He said: "The city of New York supports, through its Board of Charities and Correction, and not including criminals, sixteen thousand persons. These persons are unfortunate or lazy or shiftless, or have brought themselves to beds of sickness very often by their own acts. Seventy per cent of them are foreigners, and yet the city regards it as a duty to take care of them. It costs the city about two hundred dollars per year to support each one of these unfortunates. The Presbyterian church is supporting either wholly or in part 532 persons, of whom 220 are fathers (ministers), and 312 mothers and orphans. It costs the church for each one of these persons less than two hundred dollars per year. In the first instance New York City's dependents have done nothing for the city, nothing for the good of its people; on the contrary, in many cases they have led debased lives and have injured others. In the instance of these good men of the church's care, they have worked long and hard, and striven in many ways to build up the church and do good to men. In their strenuous efforts for us and ours they have fallen. These men are educated and accustomed to all that is highest and best for man's use in the world; and yet they uncomplainingly live on this pittance, less than New York gives her paupers, and will do so unless the church gives more money to use in this good cause of relief. And who are these ministers and their families? They are our fathers, mothers and members of our own families; and it is not for charity we give to this cause; it is for love to our own families. We have loved them all our lives in this service, and will do so in their old age. It is for such a cause this permanent fund is to be raised."

A Young Ladies' Christian Association has been organized in Brooklyn. Monday evening a mass meeting was held in the Y. M. C. A. hall in its interests. Ex-Mayor Lowe presided. Addresses were delivered by Drs. Meredith, Storrs, and Chamberlin. The house was filled to overflowing.

The Brooklyn Evangelical Alliance has divided the city into thirteen districts, and the churches of each section are being organized into branch alliances. For every 100 members there is one supervisor, and for every supervisor ten visitors. Each community will be divided into as many districts as there are supervisors, and each district will be assigned to the care of one supervisor. Then each district will be divided into fields, and each field will be assigned to a visitor, who shall learn the church preferences of the non-church-goers whom he visits, and extend to them, in the name of the Alliance, an invitation to attend the nearest church of that denomination, and the names will be sent to the pastor of the church. It is to be hoped the machine will work. But the Great Eastern on the sea is not a circumstance to this; and that was too large.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby in the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian church was celebrated Tuesday night. Dr. Joseph T. Smith of Baltimore presided. Drs. Cuyler, Pierson, Schaff, Brown, Stoddard, Mitchell and others were on the platform. Dr. Crosby was installed there March 1, 1861. Then there were 285 members; now they have 1,554, of whom 554 worship in their two missions, and 1,000 in the home church. The church is the fifth in size of the 6,500 churches of the denomination. Their charitable gifts average $15,000 a year; the congregational expenses are also $15,000. Dr. Crosby has made his mark as a scholar, reformer and preacher. He was Chancellor of the New York City University for years. He is yet young. His eye is not dim, nor his natural force abated. J. M. Foster.

SOME ROADS LEADING TO ROME.

The "poor prisoner" in the Vatican, who has an income of only five million a year and lives in a palace containing several hundred rooms, has recently celebrated his fiftieth priesthood jubilee. His friends have remembered him in his poverty and it will not be necessary for him to eat dry crusts and drink only water for many a day to come. His jubilee gifts are said to be worth about $12,000,000, and with $2,800,000 in money amount to a total of $14,800,000. Among these gifts are 90,000 bottles of wine, for the storage of which a new room has to be built. The packing-cases in which all these presents came number about 4,000 and many of them are still at the railroad station in Rome. They are to be placed in a museum for public exhibition at the Vatican. It is announced that a large part of the money contributed to the Pope will be given to various charitable institutions.—Lutheran Standard.

The present Pope owed his election to the Jesuits. In return for this favor he has "revoked the bull and encyclicals" by which their order was suppressed. The Jesuits, through the Pope, are now the controlling force in Romanism;—the most dangerous class of men in the whole world; worse than socialists, than nihilists, than anarchists. These last make no secret of their purpose to destroy all that the best men throughout the world are trying to build up. The Jesuits aim at the same thing, but are working always under ground. The Pope's jubilee was a silly farce; a flaunting in the face and eyes of Christendom of the moth-eaten splendors of mediæval man-worship. The really serious matter people in these days have to think about is the fact that Anti-christ is not yet dead.—Chicago Standard.

The title page of Cleveland's present to the Pope bears, in the handwriting of the President, the following inscription: "Presented to His Holiness, Pope Leo XIII., as an expression of congratulation on the occasion of his sacerdotal jubilee, with the profound regard of Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, through the courtesy of his eminence, Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore." The following page bears an American eagle in golden colors, and beneath it the words: "The Constitution of the United States, adopted Sept. 17, 1787." On the following pages appear the articles and amendments. The present was prepared under the supervision of ex-Mayor Grace, of New York.

Mr. H. Grattan Guinness says in his book on Romanism and the Reformation: "Fifty years ago there were not 500 Roman priests in Great Britain; now there are 2,600. Fifty years ago there were not 500 chapels; now there are 1,575. Fifty years ago there were no monasteries at all in Great Britain; now there are 225. There were even then 16 convents, but there are now over 400 of these barred and bolted and impenetrable prisons, in which 15,000 English women are kept prisoners at the mercy of a celibate clergy. And, strangest of all, England, who once abolished monasteries and appropriated to national uses the ill-gotten gains of Rome, is now actually endowing Romanism in her empire to the extent of over a million of money per annum. The exact amount is £1,052,657."

The Chief Anarchist.—It is amusing, in the light of historical facts, to read the grandiloquent claims made by one of the speakers in Cooper Union at the late celebration there of the Pope's jubilee. The gentleman in question said "that the time had come when all good men who dreaded anarchy and socialism were looking to the Catholic (papal) church as the only bulwark of religion and civilization." The strange comment upon this is that the present Pope is in open revolt against his own government. Theoretically he may claim to be the cure for all anarchy, but practically he is the greatest living representative of a refusal to submit to the laws and the government of his own native land.—Churchman.

—The Baptist Mission in the Shantung Province, China, have in the single district of Tsingcheu Fu fifty-five churches, all self-supporting, ministered to by native pastors and teachers, who maintain themselves entirely, not drawing any of their support from the funds of the society.

Reform News.

OHIO AND PENNSYLVANIA.

Pittsburgh, Pa, March 10, 1887.

Dear Cynosure:—It seemed best, after consultation with part of the Ohio State officers, for Mrs. Stoddard and myself to visit friends in this State at this season, hoping at the same time to do some effectual work for our cause.

Since our arrival a week ago we have been made very welcome everywhere, and much interest has been expressed in our work. Owing to the many suppers and parties given in our honor, I have had very little time for canvassing and personal work. A very interesting meeting was held in the Reformed Presbyterian church on Thursday evening at Wilkinsburg, the home of Mrs. Stoddard's father. I attribute the large attendance to her popularity. Every seat in the house was taken, no less than 500 being present.

A lecture for Monday evening has been arranged in what is known as the Eighth Street Reformed Presbyterian church of this city. The late Dr. A. M. Milligan was for many years their beloved pastor. His memory and work will not soon be forgotten. The lecture is to be given under the auspices of the Young Peoples' Christian Endeavor Society of this church. They are advertising and doing all in their power to make it a success. I have a long list of pastors on whom I hope to call to-day. Other lectures are in tow. W. B. Stoddard.

THE DEBATE AT KNOXVILLE, TENN.

As announced in the January number of Aurora, the Knoxville College monthly, a debate took place in that city a few days before Pres. McCullough and his associates were compelled to close the institution because of the prevailing sickness. The last Aurora has an editorial on the discussion, which may have been in some sense a disappointment, but in the end its fruit must appear. The Aurora says:

"The question, 'Resolved, that oath-bound, secret societies are detrimental to the Negro race,' was discussed in the Independent church, Knoxville, on the evening of February 21st. Affirmed by two students from the college; denied by two citizens of Knoxville.

"The speeches on the affirmative were dignified, logical, and honest. For the intelligence, truth, manliness, and morality of the speeches on the negative the audience may answer. If the lodge system stands in need of such defense as it received on that occasion, it has great need to be secret, to be in the dark, to crouch behind barred doors and armed guards. No wonder the mouths of its members are closed with oaths horrible enough to freeze the blood of a cannibal. Christian Masons and Odd-fellows listened that evening without protest to an audience laugh and yell their applause, while Jesus Christ and his church were treated with ribaldry and scorn by the defenders of secretism. If the members of the lodge had hissed and driven such monstrous, shocking blasphemy from the rostrum (which would have been the case if the lodge were a good institution), we would have supposed that they felt themselves misrepresented by those speakers, and they would thus have shown some belief in and respect for their order. Every Christian lodge-man represented there that night lies under charge of trampling under foot the Son of God. When will all Christians unite to tear this hell-born dragon from the heart of the government, from the neck of the church? Good men are in the lodge, but they are taken in by fraud. The serpent told Eve, 'Thou shalt not surely die;' and so the serpent stands at every lodge door to tell the unwary victim that there is no obligation 'inconsistent with any duty we owe to self, family, country, mankind, or to our Creator,' that is, 'Thou shalt not surely die,' at the same time artfully concealing the fact that by its own creed it would send every member of it to perdition; for while it claims to save souls, it turns Christ out of doors. A good man, knowing what it is, would no more enter the lodge as a member than he would enter the lion's den. Let good men and bad men in the lodge read 2 Thess. 2: 11 and beware."

—From the Patrol, a lively prohibition sheet in Geneva, Ill., it appears that the Loyal Legion, the secret order of the officers of the Union army, holds its meetings regularly on the Sabbath day in that town. On the other hand the W. C. T. U., realizing the great neglect of Sabbath observance in the place, have begun to agitate for better things. May the women have grace to stop not only the Sabbath-breaking of the lodge, but the lodge itself.

FROM THE NEW ORLEANS PASTORS.

New Orleans, La., March 2d, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—I have attended the First District Baptist Association in Gretna and distributed tracts and copies of the Cynosure. I could have distributed fully 100 copies of the paper. I saw Rev. Thomas Pie, African Methodist Episcopal pastor of Greenville, who thinks our reform a nuisance, and that every man of intelligence should be either an Odd-fellow or Freemason. He thinks secret societies the upbuilding of Christ's church. I have been invited to lecture in the country and expect to go thither as soon as possible. The harvest truly is ready, but laborers are few.

I called on Rev. A. J. White, formerly of Nashville, Tenn., and a seceding Mason. He gives praise to God for the late convention, and trusts to see lodgeism fall. The secretists here are trying to make it appear that our convention was a Democratic scheme to defeat the Republican nominees in April, or at least some of them are circulating such reports; but, thanks be to God, the people are being awakened to see the Baal worship of lodgery. Revs. Jackson and Green are thoroughly awake and working to slay the giant Goliath (the lodge) by the Word of God. I have a long list of pastors, including Prof. Dr. Berger and J. G. Nelson, I expect D. V., to send to the Cynosure for publication next week.

I met Rev. Wm. Kerbach, German Evangelical pastor of the Seventh district. He highly appreciates the work, and was sorry that he did not know of the late N. C. A. convention. I gave him a copy of the Cynosure and expect to get his subscription.

I expect to preach for Rev. L. W. Oldfield, Presbyterian pastor, Sabbath evening, and attend the Freedman's Baptist Association next week in Carrollton. We appreciate the visit of Bros. Stoddard, Stratton, Browne and others and regret that their stay was so brief. Mrs. Stoddard made many friends here among our people. An Odd-fellow met me this evening and boasted that an Odd-fellow's thanks-giving sermon would be preached at the old Baptist church next Sabbath, but with all their boasting, the altars of Baal must surely fall. Every plant our heavenly Father hath not planted will surely be rooted up. F. J. Davidson.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A HERO FALLS IN BATTLE.

SUDDEN DEATH OF PROF. W. H. WOODSMALL.

Memphis, March 5, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—I intended to have written you last week after my visit to New Orleans, but so many things have crowded upon my time that I have been unable to do so. My brother still lies in a very precarious condition, and this fills us with continual anxiety.

Our school has a very heavy blow in the sudden death of Bro. W. H Woodsmall. He passed away very quietly on Monday evening, the 27th ult., sitting in his chair conversing with Prof. Vaun, one of the faculty of the school.

Bro. Woodsmall has labored in the South more extensively among the colored people than any one I know of. His work has been mostly in Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Tennessee, Georgia and Louisiana. He was one of the most self-sacrificing men I ever met. His main purpose of life seemed to aim at helping the down-trodden race.

I first met him in 1874, and since then nearly every year; for the last three years we have been co-workers. He came to my house immediately after I was mobbed by the Masons, August, 1885, and after looking at the numerous bullet holes, shattered windows and general havoc perpetrated by the secret society minions, he gave me two dollars and said: "Take this; put in some of these windows, and I will help you to fight against these evil institutions."

Bro. Woodsmall was untiring in his efforts, and no amount of persuasion could induce him to let go his work and take a rest. I had labored with him for two weeks prior to my going to New Orleans to let me have his Bible class and go home and rest; and his answer was invariably, "No! I will close my term on the first of April and then go home until fall." His heart was fixed. I visited him on Friday after he went to his room, and he told me of his plans; he admitted that he was feeble, but he would not give up.

The school is being carried on in our church, and he had his headquarters opposite, with one of the members of the same, until two weeks ago, when he removed to a place opposite,the Le Moyne Institute Teachers' Home, at which Home he died sitting in a chair. Monday was the only day he had lost from his work during the last four months. He had a doctor call and see him in the afternoon, who informed him that he could live but a few days; and he said, "Well, none but the good Father can do me any good now." He asked for a light, and in a few moments he had passed away.

We are moving on with our school work, and through the same we will leaven the country for miles around against the influence of the secret empire. The secretists are having a warm time among themselves just now, and will have a very interesting lawsuit in a few days, involving a minister, who was, during the reign of mobocracy, Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic fraters of the State of Tennessee. I will send you the particulars as they develop.

I have had several letters from New Orleans since I came home, and many are rejoicing over the work done by the N. C. A. May God push on the work and save my people from the deception of secret societies. Yours for the cause, R. N. Countee.

THE ORDER OF UNITED WORKMEN.

Custer City, Pa.

In "Pith and Point" of Feb. 9th C. H. Rohe asks: "Are the United Workmen to be regarded as an oath-bound, secret society?" Allow me (if to the point) to quote from the "Guide" as reproduced in the Protector of March 3, 1886 (the italics are mine): "The A. O. U. W. is founded....on the rock of fraternity and backed by the sacred obligations of upwards of 200,000 men.... It depends not for its security upon stocks...., but upon the bond of fraternity among men, which has been proved since the world began to be the only sure foundation [?]. That subtle spirit of fraternity which has carried Forestry and Masonry triumphantly through times that have destroyed governments, and through panics that have caused the death of many generations of business corporations, is the same spirit which gives strength and greatness to the A. O. U. W.... How strong these obligations are is illustrated by the recent act of the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania, expressive of the opinions of over 14,000 of our membership, who, finding that their charter through the law might deprive them of the legal right to contribute to this fund, surrendered their charter and exist as a part of our fraternity on their obligations alone."

In the same Protector I read: "Every member upon his entrance takes an obligation to obey the laws now in force or hereafter exacted [sic, probably means enacted], and signs an agreement, the conditions of which are so clear that no acceptable applicant can misunderstand the terms if he reads them."

Indulge me a little further, for this must be where the charity comes in: "When all our members are conscious of the fact that our plan of cheap and practical protection is only possible when conducted not as a business enterprise for profit, but because of our sincere regard for the welfare of our fellowmen, selfishness will be softened by fraternity [obligated fraternity, forsooth], and good fellowship will lead us to better appreciate the system and the blessings it confers."

I suppose some of our facetious U. B. Commission men would not call this oath-bound, but I must confess, in my dullness, I do. J. C. Young.

THE PENNSYLVANIA REVIVAL.

[Letter to E. J. Chalfant.]

Montrose, Pa., Feb. 21, 1888.

I am heartily glad that you have been moved to awaken a new interest in the anti-secret cause in Pennsylvania. Whatever I may be able to do to further this important work shall be cheerfully undertaken. May you find great success in the effort and have many friends rally to and enlist in this enterprise from all parts of the State.

Although Pennsylvania has been a favorite and prolific hunting ground for the originators and propagators of secret orders and rituals, there are yet a goodly number of upright men who have not been duped, corrupted and drawn into these traps and dens and selfish clans of darkness and trickery.

An earnest canvass will, I hope, bring together many of these untrammeled free souls to protest and act against the midnight, owlish and wily forces of secretism. Send out an appeal for all to enroll themselves, and also to seek to secure, each one in his own locality, as many co-workers and sympathizers as possible. I find more freemen than I expected in view of the many orders that exist.

At present I am distributing tracts in our county seat; and am also endeavoring to enlighten minds by conversation and discussion. It is a good thing also to put a tract or two in letters, when writing to friends or on business. I know a young man who has been kept out of the lodge by the counsel of a minister in casual conversation. The Lord encourage, help and bless you in the work.

Yours truly, James W. Raynor.

PITH AND POINT.

TWO CALIFORNIA FRIENDS.

I saw a copy of your paper by accident, and with such sledge-hammer blows as you give secret societies, I think you will be able to take the scales from the eyes of many who are now in the dark. I want a copy of your paper for one year, and if I could afford it, would subscribe for a dozen, and distribute them about for the good I think they would do A friend concurs in the above, and we could write and talk for hours on this subject of secrecy, that we think is such a curse to humanity.—Letter from Santa Cruz, Cal.

FROM AN ILLINOIS PASTOR.

The more I look into secrecy and see its workings in church and politics I get more disgusted, and cannot help doing all I can in my limited and weak way to destroy the devil's bulwarks. I have an example in my own congregation where a man who has been a member so far in church and also of Masons and Odd-fellows and G. A. R., who says he will leave the church, but not the lodges; and another one who yet tries to take a respectable place in church and is also a G. A. R. man and has made threats trying to silence me; but God helping me he cannot do it, nor any other lodge man unless they can cause my death.

FROM BOSTON JAIL.

In a letter to a brother in Chicago, Wm. F. Davis, the prisoner for peacefully preaching the Gospel on Boston Common, speaks thus:

"As to the stand I have taken here, it was the only Biblical position, and the Word of God points out the only safe position. The Gospel would never have been preached on earth after Christ went to heaven if his apostles had not set at naught the highest human civil and ecclesiastical law in Jerusalem and throughout the world.... Now the amazing audacity of the enemies of God's Gospel in Boston appears in their attempt to set aside by the decree of a solitary city ordinance (a presumptuous solecism) the settled law of Christendom, and the constitutional law of this nation and State by a single stroke of illegal outlawry. As a citizen and Christian my obligation is instant and permanent, to testify against this lawlessness and anti-Christianity.... I am not at liberty to fight with carnal weapons, or sue the city, as I have been advised to do, for $10,000 damages. I am at liberty to rejoice in tribulation and persecution for Christ's sake and witness to all in the jail of his loving-kindness and truth. He will take care of the testimony."

WAS NOT AT NEW ORLEANS.

I failed to meet the N. C. A. Convention at New Orleans. My wife's health being very poor prevented my going. The lodge continues to prosper, notwithstanding I circulate considerable literature throughout the country. This country needs a live lecturer to teach the people.—Dr. Jesse Ward, Partridge, Ala.

A HELPER FOR THE POOR.

I have been a reader of your paper for several years, and being fully convinced that it is a mighty instrument in the hands of God for pulling down the strongholds of sin, I read it with much interest, considering it as having the spirit of the true Christian reformer, reproving the unfruitful works of darkness, and faithfully warning those who would sell their manhood for a mess of pottage. Find enclosed five dollars for the worthy purpose of enlightening those whom the prince of darkness would lead to the lodge below. The enemy is at work trying to enlist new recruits, using the lodge and the saloon as recruiting offices, knowing that if they are found there they may easily be led captive by time at his will. When will those, who have taken Christ as the Captain of their salvation, hear him saying "Come out from among them, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you." —Thos. W. Smiley, Monmouth, Ill.

A NOBLE EFFORT.

An old lady of Ligonier, Ind., enfeebled by years, but of unconquerable spirit, writes thus of her personal work:

I have done the best my health, the weather and condition of roads would admit. Enclosed is the result of two weeks' labor—one day selling and receiving nothing. I did not expect such a task, although I knew that secretism had taken a relapse in our place. I have not been over the place, but am too much exhausted to do more at this time. As you will see, I solicited for the Minister's Fund, and while it is not as much as was desirable, yet it was cheerfully given; and with God's blessing, will accomplish much. I also distributed prohibition and anti secret literature.—Rufina Fry.

NOT TO BE SURPASSED.

In reply as to who were the first subscribers to the Cynosure, I would just say I have taken it from the very first number; and more still, I have ordered the paper for the balance of my life. How is that? Can anyone beat this record? I make missionaries of all my Cynosures by distributing them.—J. S. Hickman.

Farm Notes.

WOODMAN, SPARE THAT TREE.

Sooner or later, writes E. P. Powell in the Independent, Americans will learn the value of their forests; but not until vast mischief has accrued to agriculture and climate besides the loss of timber. A recent writer on forests and climate, or, as he calls it, "Climate Culture," states his argument forcibly in this way: "If rain comes at the right times and in sufficient quantity the farmer will cut 200 tons of hay where in a dry season he will cut but 100 tons. The loss for the dry season is from 1,000 to 1,500 dollars. Another farmer harvests 2,000 bushels of wheat if the rain is perfectly regulated; and if not he gets 500 bushels. He has 1,500 dollars trembling in the balance. If a half-million of farmers are similarly situated there are 750,000,000 dollars at stake." This statement of the case he does not affirm is intended for the actual loss of any single season, but as showing the possibilities at stake; while a large fraction of the amount is each season an actual loss. The question arises, Are we helpless to meet and master the problem? At present we know no means to regulate to any degree the fall of rain except by forest culture. The writer goes on to urge on every farmer to plant trees, to plant double and treble rows around his farm. But it is evident very few will thus act for the general good unless compelled to do so. The work must be taken up by the State. At present there is no line of work that should have the supervision of the Department of Agriculture more carefully than the cultivation and protection of forests. We cannot adopt the paternal system of European governments, but we can protect ourselves from individual selfishness that is so far-reaching in its evil effects as the ruthless waste of forests. Our railroads must be prevented by very stringent legislation from carelessly setting on fire millions of acres each year. Missouri and one or two other States have recently made provisionary statutes on this point. There is no reason why the spark-arrester should not be always employed.

The railroad has proved to be a very destructive agency in other ways. Not only does it cut through the forests for the purpose of laying its track, but any one who has traveled over a new line has been oppressed with the vast waste in every direction. For hundreds of miles he may travel when his eye is seldom out of sight of decaying logs and blasted trees, often vast forests burned up into stumps simply for clearage. The wood cannot yet be hauled to market profitably, and is, therefore, burned on the spot. Trees are girdled to make them dry, and then the fire is applied. But this is not merely a waste but an injury to the whole country in the way of tending to droughts and preventing regularity of rainfall.

A recent lecture given at the National Museum at Washington, by Fernow, undertakes to show the need of forest protection and forest culture for the fourfold reason: (1) Forests furnish our material in the industries; (2) they are regulators of climatic conditions; (3) they are regulators of hydrologic conditions influencing the waterflow in springs, brooks and rivers; (4) they are regulators of soil conditions. "The national interest in the business of forestry is based on the influence of the forests on climate, waterflow and soil." "The forest acts precisely like a large sheet of water as a starting point of local winds by which the characteristics of the forest climate—greater humidity—are communicated to the surroundings." "But, by far the most important function of the forest lies in the preservation of soil humidity; and in the storage and equable distribution of the water capital of the earth. The moss and leaf mold act as a sponge taking up all the atmospheric water which reaches them, and only gradually give up the same to the soil from which it reappears as springs, rivulets, brooks, forming the great water reservoir of agricultural lands, and giving up its accumulations gradually throughout the season when most needed. While the large floods are probably to a great extent due to cosmic causes yet the deforestization at heads of streams must have aggravated the evil," and by washing away soil have pauperized fertile hills and valleys, an evil which can be remedied as has been demonstrated by the reforestization accomplished in France.

But beyond all and above all other issues is the effect of forest culture and forest destruction on sanitary conditions. In some sections of New England it is well known that agues and malarial fevers have set in since the destruction of the vast chestnut forests for charcoal and the waste following the multiplication of railroads, and the vast cuttings caused by the opening up of profitable markets. The general principle of co-operation established in Nature between the vegetable and animal kingdoms, whereby the carbonic gases destructive to the animal are absorbed by the foliage of trees and plants is well known. No town can overlook the value of trees for this result alone. It is a matter of health rather than of esthetics to see to it that the streets are well lined with shade trees. Your orchards near the house not only furnish fruit but keep the air pure. There is a vast ignorance on this subject, many actually supposing that dampness of streets is caused by trees. They prevent the sun working on your streets that have no sewerage, in such a manner as to rapidly dry them and send miasmatic vapors into your lungs. Sewerage and plenty of trees are the best life insurance you can secure. Fernow insists that it is demonstrable that the terrible floods of the Ohio Valley are owing in large part to deforestization. So, also, the formation of the great sand dunes about Lake Michigan, as also the growing barrenness of the Adirondack region, where the soil is now being washed into the Hudson so fast that the river at Albany can scarcely be kept open to navigation.

Fernow quotes from Muller words that cover the case as any honest man should view it. He says: "I regard the forests as a heritage given us by Nature, not for spoil nor to devastate, but to be wisely used, reverently honored and carefully maintained. I regard the forests as a gift intrusted to any of us only for transient care during a short space of time, to be surrendered to posterity again as an unimpaired property, with the increased riches and augmented blessings to pass as a sacred patrimony from generation to generation." This reverent voice of Nature and of ourselves as trustees only of the world, not as absolute owners, it is difficult for an American to feel. He looks on his land as his own, and its trees he may burn or waste without the least responsibility, anywhither. Above all, he has a right, in his estimation, to transform all things into cash. That he has any responsibility—an actual legal as well as moral obligation—to posterity he must yet learn to feel.

It is hardly possible to close any discussion of this question without reference to the recent and terrible suffering in our Northwestern States from lack of fuel and lack of wind-breaks. Dakota will remain practically an object of terror and uninhabitable to the degree necessary to bring it into line with the older States until forests have been planted and grown that will prevent the unbroken sweep of winds. Nor must we forget that by forest destruction we have led the way to the destruction of some fruits that we could once raise in the Eastern States. The climate is not colder, but the winds with their drying influence sweep with freedom where they were formerly broken. In this section fifty years ago I have seen large orchards of quinces; but now we are obliged to hide a tree in the angle of our houses if we expect fruit. The apple-tree is also dried to the extreme, and then the frost grapples with it and weakens it for early destruction. It is known to horticulturists that trees or buds can endure five or six degrees more of cold in a moist than in a dry atmosphere.

SEDENTARY HABITS.

In this age of push and worry, the business man and the professional man are alike unable to devote any adequate time to exercise. In the daily round of toil and pleasure, no suitable provision is made for that important function, and the result is that men of sedentary habits become subject to many forms of ailments arising from a torpid or sluggish liver. Constipation, sick headache, biliousness and dyspepsia are all due to the improper action of the liver. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets cure these troubles by restoring the liver to its normal condition.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

Rev. John Todd, Pittsfield, Mass.:—Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere. I have never known any good results from them which could not have been attained in some other more appropriate way, and I have known great evils resulting from them.

Howard Crosby, Chancellor University of New York, 1870:—We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the earth.

Idem, 1886:—The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous.

Rev. Matthew L. R. Perrine, D.D., Auburn Theological Seminary, Rev. Joel Parker and Rev. Chauncey Eddy:—Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country.

Rev. Levi Chase, Fall River, Mass.:—The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, "Why did not they renounce it before?" For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding.

Rev. C. D. Burlingham, in history of the Genesee M. E. Conference, 1860:—This new element of discord (Odd fellowship) began to introduce itself in our church, professedly as a mutual insurance company against temporal want, and a newly discovered and remarkably successful Gospel appliance for bringing the world, reformed and saved into the church. But our people very naturally looked upon it with suspicion, dreading its power as a secret agency acting through affiliated societies, and doubting its utility as a financial scheme. They feared it would drag the church, debased and corrupted, into the world.

Rev. Joel Mann, a renouncing Mason:—Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has a most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties.

Rev. Aaron Leland, formerly Lieut. Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association):—He stated that the first objection which presented its ll to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution.

Elder David Bernard:—I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!

THE THOUSAND COLORED PASTORS

SHALL THEY HAVE THEIR PAPER?

Week by week generous friends of the colored race answer, Yes. The fund for this purpose reaches $774 36, as the treasurer reports and cheering letters show the enthusiasm in this enterprise of all who realize the nature of secretism. Every letter from the South justifies our effor's, and approves the judgment that no expenditure of an equal sum will bring so great returns.

The $900 contributed for this purpose in the two years and a half after June, 1885, placed the Cynosure in the hands of hundreds of colored pastors, but few of whom could have paid for it themselves. Note the grand results which have followed, chiefly because of this work:

1 The Louisiana Baptist State Convention representing 70,000 church members has voted against the lodge.

2. The Texas Baptists will probably take the same stand at their next meeting.

3. The Methodist Episcopal church in Texas is nearly ready for like action.

4. So are the Arkansas Baptists, a prominent association having already so voted.

5 The same churches in western Tennessee are coming out against secretism.

6. So in Alabama the Good-will Association is standing against the orders.

7. Many of the Congregational churches in the South are opposing the lodge, encouraged by the American Missionary Association.

8. Two schools for higher instruction have been organized within a year which maintain this principle. while nearly every institution for the education of the Negro is open for instruction of the students on the dangers of the lodge.

9. Christians at the North should hasten this work with all zeal, because the reflex influence upon their churches will soon be powerfully felt.

The Cynosure has proved the best agency in accomplishing this work in the South. A fund to send a thousand copies to as many colored pastors is being raised. Dear reader, has not the Lord given you means to help it on?

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Baldwin, St. Mary's Parish, La., March 5, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—Day before yesterday we left New Orleans, after three weeks' stay, and came to this old parish, 100 miles on the Southern Pacific, and if I can convey to our readers the thrilling impressions which persons and facts, past and present, have given Mrs. B. and myself, they will not grow drowsy over this letter.

THE M'ENERYS,

with whom we stopped in the city, are relatives of the present Governor McEnery, whose office is to be struggled for in the election on the 17th of April next, by Henry Clay Warmoth, who was the Republican Governor twenty years ago, when the State was in the condition of chaos as the mountain-tops of a new era were slowly appearing. The family who entertained us in the city are, of course, Democrats, Bourbons of the old regime. They are: Mother McEnery; her sister just gone a missionary to Japan; a widowed daughter who is a brilliant writer for the reviews; a younger daughter, teacher in the city schools, and two young men (sons) in Government employ in the Custom House and Post Office. This excellent family were good people in slavery, and they are better now the blinding blight of slavery is fallen off. All are consistent Christian Presbyterians, left fatherless seventeen years ago; but by the blessing of God on the efforts of their keen, dark-eyed little mother, all whose ideas and reasonings are taken from the Bible, they are an ornament to society and a blessing to their race.

DR. S. LOGAN

was called to see me in a violent bilious attack; and when better, I returned his call. It was the meeting of opposite poles, Vermont and South Carolina. He was born and educated to his profession in Charleston, S. C. Three brothers of them stood by the guns which battered Sumter. The youngest, Gen. C. M. Logan, now a lawyer in New York, was the youngest general in the Confederate army. They fought through the war, from Sumter to Appomatox. Of course I was interested.

"Doctor," I asked, "Will you tell me how you view the whole matter now? Do you wish the South had conquered? Do you wish slavery back?"

"No, sir. No intelligent person wishes slavery back. It was a great mistake to suppose we 'fought for the nigger?' We fought as Gladstone and the Irish are fighting, for 'Home Rule.' Then, too, we were afraid what the negroes might do, if let loose. We trembled for our own women and children, which fears are now removed by the behavior of the blacks. And we were never so strong as a nation as we are now; and, by immigration from the North, we are hourly growing stronger. Nor do I see how slavery ever could have been abolished but by war."

The above are his ideas, and mostly his words. I inly thanked God that through our long national agony I had meekly stood at my post, insisting that "the property-holding of men was a sin," till we divorced American missions from American slavery. Then God put the whole case upon issue; and the Northern mobs who burnt Independence Hall, murdered Lovejoy and the rest, and followed us with the hatred of pro-slavery ministers, and that slander which these same Northern mobs, and their hireling preachers (now turned furious Abolition chaplains) went South to fill eighty-two Southern cemeteries with Northern dead. And I inly exclaimed, "Even so. Just and true are thy ways, Lord God Almighty." My acquaintance with this gentlemanly and accomplished physician, who has come up out of the very crater of the slavery-rebellion, has filled me with transport and faith for the future of our great country. Let us hope that the sun-burst of evangelism; the clear, strong war of prohibition on our Niagara of liquor; the uprising for God's and the laborer's Sabbath; and, above all, the light of God now poured in upon the dark lodge dens of devil-worship may save us from the doom of Judea, may bring in the millennial dawn upon us, as that happy people whose God is the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Outvenoms all the worms of Nile,"

GILBERT SEMINARY.

. From New Orleans here we crossed seventy or eighty miles of continuous swamp, flanked with huge cypress trees, and underbrush hung with funeral moss. In these swamps fugitive slaves have been known to domicile for twenty-five years, amid adders, water snakes, moccasins and alligators. From such swamps Osceola and his Seminoles were drawn out by a violated U. S. flag of truce, and Gen. Taylor ended "The Florida War." These old cypressee may now drop their swinging, moss-crape funeral badges. There are no slaves here now! The alligators have grown civil, and the reptiles seem to have lost half their venom. I am writing by a pleasant fire from the cypress wood of these interminable swamps which we have left miles back; and are now here on dry land in the midst of old sugar and rice plantations.

Here, a mile back from the depot, is Gilbert Seminary. This is its history. Twenty-two years ago, a French Catholic in New Orleans gave ten thousand dollars, conditioned that other thousands should be given to build up a home for the orphans of Union soldiers. This old sugar plantation of 1,500 acres was bought and a brick "Home for Orphans" erected. These orphans grew up. There was no war to make more orphans. The spirit of speculation seized the place; liquor was sold in two places on the premises; a cyclone blew down the orphan home, the sugar mill burst its boiler, and a mortgage of $5,000 and a floating debt of ten or twelve thousand more stood ready to wipe out the memories of the place.

Rev. W. D. Godman was chosen secretary by the Orphan Union and came out, like Nehemiah, to survey the ruins. Hon. Mr. Gilbert of Connecticut gave $5,000 for a seminary building. Dr. Godman organized a band of colored singers, after the manner of the Jubilee Band of Tennessee, raised $7,000, sold a fraction of the land, paid up the debts, and there are two nice buildings here in use, with another being finished. Last year three hundred and seventy-five colored students received instruction here. No debt is incurred, and but $1,000 needed to complete and furnish the new building, which will be, doubtless, filled with students as soon as done.

If I had seen this magnificent sight rise like an exhalation from the earth, it could hardly have astonished me more. I am now in this Christian institution the third day. The students are all sedate, cheerful, orderly as the wheels of a clock, and every one is at work. Seriously, we are charmed with Gilbert Seminary; and Dr. Godman has hope for aid to establish fifty primary schools as feeders for the seminary, and to lift the entire population in these once old grave-yards of slavery to the high level of American citizenship. I was puzzled to understand the tranquility and order of hundreds of young people, lately "caught wild," till I made the acquaintance of Mrs. Godman and their daughter Inez. The secret was then explained.

Mrs. Godman is sister of Wirt Dexter, Esq., of Chicago. She is the grand-daughter of Hon. Samuel Dexter, the eminent Puritan statesman of Boston, whom Webster so splendidly eulogized in the United States Senate. Her brother, Wirt Dexter, was named by their Anti-masonic father for William Wirt, Anti-masonic candidate for the Presidency in 1832; and she inherits from her father and grandfather his abhorrence of the secret lodge, as well as the rare executive ability of the race. Their daughter Inez, now a young lady, inherits the calm piety of Dr. Godman and the burning genius and tireless energy of her mother and grand-mother who now lives in Chicago.

Dr. Godman properly abstains from active partisanship in politics here, which are mingled with State-bonds and local finances. But the candidate for Secretary of State, to be voted for April 17th, is a student of Dr. Godman, a colored young lawyer, who is now canvassing the State for Warmoth and the Republican ticket.

Gov. Warmoth came here at the close of the war, and of course was abused as "a carpet-bagger." He has now boldly opened the campaign to revive the Republican party in the face of the history of the past. His sugar sold this year for about $100,000, and as he has lived here above twenty years his title to citizenship is as good as the majority of the voters. Amid the convulsions of the 15th Amendment, Warmoth, then a young man, was stabbed and thrown in the streets of New Orleans, and his antagonist had him by the throat. He succeeded in knocking his antagonist's knife from his hand. A Southern lady passing kicked the knife to Warmoth, who grasped it, and, though down and under, killed his assailant. The coroner's jury found the killing to have been done in self-defence. His return to the candidacy after twenty years, of course, makes a profound impression. It is to be hoped that Northern immigration and the progress of ideas have put Ku-Klux, White Leagues, Regulators, etc., etc., out of fashion; and as the colored people are all Republicans, and Warmoth is immensely popular with the whites, besides being very talented, he may be elected.

I give these facts to our readers because they are intensely interesting and bear on American politics; though we, of course, shall push steadily for reform. We leave for New Iberia in a few hours.

J. B.

PROF. H. WOODSMALL.

Our colored brethren of the South will never know how much they have lost in the death of this devoted and heroic man. We have not before us the history of his life, but during the eight years he has been known to the Cynosure it has been a record of singular fidelity, self-denial, and patient, wise and forbearing labor for the elevation of a race crushed down by oppression into ignorance, vice and superstition.

During Bro. Hinman's first journey among the Southern churches and schools, in 1880, he called at Selma where Rev. G. M. Elliott was conducting the mission and school for the Reformed Presbyterian church. Here he met Prof. Woodsmall, then a teacher in a Baptist institution in that city. He hailed Bro. Hinman and his mission. Having himself been through the degrading ceremonies of Masonry, he realized their danger to the black race.

Later his mission to this people was enlarged, as he became a traveling secretary for the Baptist mission board, visiting all parts of Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and part of Tennessee, and possibly other States. His plan of holding institutes among the colored pastors was a wise provision for their instruction. These were training schools in pastoral work, theology, Bible study and practical efforts for the salvation of men. Each one provided excellent opportunities for careful instruction in regard to the lodge system; and many pastors of that denomination doubtless can bless him for his faithfulness on this question.

All this time he co-operated with the National Association in putting into the hands of these pastors such literature as would enlighten them more fully on the nature of the lodge. In 1886 he came North with Rev. R. N. Countee of Memphis, and attended the annual business meeting of the N. C. A. and addressed audiences in this city and in Wheaton.

Mr. Howe of Wenona, Ill., had great confidence in Prof. Woodsmall, and finally arranged to establish a permanent institute at Memphis to continue the excellent method of instruction adopted among the Baptist pastors. He gave $10,000 to start this work, and here Bro. Woodsmall spent his last energies in establishing this school and instructing its classes. His health had for years been failing, but he kept at his work to the last moment. Bro. Countee's letter tells of the end that came at last to the toil and anxiety of this faithful heart, when the Lord said, Come up higher. Among those servants of the King who shall be made rulers over many things we shall see at last the name of this brother, for no talent given him was hidden in a napkin or buried in the earth.

THE BURLINGTON STRIKE.

Two weeks have passed and both the railway managers and the strikers hold out. The local business of the road is being very largely resumed, but when loaded cars were consigned to other roads engineers refused to draw them. As the Inter-state law compels this to be done the C. B. & Q. company had the fight in their own hands and could have forced the other roads to comply. Had the engineers in such a case made a general strike it would have been fatal to their secret order, for an indignant public would have suppressed it. As it is, the press generally condemns them, and none more severely and ably than the agricultural papers.

But an appeal was made to the U. S. district court by the company to enjoin Mr. Arthur of the brotherhood from further interference, and to compel receiver McNulta to take cars consigned to the Wabash road. Pending this trial there is a lull. In Omaha Judge Dundy has decided against the strike under this law.

In Congress the strike has been recognized, and Mr. White, of Indiana, has moved a committee of investigation and settlement. Before the committee is chosen the strike may be over, as a number of leading roads have notified their engineers that they shall take Burlington cars loaded with through freight. The boldness of the brotherhood is much tamed. Arthur now denies that he can order the men to strike, and claims no power over their individual action, though this has been his boast up to the day an injunction was asked.

An incident of the strike was the address of Mayor Hewitt of New York last Wednesday, before the alumni of Williams College, in which he denounced the use of autocratic power by labor leaders in these emphatic terms:

"What is all the tyranny of the past compared with the claim which is deliberately made in this country now, that it shall be in the power of one man—call him Powderly or call him Arthur or call him what you will—to paralize the entire industry of the United States! Was there ever in the history of man a despot who laid claim to any such power as that? Where at any time in the history of the race has it happened that a conclave of ten or twelve delegates should be sitting in a room, as they are to-night, to determine whether the bread and the fuel and the necessities of life should be withheld from those who are ready to work and are working for the support of themselves and their families? Who is to stand up in this crisis and reach the truth? If the men who have been trained in college in the mathematics, in the humanities are cowards, and because they want votes are afraid to get up and preach the truth, then God save the Republic, for man cannot do it. Hence I want the graduates of the colleges of the country to understand that they have a high mission—a greater one than Peter the Hermit thought he had when he led the hosts of the Crusaders to rescue the holy sepulcher. Ah, that is a sacred spot, but there is something more sacred than that. It is the right of men to govern themselves, to be their own masters and not to be the slaves of irresponsible power sitting in secret and usurping the function of Government."

Colorphobia Routed by Episcopalians.—For ten or twelve years the question of the admission of colored delegates to the Episcopal diocesan convetion has agitated the representative churchmen in South Carolina. There are only two or three negro Episcopal churches in the State. The bone of contention, however, has been St. Mark's church, in Charleston. The majority of the clergymen, including the bishop, have been in favor of admitting the St. Mark's delegates. The laymen have been equally solid against it. Year after year St. Mark's church would send its representatives to knock at the door of the convention, only to be turned away. Finally a native colored man was ordained and installed as rector of St. Mark's. At the last convention the bishop ruled that all clergymen in good standing were canonical, and constitutional members, and entitled to their seats without submitting their credentials to a committee. Then followed three days of wrangling, all efforts to get to business being in vain. Even a bishop's patience, however, has some limit, and finally, after meekly and mildly submitting to three days of parliamentary bulldozing, he put his foot down firmly. He gave his ruling on a question and turning a deaf ear to all motions to "appeal from the decision of the chair" directed the clerk to go on with the reading of the minutes. This brought on the crisis. There was a hurried consultation among the laymen, and then a venerable delegate arose and announced that his parish had decided to withdraw from the convention. Four venerable lay churchmen thereupon stalked down the aisle followed by the blessing of the much-badgered bishop, who said: "Good-by, brethren; God be with you." A stampede followed, and then there was a counting of noses. It was found that although a large number of delegates had withdrawn, there was still a quorum left. The business was hurriedly disposed of and the convention adjourned after selecting Anderson as the place of meeting of the convention of 1888.

—A letter from Miss E. E. Flagg to Secretary Stoddard, written with a feeble hand, tells of her gradual recovery. She is able to sit up for a little while and is gaining slowly the strength she has lost. She hopes that by the first of June she will be able to undertake active work for the reform, carrying out the plans already contemplated by the Board.

—The address of Miss Moore, of Leland University, before the National Convention, which we take great pleasure in publishing this week, is an earnest and able paper, and will be read as it was received, with warm approval. We expect to publish Pres. L. N. Stratton's speech next week and others as fast as they can be obtained. Bro. Hinman took his address on to Washington and it appears in the American of last week.

—A letter from a United Presbyterian brother in Canada asks for advice in securing a pastor for an important church who shall be true to the testimony of the Word of God and of the church discipline. Such an inquiry alarms us, and should alarm the whole body of that great denomination. Is it, indeed, true that any of its pastors are unfaithful to their testimony? that so great a body of them are so disaffected that churches desiring faithful men find difficulty in obtaining them?

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard and his young wife have been royally entertained by relatives in Pittsburgh, and he writes with enthusiasm of the openings for lecture work in the city and vicinity. He was to speak in Wilkinsburg Thursday evening, and in the Covenanter church, Pittsburgh, of which Dr. A. M. Milligan was so long pastor, Monday evening. He was also hoping to secure a union meeting in the same church soon. The absence of the pastor, Dr. McAllister, deprives him of a warm co-adjutor in this enterprise.

—It should help our good citizens of Chicago to understand somewhat of the mysteries surrounding the mismanagement of our police force when they remember that the acting Chief of Police Hubbard, Inspector Bonfield, Lieut. Fitzpatrick and others are Freemasons. A few weeks ago the official days of the Inspector seemed to be numbered, but after the Snell murder Mayor Roche was forced by public opinion to ask the resignation of Ebersold, then the Chief. The Mayor is a great lodge man, and a Masonic coterie has control of the police force.

—The trades unions of Reading, Pa., composed of such bodies as the printers, hatters, molders, bakers, carpenters, hod-carriers, cigarmakers, barbers, etc., have organized themselves into a body known as the Trade and Labor Council, which, it is estimated, represents eighteen hundred men. They do not affiliate with the Knights of Labor. During the Reading strike they passed a resolution in which they "severely condemn the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers for their very ready offer of assistance to the company in the present difficulties on the road, merely for the purpose of seeking revenge."

—The India Watchman of Bombay comments upon the temperance movement among American Grand Lodges very shrewdly: "After the murder of Capt. Morgan by the Freemasons, the order became unusually pious to gain back its character. Strong drink has made such ravages among them that some are now struggling to counteract its power. A grand lodge in America, under the mighty power of the temperance movement, issued an order against admitting saloon-keepers to their order. Of course there is great opposition. As the lodges in India are 'right grand' drinking clubs, they may take warning."

—The Pittsburgh daily press reports a discourse by Pres. H. H. George of Geneva College, in the Central Reformed Presbyterian church of Allegheny City, on the subject, "Why I am Opposed to Secret Societies." He had five principal objections. The first was their secrecy; second, some of them take the place of religion; third, they claim to assert and exemplify religion; fourth, they administer oaths in an illegal and immoral manner; and fifth, they are, both in principle and practice, a hindrance to the true growth of the church and state. Dr. George made a powerful and impressive address, which we hope he will have an opportunity to repeat occasionally in Pittsburgh and vicinity.

—The trouble with the United Presbyterian brethren begins probably with the Grand Army of the Republic. This order was discussed at some length in the General Assembly which met in St. Louis three years ago, and the result was a rule which ought fairly to be construed as opposed to this order. It is not, however, in many quarters, and especially by the city churches. Even Dr. W. T. Meloy, of this city, who has in the past co-operated in the efforts to suppress the lodge, was led to give countenance to secretism by preaching a sermon before the G. A. R. on a recent Sabbath; the Godfred Weitzel post of this city meeting in their hall and marching in a body to the United Presbyterian church.

—The Aurora, the monthly publication of Knoxville College, notices a debate on the question, "Resolved, that oath-bound secret societies are detrimental to the colored race." This debate came about from a challenge of gentlemen in the city of Knoxville. Our readers will regret to learn that on account of the prevalence of typhoid fever the faculty was constrained to close the institution on the 24th of February. Several of the faculty had been sick and a large proportion of the students had already gone home. Pres. McCullough was unable to attend the New Orleans Convention because of this calamitous sickness. We hope the usefulness and success of this fine school will not be seriously interrupted by this severe providence.

—The Knoxville College Aurora judges most truly of the influence of the lodges which in some quarters of the United Presbyterian church are endured, in others pitied, and in others, alas! even embraced: "The admission of the so-called G. A. R. into the church admits all other lodges by the logic and necessity of the case. The lodge system from the Grange, Greek letters, G. A. R, down through Odd-fellowship and Masonry, is a unit, a secret empire; and the lodges of whatever name differ only in the degree of their wickedness and the extent of their power. Satan is founder of them all, and he laughs to see good men (deceived) leagued with bad men to do his evil work. The church and the lodge are implacable foes. One must destroy the other. Which shall it be?"

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

Saturday morning the National Board met at the call of the chairman, eight members being present. After prayer by Dr. Roy, Secretary Stoddard made his report of the New Orleans Convention and its expenses. His report was approved, and the deficit of $71.45 was voted to be paid. The contract with Bro. Francis J. Davidson as colporteur agent in the Southwest was approved, and his engagement until the annual meeting in June was voted. The very valuable services of Bro. A. W. Parry as secretary and reporter of the convention proceedings was cordially recognized and a portion of his expenses at the meeting assumed.

Secretary Stoddard found in the old book stores of New Orleans a valuable collection of Grand Lodge reports, numbering some fifty books and pamphlets. It was voted to put these in the N. C. A. library in the Cynosure office. A verbal report of the committee on Washington building was heard and the committee continued.

At the request of Bro. Hinman the Board voted to send copies of President Finney's book to the members of the graduating classes of Howard and Wayland Universities at Washington.

The matter of prize essays was called up, and the work of the committee was reported. Being incomplete the committee was continued and the time extended until September 1st next for the preparation of the essays. It was voted that circulars be issued without delay and brethren Worrell, Hench and Kellogg requested to act as a sub-committee to provide for the method of award.

PERFECT THROUGH SUFFERINGS.

Hebrews 2: 10.

I asked the Lord that I might grow
In faith, and love, and every grace;
Might more of his salvation know,
And seek more earnestly his face.

'Twas he who taught me thus to pray,
And he, I trust, has answered prayer;
But it has been in such a way
As almost drove me to despair.

I hoped that in some favored hour,
At once he'd answer my request;
And by his love's constraining power,
Subdue my sins and give me rest.

Instead of this, he made me feel
The hidden evils of my heart;
And let the angry powers of hell
Assault my soul in every part.

Yea, more, with his own hand he seemed
Intent to aggravate my woe;
Crossed all the fair designs I schemed,
Blasted my gourds, and laid me low.

"Lord, why is this?" I, trembling, cried;
"Wilt thou pursue thy worm to death?"
"'Tis in this way," the Lord replied,
"I answer prayer for grace and faith.

"These inward trials I employ,
From self and pride to set thee free;
And break thy schemes of earthly joy,
That thou may'st seek thy all in me."

PRUNING.

My neighbor, Sadoc Smith, has had a great deal of trouble. His only son, who was just old enough to help him, died suddenly a few weeks ago. One of his best horses fell and was so crippled that they had to shoot him. He himself has been sick for a long time, and is just able to get out and begin to take care of his orchard. As I drove by the other day he was near the road pruning a peach tree. I said, "Good-morning, Sadoc, I am glad to see you out here. I hope that you are quite well again."

"No, I am not well. I feel weak and miserable. But I had to come out and try to get the orchard in order, or we will have no fruit. I can't understand why I have such a hard time, when my neighbors are well and prosperous. What have I done to bring all these trials and afflictions upon me?"

I did not know what to say at first, for it had been a mystery to me as well as to him. For though Sadoc has his faults, like the rest of us, he is really one of the best men in the neighborhood. But as I looked at the tree he was pruning, I remembered our Saviour's parable of the vine in the fifteenth chapter of John, and I said:

"Sadoc, what is the matter with that Crawford? It seems to me to have made a splendid growth since last year, and, if I remember right, it bore several boxes of excellent fruit. Why, then, are you sawing and cutting it so? See, it is actually bleeding! It looks as if it were being severely punished. If it had a human heart and voice would it not cry out, Master, what have I done, that you cut off my tender shoots and mangle and torture me? A stranger watching you as he passed by might think that you were a savage, and these trees enemies that you had captured and were wreaking your vengeance upon."

Sadoc looked at me in surprise. He did not understand what I was driving at; so he said, "You have an orchard of your own, and you know that we have to prune our trees, or they will run all to wood and we will get no fruit."

"So, then, it is because you like that peach tree, and rejoice in its vigorous growth, and expect it to yield you a valuable crop next year, that you are pruning it?"

"Of course. But why do you tell me what everybody knows?"

"Because you don't seem to remember it when you look at the work of the Divine Husbandman. God says that he deals with us just as we deal with our trees. You have often read the fifteenth chapter of John. You remember the second verse, 'Every branch in me that beareth fruit, he purgeth [pruneth] it, that it may bring forth more fruit.' He don't prune the unfruitful branches, but the fruitful ones. The motives in pruning are affection and hope. We love the vine or tree for what it has done. We see in it greater possibilities of fruitfulness, and we want to help it to do better in the future than it has done in the past. And God prunes us because he loves us, and because he would have us glorify him by bearing much fruit. For there is a tendency in all of us, like that in your peach trees, to excessive wood-growth. By wood-growth I mean temporal prosperity. When a man is left to himself he becomes carnal in his thoughts and desires. He wants to have as much sensual enjoyment as he can, and to get all the material good that he can. He forgets that he is a child of God, an heir of immortality, and that he is planted in this world to bear fruit unto holiness. Hence God has come to us, just as we go to our fruit trees, and cut us back. His object is to make us better men and better Christians. You prune your trees for symmetry as well as for growth. There are some trees that seem to know how to shape themselves. They grow gracefully if you let them alone. But most of our trees, and especially our fruit trees, straggle if left to themselves. They send out too many shoots on one side. They send out too many branches that cross each other, and, hence, chafe each other. And it is so with us. Our characters are not symmetrical. Our growth is one-sided. Some of us are gnarled all over with prejudices. We need the shaping hand of the Husbandman, as the block of marble needs the skill and toil of the sculptor to become a statue that thousands will admire. You know, Sadoc, that we are not to grow in this earth-orchard forever. God will transplant us one day into his Paradise above. He can't have any ill-shaped, crooked trees up there. Hence, he must trim and prune us now. The Lord loves you, my brother, and that is why he chastens you. He loves you better than he loves me. These trials are the tokens that he sees in you great possibilities of spiritual growth and fruitfulness."

"But why don't the Lord prune my neighbors, too? There is Jonas Jones, everything that he touches turns to gold. A little cutting back might do him some good."

"Perhaps not. Why did you skip that large tree at the other end of the row? It needs pruning more than any of the rest."

"Oh, that tree is of no account. All the fruit it bears is gnarly and worthless. I have tried all sorts of experiments with it in vain. So now I am going to let it grow until it is big enough for firewood, and then I'll cut it down."

"Yes, and may not that be the Husbandman's idea in regard to some of the trees in the human orchard? Would you or I want to be let alone because we were determined not to yield to the loving discipline of our Heavenly Father? Let us thank him that he does not let us alone."—Rusticus in the Occident.

PATTIE SUNSHINE.

You see, Pattie was like a bit of bright sunshine—the brightest sunshine you ever saw—wherever she went. Full of sparkling laughter, merry words, quick sympathies and kind thoughts, she seemed to brighten every place she entered, and to bring with her an atmosphere of sunny brightness and summer cheer even in the gloomiest moments and dreariest weather. At home or at school, it was always the same. Our Pattie Sunshine was wanted everywhere; moreover, was always willing to show her bright face and accord her help. When Tom's ball was lost or Jack's kite torn, if baby cried and was troublesome, or mother had a headache, Pattie's quick eyes, skillful fingers, coaxing looks, or cool little hands would seem to set matters right at once.

Every one in Drentham village knew Pattie Sunshine, and she in return knew every body. Old Mother Brown, who lived in the little cottage just across the common, and was visited by Pattie regularly every week, knew her step, and her old face would brighten, and the number of wrinkles and creases in her withered cheeks seem to grow fewer, when Pattie's brisk little trot was heard up the garden walk. Even Toby, the old blind dog who kept Mother Brown company, pricked up his ears and wagged his tail, directly Pattie clicked the latch of the little garden gate.

And then there was Mrs. Burns, who lived next door to Mrs. Brown, and who had a little crippled daughter told by the doctors that she would never again be able to walk or play with the other children. Mr. Burns, too, whose heart was so often filled with sad thoughts, and whose face betokened his troubles and fears, was always quite cheerful and happy after the little chat with Pattie, which he often had; for Pattie would frequently carry a little bunch of flowers from her own garden plot, or some little gift for the sick child, or would spend her half holiday reading aloud her last new story-book.

She assisted an old lady, Mrs. Richards, who had been to visit her daughter, at the other end of the village, and was caught in the rain while returning home across the common. Pattie, walking home with her new umbrella, had overtaken the poor old woman struggling with the wind and rain, and insisted on helping her home and carrying one of her packages.

"Law, Miss Pattie," said the delighted Mrs. Richards, "you mustn't wait to walk long wi' me. I'm that slow you will be as long agen o' getting home; and wi' a feather in your hat, too! But, there you're a real Miss Sunshine, as the folks say, and true enough it be."

In spite of the feather in her hat, Pattie stayed to help the old woman along; and, even if the feather did get wet, why she could curl it again, and have the pleasure of knowing she had cheered one worthy old friend and won heartfelt thanks beside.

Now, my dear little readers, I must not tell you any more about Pattie; but I cannot finish this little sketch without asking you if you will not make up your mind to be a Miss Sunshine, too. Lucy Sunshine, or Jane Sunshine, or even Araminta Sunshine, sounds just as nice as Pattie Sunshine; and I feel sure that, if you once earn the name, your delight will be so great that you will always deserve it afterward.

Take for your motto, as Pattie did, the beautiful little verse of Charles Kingsley:

Do the work that's nearest,
Though it's dull at whiles:
Helping, when you meet them,
Lame dogs over stiles.

NATURAL GAS.

On the western shore of the Caspian, a narrow tongue of land but twenty miles broad from sea to sea, thrusts itself far out into the waves of this remnant of the great ocean, that once covered the steppes of the Ural and Volga. It is the Aspheron Peninsula, the continuation of the mighty Caucasus Mountains, as they plunge beneath the sea. From this peninsula, as well as on the islands that stretch beyond it, and even from the sea itself, strange lights have flared for centuries. When they were first lighted no man can tell; but as they flamed on through ages, fed by a mysterious and inexhaustible fuel, is it a wonder that tradition held that they were lighted by Noah, as he came down from the neighboring Ararat, and that prophecy foretold that they would burn on to the end of the world?

For 2,500 years at least, this flame has been burning, and during all this time, so it is asserted, it has lighted the prayers of the priests of the purest religion known to the heathen world—the Fire Worshipers. Here they built an altar, and upon it, through all these centuries, a long succession of priests has tended the sacred flame with holy ardor and watchful care. To them it was the fire symbol of the eternal and omnipotent God they worshiped, and to them and to the awe-struck votaries of their mysterious faith, the region became known as the "Land of Eternal Fire."

But the demands of modern industry have overthrown the altar and driven its priests from its side. The vigil is at an end. The eternal fire has gone out, but in another and far-off land it has been rekindled, not as a symbol of worship, but to bring warmth and cheer to more than twice ten thousand Christian homes; for the mystic flame of the Caspian, before which the Magi bowed in silent awe, was the fire-light from the same natural gas that burns to-day in so many of the homes of this Western world.

Natural gas, it thus appears, is no new product. Three thousand years ago, the Chinese found gas three thousand feet below the earth's surface, when drilling salt wells, and have been piping it through bamboo pipes, just as we do through iron ones, and burning it in clay burners as we burn it in lava tips or brass. Cæsar warmed his shivering hands at the glowing flame of the Fontaine Ardente, in Gaul, with the same satisfaction and comfort that many a sovereign of this Western republic experienced in warming his at his gas fire the cold mornings last winter.

Nor has the natural gas neglected to give mankind frequent intimations of its awful power in these years of the past. The deadly fire-damp, that tells in the dread rumble and the quivering earth that death and destruction are abroad in the mine, is the same natural gas that we take into our workshops and homes, and which, like a willing giant, serving, not ruling, does willing, useful work.

When natural gas first made its presence known in this country cannot be stated. The Indians, and possibly the Mound Builders before them, must have had knowledge of some of the many surface indications, of the leaks from the gas reservoirs that are so common in the valleys of the upper Ohio, and which for centuries have told of the existence of this gas. Unlike its twin brother, petroleum, it was not born to this upper world but to pass away at its birth. It took no recognizable part in those striking and mysterious scenes, the petroleum burning at weird midnight over the waters of Oil Creek, which so impressed the early French missionaries as they journeyed down the Alleghany to the Ohio.

However, there are records of its presence here, going back more than a hundred years. The burning spring in the Kanawha Valley of West Virginia, which once belonged to Washington, is one of the earliest known recorded sources of gas in this country. In 1821, the little village of Fredonia, New York, was lighted with gas from a shallow well, and a little after, the light-house at Barcelona, a harbor on Lake Erie. Twenty years after Fredonia's first use, a salt manufacturer of the Kanawha Valley burned it under his "salt blocks." As early as 1838, it was used in a dwelling house in Findlay, Ohio. From an early date in the history of the development of the oil region of Pennsylvania, the gas, which generally accompanies the oil, has been used in drilling wells, pumping oil, and for light and heat in the towns and villages near the wells. Until 1883, few wells had been bored for gas. Nearly all gas wells had been struck while boring for petroleum.

Notwithstanding these earlier uses, it was not until the introduction of the gas from the Murrysville well into Pittsburgh, but three years ago, that natural gas began to assume the importance as a fuel which it now possesses. At that time its future was not dreamed of. Two or three rolling mills, glass works here and there, possibly a score of industrial establishments, all told, and a few dwelling houses used the gas for fuel. To-day it cooks the food of thirty thousand families and warms as many homes; it puddles the iron and rolls the steel; it melts the glass, it burns the pottery; it drills the wells and pumps the oil and refines it; it furnishes carbon for ink, for paint, and for electric lamps; it raises the steam in many thousand industrial works. In a word, it is the fuel for domestic purposes and for use in the arts wherever it can be obtained, and so much superior is it to coal, that cities, with coal at their very doors, pipe the gas sixty or seventy miles for use in their homes and workshops.

And what is this natural gas? There is a remarkable series of compounds of hydrogen and carbon known as the paraffines. Some of these are solid at ordinary temperatures, as paraffine wax, others are liquid, while still others are gaseous. Our American petroleum is composed almost entirely of liquid paraffine, holding solid paraffine in solution, while natural gas, which is so intimately associated with petroleum as to be scarcely, if ever, absent when that is present, is chiefly the first of the series of gaseous paraffines, methane ($C H_4$), the marsh gas of the stagnant pool, the light, carbureted hydrogen of the chemist, the explosive fire-damp of the miner. With this marsh gas is mixed quite a number of other gases, chiefly ethane, another of the paraffines, considerable hydrogen, and, at times, nitrogen, a little olefiant gas, the illuminating gas of our cities, with small amounts of carbonic oxide, carbonic acid and oxygen.

Analyses given seem to show that the proportions of the various gases vary most remarkably. This is one of the most interesting and inexplicable facts in connection with natural gas. The gas from the same well, coming from the same storehouse, will, in two different ways, show most marked changes in composition. Four samples of gas were taken from the same well near Pittsburgh, on four different days. In one of these samples there was but forty-nine and one-half per cent of marsh gas, in another seventy-two and one-fifth per cent, while the hydrogen in the two samples was thirty-six per cent and twenty and five-eights per cent, respectively. It is no wonder that with this great variation in composition the gas does not give as great a heat at some times as at others.

Usually the gas has little or no odor. This is one of the dangers connected with its use. It might escape into a room in sufficient quantities to form an explosive mixture without indicating its presence. There is, however, a slight odor to the gas when burning, that cannot be described, but which is soon recognized by those using it. Some gas has a distinct smell of petroleum, while that from certain deposits, the Findlay, for example, very soon announces its presence by a marked odor of ancient eggs, caused by the sulphureted hydrogen it contains.—Joseph D. Weeks, in the Chautauquan.

TEMPERANCE.

THE SUPREME COURT DECISION ON PROHIBITION.

[From prelude to Joseph Cook's Monday lecture.]

And now, exercising a freedom to which you are accustomed in this place, and which I hope none of you will mistake for partisan heat or personal discourtesy, I beg leave to raise the question, so old and yet new with every hour, what are we to do about this mischief?

First of all let us with united voice praise God for the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on prohibition. [Prolonged applause.] I hold in my hand an official copy of this celebrated decision, sent to me by Justice Harlan a few days ago, and I have had the honor of doing my little utmost in distributing it to the public. It is a document of considerable legal dryness, but every word of it should be studied by every friend of temperance and of law and order.

What are the chief points settled by the decision of the Supreme Court in the Kansas prohibition cases?

1. The constitutionality of State prohibition of the liquor traffic, without compensation for property thereby injured or destroyed, is unanimously affirmed by the Supreme Court. [Applause.]

2. The right of trial by jury is declared forfeited in prohibition States for violators of the temperance law. The liquor traffic can be suppressed by injunction proceedings without trial by jury.

3. It is within the police power of a State to prohibit the private manufacture of intoxicating liquors by any citizen for his personal use.

I venture to take time to read a few sentences from the decision itself to justify these propositions, and because these authoritative words open a new era in temperance legislation. The Supreme Court says:

"That legislation by a State prohibiting the manufacture within her limits of intoxicating liquors, to be sold there or bartered for general use as a beverage, does not necessarily infringe any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States, is made clear by the decisions of this court, rendered before and since the adoption of the fourteenth amendment."

That great amendment was intended as a shield for the slave after he became a free man, and the hope of the liquor traffic was that it might be used as a shield for the whisky syndicate of the Republic. This decision also says:

"The entire scheme of prohibition, as embodied in the constitution and laws of Kansas, might fail if the right of each citizen to manufacture intoxicating liquors for his own use as a beverage were recognized. Such a right does not inhere in citizenship, nor can it be said that government interferes with nor impairs any one's constitutional rights of liberty or of property, when it determines that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks for general or individual use as a beverage are, or may become, hurtful to society, and constitute, therefore, a business in which no one may lawfully engage.... This conclusion is unavoidable, unless the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution takes from the States of the Union those powers of police that were reserved at the time the original Constitution was adopted. But this court has declared, upon full consideration, that the fourteenth amendment had no such effect."

Let us praise Almighty Providence for a decision as beneficial in the conflict with the saloon as the Dred Scott decision was injurious in the conflict with slavery. [Applause.]

What is likely to be the effect of this decision in the future of the temperance reform?

1. The decision immensely discourages the liquor traffic by hanging over it the Damocles sword of possible and lawful confiscation.

2. It immensely encourages both statutory and constitutional prohibition.

3. It does this for both State and nation.

4. It greatly facilitates the execution of prohibitory laws, and makes it wholly the fault of the people if prohibition does not prohibit.

5. It is a decision for the whole country.

ROYAL PRINCES AND THEIR PIPES.

One of the greatest deprivations, says the London Referee, which the Crown Prince has had to endure is the loss of his pipe. "Unser Fritz" was always a great smoker, and he dearly loved to blow a cloud from a big-bowled wooden pipe, which the Princess Royal carried for him with her own fair hands. The Crown Princess—unlike Mrs. Carlyle—has always encouraged her husband to smoke at home.

Of late the poor Prince has had his pipe taken out of his mouth. His ailment has literally put his pipe out. Not only must he not smoke himself, but he cannot breathe the air that is impregnated with tobacco, and so his sons, when they come to see him, have to smoke out of doors. It is due to this fact that San Remo at one time mustered among its attractions a royal Prince with a brier-root pipe perpetually in his mouth. Prince Henry, the Crown Prince's second son, smokes his pipe in the English fashion, and smokes it morning, noon, and night. You could meet him when he was at San Remo strolling about after breakfast with a well colored English short clay or cutty. In the afternoon he made just this sacrifice to fashion—he changed the clay for a brier-root.

The gigantic whisky monopoly will strenuously resist the reduction of the whisky tax by Congress. They do not deny having an enormous lobby and bribery system, but rather boast of their power. The railway bribery kings will very probably pool issues with the whisky ring in this and all other matters during the coming campaign.

A petition signed by 1,132,608 women and girls has been presented to Queen Victoria asking that all saloons in England be closed on Sunday. The leading reason for presenting this petition is that it has been statistically proved that the majority and the greatest of crimes are committed on Sunday.

Eli Perkins writes to the N. Y. American Banker that "the hundreds of little railroads in Kansas are being built by individuals who possess capital. The boom is wonderful and due to prohibition. Kansas used to send out $22,000,000 for beer and whisky but now saves $18,000,000 of that for new business enterprises and improvements." It is a wonder that grogshop States can get along at all: only the temperate people render it possible.

A loyal white-ribboner, now sojourning in Paris writes of the quiet temperance work being done in that city of magnificence. Pastor Rochat, of Geneva, has been holding a series of temperance meetings, which were largely attended and far-reaching for good. At a drawing-room meeting the need of a temperance coffee house was discussed. A Quaker gentleman of York, England, who was present, offered to contribute toward the founding of this enterprise if sufficient evidence is given that the temperance people of Paris desire such an establishment.

Senator Brown, of Georgia, has another ally in his movement for the abolition of the internal revenue taxes. After some debate the petition said to represent the views of 200,000 women who are members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the country has been lodged in the Senate, praying for the repeal of the internal revenue laws. The theory upon which this petition is based is that through these laws the United States Government now sanctions traffic in alcoholic drinks, and thus legalizes the inciting cause of intemperance, and that without such a National license the cause of temperance would be promoted in that some States at least would have the power to absolutely prohibit the sale of intoxicants. These petitioners claim that the most serious obstacle which the Prohibitionists meet now in the so-called Prohibitionist States arises from the fact that the United States licenses the sale of liquors, and that by means of these licenses the Prohibition laws of these States are often effectively defeated.

Mr. Moody, in one of his addresses in which he was speaking of the appetite for rum, said: "I heard, in a little meeting after the prayer meeting, yesterday, a man who said that he had been a confirmed drunkard for thirty years; but he came here a week ago to-day, and the God of heaven took away his appetite for strong drink, and his face shone with joy as he told what God had done for him, soul and body. Now that, I think, is supernatural. I should like to have any one explain how such a thing can be done by natural causes.

"I know there are a great many who doubt these witnesses, and if a man had told me five years ago that a man could be a drunkard for twenty or forty years, and then have his appetite for liquor suddenly taken away, I should not have believed him. I have always believed that God could save a drunkard, but I supposed that he would have to carry that appetite down to the grave, fighting against it all the time. But I find that God is able to destroy the works of the devil thoroughly, and this appetite is surely one of the works of the devil."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—A very gracious and powerful revival has come upon the Congregational church of Dundee, Ill., of which Rev. W. L. Ferris is pastor. Bro. Ferris has been aiding in revival work also in a country neighborhood near by. He has lately, thank God, been constrained by the Spirit to testify plainly against the secret orders.

—At Charleston, Ill., there has been a great ingathering of souls, over 100 converted. Bro. M. L. Haney, the evangelist, has been assisting for some two weeks, and writes cheeringly to the Banner of Holiness of the gracious power of the Spirit upon many souls.

—Word from Fall River, Mass., to the Christian Worker of this city, Feb. 13, says: "The revival here is wonderful. It is estimated there were 400 conversions yesterday, as men count. The men's meeting last night numbered over 2,000;the women's 1,500. The meeting to-night in the Central Congregational church was one of great power.

—From the reports of revivals in the Guide to Holiness the following estimates of conversions show that the Lord has been merciful to many: Iroquois, Ill., 175; Peru, Kans., 175; West Beatrice, Nebr., 80; Hood, Ark., 85; Larned, Kans., 260; San Jose, Cal., 100; LaPorte, Ind., 141; Porte City, Iowa, 102; Buchtel, O., 245; Portland, Me., 100; Paterson, N. J., 40; Fowlerville, Mich., 30 to 40; Jane Street church, New York, 135.

—Clinton B. Fisk, the prohibitionist leader, while with a committee looking at "Tammany Hall" with a view of selecting it for the meeting of the Methodist Episcopal General Conference, when he objected to the price, was told by the proprietor, "Why, you can make almost enough out of the bar to pay the rent."

—D. L. Moody said to a large audience at Louisville, that a man came to him for aid in a worthy charity, that this solicitor had heard that he was getting $100 a night. Moody told him that if he got $100 a night he would give $1,000 to his charity. He then said to the audience, "You needn't pay me a penny is you don't want to. If you can find any committee, either in Europe or America, that ever got my services by offering me money, I will give $10,00 to you. God delivered me from the love of money when he took me from my business. I have my failing, but thank God, it is not the love of money. We want you, not your money. We want your souls."

—The Lutheran missionaries from Hermannsburg, Pastor Harm's old church, in 1887 baptized 1,483 heathen at the different stations among Zulu and Bassuto negroes of Southern Africa. The number of baptized members in their churches is now 10,800. The services and sermons are in the languages of the natives, but the tunes used are the old chorals of the Fatherland.

—The first Congo church in the Congo Free State was organized in November of last year, and there are now 1,062 converts in the Congo Mission.

—Ceylon is sending forth missionaries from among her own people. Two young natives, one of them a Buddhist convert, have left the island to join the new Wesleyan Mission in Upper Burmah.

—The Queen of Madagascar recently attended the opening services of two Christian churches at Ambokimanaga. In fourteen years 700 Protestant chapels have been built in Madagascar, making the number now 1,200. There are 8,000 Protestant communicants, and all the churches are self-supporting.

—The following statement will show the extent of the Swedish mission field, in which the various mission associations are laboring: The Fatherland government mission, established in 1865, has the following stations among the Abyssinians and Gallas: McKulla, near Massana, Arkiko, and Djuinua, employed eight Swedish missionaries and ten native assistants. In the central provinces of India, the society has the following stations: Narsingpur, Sagar, Betul, Tjindavara, Tjittaljeri, Nimpani, where ten Swedish missionaries and eight native assistants are employed.

—Rev. J. L. Stewart, of the Southern Presbyterian Mission in China, in a review of the progress of the Gospel in China, gives these special points of encouragement: "Books for the study of the English language and on the Western science, written in Chinese, meet with an extensive and increasing demand. A dozen daily newspapers, all founded within fifteen years, are obtaining a wide circulation throughout the empire. These are spontaneous appeals on the part of the heathen Chinese for more light. Add to this the voluntary attendance on the hundreds of schools and chapels, wherever opened in the empire; their respectful attention to the preaching of the Word, to the quiet talks by the roadside, in their places of business, and in their homes, and it sums up a mass of evidence that the Chinese mind is in an attitude of attention and inquiry."

—Probably one of the oldest Christian church buildings in the world is the Bangund church in Norway, the age of which is 800 years. The pagoda-like structure is covered with shingles and an inch or two of tar. Runic inscriptions, interesting to scholars, are on the building.

—It is reported that one-third the churches in Maine are closed on account of lack of support, and one-half the people of the State are non-church-goers. The returns from the canvass show that out of 1,362 churches in the State, 417 are vacant. Out of the vast collection of excuses it is found that spite and personal differences are the foundation for much of the absenteeism. The following figures show how the different denominations are affected: Union churches, 15 with pastors and 17 vacancies; Congregational churches, 156 with pastors and 76 vacancies; Baptist, 121 with pastors and 98 vacancies; Free Baptist, 159 with pastors and 81 vacancies; Methodist, 270 with pastors and 38 vacancies; Universalist, 35 churches with pastors and 56 vacant pulpits; Quaker, 8 churches open and 4 closed; "Christian," 43 churches open and 12 closed; Episcopalian, 29 churches open and 8 closed; Catholic, 48 churches open and 8 closed; Advent, 15 churches open and 16 closed; Unitarian, 15 churches open and 3 closed. Besides these there are one Luutheran, one Free church, one Christ's Faith church, two Jewish synagogues, two Christ's Disciples, three Presbyterian, one New Jerusalem church, and two Shaker churches open.

—Eighty-six years ago the honorable directors of the East India company placed on solemn record: "The sending of Christian missionaries into our Eastern possessions is the maddest, most expensive, most unwarrantable project that was ever proposed by a lunatic enthusiast." A few months since Sir Rivers Thompson, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, said: "In my judgment, Christian missionaries have done more real and lasting good to the people of India than all other agencies combined." So great is the difference between the fears of prejudice and the facts of God's hand.

—A remarkable change, it is said, has come over Campanha, one of the largest cities of the province of Minas-Geraes, in Brazil, in the past fourteen years. It used to be noted for its strenuous profession of Catholicism, the religion of the State. A Protestant missionary, who merely sought to pass through the city, without attempting to hold any service, was beset by a mob and stoned and left for dead. Now there is a vigorous Protestant church in Campanha, and the people have broken away from Catholicism in large numbers, and those, too, of the higher classes.

—The chief supporter of the Chinese Mission in Corea is Ah Hok, a wealthy and generous Chinaman, who a few years ago gave $10,000 to the Anglo-Chinese College at Foochow, and more recently $1,000 to a church at Hongkong. He gave $1,000 to the Corean mission, and himself accompanied the two Chinese missionaries who went out.

LITERATURE.

CYCLOPEDIA OF UNIVERSAL LITERATURE, presenting Biographical and Critical Notices, and specimens from the writings of eminent authors of all ages and all nations. Vol. VIII. Pp. 480. Price, 50 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

The continuation of this library of reference in literature extends from Ferreira to Gayarre, and includes notices of such notable names as Ferreira, the Portuguese poet; Henry M. Field, American journalist and author; James T. Fields, American publisher and author; Geo. P. Fisher and Wilbur Fisk, American theological writers; John Fiske, American scientist; Flammarion, French author of "The Wonders of the Heavens;" Mary Halleck Foote, American artist and author; John Forster, English biographer; Charles James Fox, English statesman; George Foxe, of "The Book of Martyrs" fame; Sir Philip Francis (the famous Junius); Benjamin Franklin, American statesman, philosopher and philanthropist; E. A. Freeman, and J. A. Froude, the English historians; John C. Fremont, our "Pathfinder" for the millions across the continent and for the Republican party in 1856; Wm. Lloyd Garrison, the Abolitionist editor, etc., etc. We have been accustomed to regard Franklin not so much a literary man as a statesman and philosopher, but twenty pages are given to his writings, which proves the generous disposition of the compiler of this valuable work of reference.

Among the cheaper editions issued by Mr. Alden are George MacDonald's Home Again (6 cents) and the Chronicles of the Schonberg-Cotta Family by Elizabeth Charles. This latter volume is one of the most remarkable works of modern fiction, if indeed it can be called a work of fiction, for "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and Miss Flagg's popular volumes, "Between Two Opinions," and "Holden with Cords," are no less so. It is a charming, a wonderful book, sketching the great Reformation of the Sixteenth Century from the outlook of humble homes, and the cells of monks and cloisters of nuns, where its light penetrating brought life to souls near dead with their burdens of superstition and will-worship and falsehoods palmed off for religion. This edition is marred by very careless proof-reading, but as the price is only 15 cents it should be read by the millions as an antidote for the aggressions of Romanism.

MRS. CAUDLE'S CURTAIN LECTURES. By Douglas Jerrold. Pp. 132. New York. John B. Alden.

It was in 1841, when on the staff of Punch, the comic paper of London, that Douglas Jerrold contributed to its columns the famous Caudle Lectures. It is said of Jerrold's wit, that like a flint, every stroke brought fire from him, and from this volume we are very ready to believe that his reputation as a social wit was much greater than as a writer. It is but a compilation of humor of this class most droll and captivating. It has almost become an English classic, and as an aid to mental relaxation can hardly be excelled.

Dr. Pentecost announces in March Words and Weapons that Rev. B. Fay Mills, whose labors as an evangelist have been greatly blessed, will be associated with him in the editorial management of the magazine. It is the purpose to make the magazine the most unique and distinctive organ of evangelistic and all aggressive Christian work in this country. The magazine will be enlarged and divided into departments, in which original and helpful editorials and contributed articles will appear, bearing on the work of pastors, evangelists, and Christian lay workers; fresh and living illustrations of life and truth, gathered from the field of conflict, will be supplied; and carefully digested reports of the aggressive Christian work going forward throughout the country will be given each month. Dr. Pentecost's sermon on "Unconditional Surrender," Dr. Pierson's sketch of Astley Cooper, the late Earl of Shaftesbury, and a tabulated view of the Scripture teaching on the judgment, are portions of this number deserving of special mention. This excellent monthly ought to have a place on the table of every pastor, church officer, and Sabbath-school teacher. New York. $1.50 per year.

The English Illustrated Magazine is most thoroughly British, but has for that reason an added attraction. The speculative and conjectural has little place, and we may see with wonderful distinctness the habits and appearances of our ancestors, and mark their struggles that have given us liberty. The number opens with a quaint portrait of Queen Elizabeth, copied from an original presented by the Queen to Sir Henry Sidney. Penshurst, the home of the Sidneys, gives a title to the first article. "The English Art" is a brief history illustrated with fine specimens of drawings and water colors. "Coaching Days and Coaching Ways" is continued and must be quite popular with old English readers. Prof. Minto's story shows how the Wat Tyler rebellion in the time of Richard II. was organized by a kind of secret society process.

Frost, insects and birds are the worst foes of both the practical and amateur gardener. So Mr Charles Barnard —florist, economist and one of the editors of the Century magazine—has invented a very practical and exceeding simple arrangement for the protection of plants, which can be made for about fifteen cents. In a recent test in February, the temperature beneath it was 65 deg. when the thermometer stood at 32 deg. outside. This invention is not patented, but has been purchased by the American Garden of 751 Broadway, New York, who will present it gratis to the gardening public of America. This greatest of gardening magazines is only $1 per year.

The frontispiece of St. Nicholas for March is an exquisite engraving of "Babie Stuart," by T. Johnson, from Van Dyck's well known painting. The first article, "An Ancient Haunt of Pirates," contains an interesting description of a journey through the little known region where the celebrated Lafittes, Pierre and Jean, carried on their privateering. The trip was taken by Eugene V. Smalley, and the artist, E. W. Kemble, and the latter has made many characteristic drawings illustrating his companion's account of the trip. Ernest E. Thompson has contributed a novel and attractive paper showing what a naturalist may read from "Tracks in the Snow," and the tracks are reproduced so that the readers may draw conclusions for themselves. Julian Ralph, in "A Pig that Nearly Caused a War," makes an authentic and amusing addition to the history of the difficulty with Great Britain concerning San Juan Island. And there are scores more of bright pages for young readers.

Diphtheria is now such a common disease that it is of the utmost importance for every mother to have some idea of its symptoms and character. An article in the March number of Babyhood supplies all the information which it is possible to give in a popular form concerning that scourge of the nursery. The article is by Dr. Chapin,

Professor of Diseases of Children at the Woman's Medical College, of New York, and is thoroughly practical. It gives plain directions for the examination of the throat, which it is insisted should be made in every case of illness in children. A number of illustrations help to make clear the difference between simple tonsilitis and diphtheria, and the changes in the appearance of the tonsils in both diseases. The March number is for sale by newsdealers everywhere at 15 cents.

The Prairie Farmer of this city with its well-known enterprise has just issued a number on Farm Renting. Of the five million farms in the United States, at least 1,300,000 (or over 25 per cent) are occupied by Lessees. Then there are, besides, at least a million owners of the rented farms. Thcse two classes and their familics are dependent upon, or at least interested in, the proper renting of the farms—in all, probably over ten million persons.

Of all the seed catalogues Peter Henderson has the finest. No expense seems to have been spared for colorcd chromos, and his patrons know he has been one of the first of the list of scedsmen. "Everything for the Garden" is an inspiration for everyone who has a patch of land; and the cost (25 cents) is but a trifle to a good garden. This price for the catalogue is deducted from the first order for seeds.

Vick's Magazine calls upon its readers to be ready for spring work in garden, vineyard and greenhouse. "The Meeting of Horticulturists," "Improvement of Home Grounds" and floral articles will be read with profit.

Lodge Notes.

Fred. Grant, Cal., has joined the Sons of Veterans.

The National Association of Bakers, in session at St. Louis, have approved the action of the Chicago Union, No. 49, in its fight against the anarchist members; but also adopted a resolution denouncing the hanging of Spies et al as a judicial murder.

It is reported that the early dissolution of the Chicago Trades and Labor Assembly is foreshadowed owing to the ultra-socialistic element. The unions representing the sailors and bricklayers have withdrawn. It is still supported by the Knights of Labor.

The officers of the various Masonic bodies of Chicago will meet in the hall of Apollo Commandery, 78 Monroe Street, Monday evening, March 19, to organize a Masonic Board of Relief for the city. So the lodges, it seems, are not managing their charitable enterprises so wisely as they bosst.

Grand Master J. C. Smith, of the Masonic fraternity of Illinois, opened one of a series of schools of instruction in Masonry lately in Rock Island. The school continued for three days, the afternoons being devoted to instruction and the evenings to work. A large number of visiting Masons attended.

The Scotch Rite Masons in this city had thcir last dance of the season last Thursday evening in Battery D armory. This selcct crowd of 32 degree Masons, "Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret," found the excitement of the dance somewhat tame and added a little gambling by means of progressive euchre.

At a special mecting of Assembly No. 9,852, Knights of Labor, of Mahoney Plane, Pa, it was unanimously voted that the late strike on the Reading road was a hasty and impetuous m'stake. The executive committce was condemned for not declaring the strike off, and it was agreed to withdraw from the Knights of Labor.

Of all the candidates for Govcrnor representing the Republican party, writes a correspondent of the Inter Ocean, every one is an activo Grand Army man—Smith, McNulta, Connelly, Rinaker, Fifer, Wrlght. But Smith has the lead in Masonry and Odd-fellowship. He is now Grand Master, and has been living on lodgery for ycars.

Out in Kansas they have a new order with a broad, breezy name suited to the climate and landscape of the prairles—the Grand Brothers. There is only one lodge in the State and nonc in any other States and Ness City has all the glory of it. It is an order for mutual assistance and the elevation of society—like all the rest. It elevates society by grand street parades and masked balls. Soon the people will learn the sequence of such affairs.

At Marshalltown, Iowa, where a memorable State Anti-Masonic Convention was once held, the Masonic side show called "Nobles of the Mystic Shrine," of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, met at the Masonic Club to confer the degrees upon eighty candidates from Templar and thirty-second degree Masons throughout Central Iowa. A great banquet closed the affair.

Bill Walker, the chief of the Bald Knob gang, was found guilty of murder in the first degree in the Taney County Court, Springfield, Mo., Friday, and sentenced to be hanged. The jury was out just thirty minutes The crime for which he was found guilty was the murder over a year ago of George Green and William Evens, two prominent farmers of Taney County. These men had in some way given offense to the Bald Knobbers, and Walker led an assault on their houses. Each was dragged from his bed and murdered before his family. The crime was one of the most bloodthirsty that ever disgraced the Southwest.

Jacob Burg has sued Garden City Lodge, No 389, I. O O. F. of Chicago to compel it to show cause why he was expelled and to secure money alleged to be due him on sick benefits. Burg was expelled from the lodge because he had insulted a lodge brother and neglected to appear in person for examination. But he says his expulsion was the result of spite work. He kept a boarding house and used about $10 worth of groceries every day. He bought these goods for a long time of Gustave Leders and Henry Amberg, who were each lodge brothers. He was not satisfied with the goods they gave him and the prices they charged and quit trading with them. They complained that he was not showing the proper brotherly feeling toward them, and he told them he would trade where he pleased. Odd fellowship or no Odd-fellowship In this retort consisted the insult, according to Burg. Leders was the highest officer in Burg's lodge and Amberg a prominent member, and they together secured his explusion. The attorney for Garden City Lodge said Burg could secure satisfaction before the Grand Lodge, and wished him to trust to the tender mercies of the order.

Charles Ray, Robert Duke, and Columbus Andrews, three of the negro Bald Knobbers who overpowered Albert Adair and L J Kinworthy a few nights since, took them from their home, five miles southeast of Springfield, Mo, and brutally whipped them until they could scarcely walk, were tried before Judge Evans here to-day and fined $50 and sentenced to from ten days to six months in the county jail. The punishment is considered very light for the atrociousness of the crime. The trial of Pike Thompson, another of the negro Bald Knobbers, was continued, The nine white Bald Knobbers, indicted for murder in the first degree for killing Charles Green and William Elens in Christian county, on the 11th of last March, have been arraigned the third time in the Circuit Court at Ozark, which began yesterday. The men are: Bull Creek Dave Walker, chief of the Bald Knobbers; C. A Simmons, the Baptist preacher; William Walker, John Matthews, James Matthews, Wiley Matthews, Amos Jones, William Newton, and William Stanley. A severance was granted the accused, the Sheriff ordered to summons a venire of 120 men, and the work was begun to day of selecting the jury to try the case of William Walker, the 7 year old son of the Bald Knobber chief, who was shot in the leg at the time Green and Edens were murdered.

FOREIGN.

In the House of Commons Friday, a motion against a hereditary House of Lords was negatived by a vote of 223 to 163 The motion was supported by Sir William Vernon Harcourt, Mr Morley, Mr. Childers, Sir George Treveloan, and the Gladstonians generally, as well as the Parnellites.

By the foundering of a ship from Australia, loaded with wool, on the south coast of England, twelve lives were lost.

Forty persons are reported killed by a steamer explosion at Cartagena, South America. The vessel was a little excursion boat, and with a pleasure party had gone up the river Digue. Nearly all of the passengers, about forty people in all, were killed. The owner of the vessel, says one report, is a brother of the President of the Republic, and doubtless on this account the true facts of the catastrophe will never be known.

The United States war steamer Enterprisc, armed with six cannon, has arrived at Tangiers, Morocco, to demand the immediate release of a native Moor, who has become a naturalized citizen of the United States, who is confined in a Moorish prison in violation of international law. Not only is the Moor's release demanded, but the Moorish Government is required to give dne satisfaction for the man's illegal arrest.

HOME AND HEALTH.

ABOUT WASHING.

A housekeeper writes to the Syracuse Journal: "I have recently learned of a new method of washing which has so simplified my own labor that I am anxious to extend the information. The method is this: Soak the clothes over night in warm water, soaping the more soiled parts. In the morning put over the boiler half full of water, into which put three tablespoonfuls of kerosene oil and enough soap, shaved from the bar, to make good suds. If oil is seen on top the water add more soap. In this water put the cleanest clothes and stir briskly about, being careful not to crowd the boiler, as it is necessary to have the water percolate freely among the clothes. After they have boiled about five minutes, take out into water as hot as can be borne by the hands. The more soiled parts may require slight rubbing on the board; pass from this water through two rinsing waters. It is better that the first should be hot. As water is added to the boiler, add a proportionate amount of oil and soap. The more soiled clothes will require a little longer boiling. If the work is properly done there will be no oder left from the oil. By this method the soap and oil are made to do the work of the hands and do it satisfactorily, too. There is an element in kerosene which enables it to disintegrate dirt, and in fact petroleum forms a constitutent part of many popular washing fluids. I would not advise any to try this without some personal supervision."

Washing Fluid.—One tablespoonful of soda and one teacup of coal oil to ten gallons of water.

Washing Fluid.—One half a bar of hard soap, one ounce each of saltpeter and borax dissolved in four quarts of water; when cold add five ounces of spirits of ammonia. Bottle and use as soap.

Washing Fluid—Equal parts of turpentine and ammonia. Add to water.

A teaspoonful of turpentine boiled with your white clothes will aid the whitening process.

Ox gall soap is an excellent article for colored goods and flannels. Take one pint of gall, cut into it two pounds of bar soap, and add one quart of boiling water. Boil, and pour out to cool, cut in squares. Add to the suds used for washing. Ox gall soap can also be bought in small cakes like toilet soap.

To wash colored table linen use tepid water with a little powdered borax; wash quickly, using but little soap; rinse in tepid water containing boiled starch; dry in the shade, and when almost dry, iron.

Black stockings should be washed in a cool lather of plain white soap, a little ammonia and rain water.

To wash faded cambrics or calicoes, boil ten pared potatoes in six quarts of water and strain it though a hair sieve, then wash the dress in it without soap, the potato cleansing and stiffening both Or, a tablespoonful of beef's gall to a pail of hot suds may be used. Mourning calicoes should be soaked in perfectly clear water till no more dye comes out, even if two or three days are needed.—Helen Campbell.

Ammonia may be used instead of soap for goods liable to fade Black pepper put in the water in which buff, gray, or black dresses are washed will preserve the color.

OVER-DRESSED CHILDREN.

There is nothing so painful to my mind (unless it be the sight of a caged wild bird) than to witness the discomfort of an over-dressed child. I refer to those children who are not to the manner born. To the little street arabs, who play all week untrameled by fashion and make mud pies to their hearts' content, who on Sunday or a holiday are decked out in unaccustomed finery, taken for a walk or ride, on car or boat, with their parents What visible discontent and rebellion is displayed in every one of their childish features. How impatiently they carry their fine feathers! What a mutinous frown clouds the little face when a fond and admiring mother smooths the fine plush coat, or re ties the gaudy sash, and admonishes it for the fiftieth time not to run for fear of falling, or not to sit down lest something be crumpled and not to lean backward or forward, on account of ribbons or feathers!

When I see a child overloaded with finery that a poor, hard-working mother can ill afford, I do not ascribe it so much to the mother's affection as to the pleasure she takes in gratifying her own vanity.

As for the child, she is either unhappy from the restraint imposed on her, or she has learned to take a pride in her gay clothes, in which case she minces, eyes the passers by to see what impression she makes, and is so foolishly self conscious that she is a thousand times more unlovely than she would have been in the plainest garb.

Habits, good and bad, are almost always formed in childhood, and many an unwise mother thus fosters in her child a love of dress that in after years may lead to her ruin.—M. E. B.

A GRAVEYARD COUGH.

The short, dry, hacking cough, which announces the approach of consumption, has been aptly termed a graveyard cough. The peril is great, and near at hand, but it can be surely averted with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a botanic remedy, without a peer for pulmonary, throat and liver affections, and for all ailments which, like consumption, have a scrofulous origin, and also for eruptions and sores, indicating impurity of the blood. Druggists all sell it.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 212 East 9th St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

Chronic nasal catarrh—guaranteed cure—Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

Warranted Seed.

I have founded my business on the belief that the public are anxious to get their seed directly from the grower. Raising a large proportion of my seed enables me to warrant its freshness and purity, as see my Vegetable and Flower Seed Catalogue for 1888, FREE for every son and daughter of Adam. It is liberally illustrated with engravings made directly from photographs of vegetables grown on my seed farms. Besides an immense variety of standard seed, you will find in it some valuable new vegetables not found in any other catalogue. As the original introducer of the Eclipse Beet, Burbank and Early Ohio Potatoes, Hubbard Squash, Deephead Cabbage, Cory Corn, and a score of other valuable vegetables, I invite the patronage of the public.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body a Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge whom S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

News of The Week.

WASHINGTON.

The new Chinese treaty will be signed within a few days by Secretary Bayard for the United States and by the Chinese Minister for the Flowery Kingdom. This treaty, it is understood, contains very rigid provisions against the importation of Chinese laborers. It will probably meet with strong opposition from the Pacific Coast Senators, mainly on the ground of the privilege it accords to the Chinese who have accumulated $1,000 worth of property.

The joint resolution recently passed by the House accepting the invitation of the French Republic to take part in the International Exposition, to be held in Paris in 1889, was reported favorably Wednesday from the committee on Foreign Relations.

The House Committee on Commerce, has authorized a favorable report on the bill to provide a system of postal telegraphy. The bill appropriates $8,000,000 for the purposes of the act, and places the general supervision of the system under a fourth assistant Postmaster General. The rates of tariff for 20 word telegrams are 10 cents for 500 miles or less and 20 cents for 500 to 1,000 miles, with proportionately increased rates for longer distances.

The bill providing for the opening of the great Sioux Reservation passed the House Wednesday without division or opposition. There is great rejoicing among Dakota real estate land sharks.

Thomas J. Potter, general manager of the Union Pacific Road, died Friday morning at Washington. Mr. Potter was formerly Vice President and General Manager of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, and for the past two years has been Vice President and General Manager of the Union Pacific. He was regarded as one of the most successful practical railway officers in this country. He grew up on the C., B & Q. road from a lineman.

Secretary Fairchild in his report submitted to Congress early in December, estimated that the Treasury surplus would reach $140,000,000 by the end of the present fiscal year. It is now stated at the Treasury Department that owing to heavy receipts during the past few months, the estimate then submitted will prove to be too small, and that the surplus at the end of June, 1888, will probably reach the sum of $155,000,000.

The House Friday proceeded to the further consideration of the omnibus war claim bill. The amendment agreed to in committee of whole, after a protracted debate, appropriating $20,000 for the relief of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary and High School of Virginia, was again the subject of discussion, being earnestly opposed by several members. It passed by a strong vote.

CHICAGO.

Commissioner Swift has condemned the Washington Street tunnel, and ordered it closed up. Engineer Northway after a careful inspection reported that it was in a shaky condition and it was positively dangerous to use it The tunnel was constructed in 1867, and was two years ago given up to the street railway.

The Inter Ocean Rapid Transit Railroad Company, capital $7,500,000, was incorporated at Springfield, Ill., Wednesday to build elevated lines on the West Side, Chicago.

The town of Hyde Park is now verily part of the city of Chicago. The State Supreme Court has pronounced its decision, sustaining the legality of the election by which that town merged itself with the city. The city of Chicago now extends from the south line of Lake View southerly to the Indiana State line—about twenty-two miles long from its northern to southern limits. From east to west the city is about five miles wide.

COUNTRY.

To better conserve the interests of Americans engaged in mining and commerce, it is stated that General Bragg, the new Minister to Mexico, will endeavor to negotiate a new treaty of friendship, commerce, and navigation.

The Prohibitionist majority of the Atlanta (Ga) Board of Aldermen Thursday rejected the ordinance for free books in the public schools because the books have to be purchased with money accruing from saloon licenses. The measure had been passed by the Council.

A lively tilt in the Ohio legislature grew out of the reconsideration of the Owen Sunday closing bill. The Hamilton County (Cincinnati) delegation are down on the bill, and declared that if it becomes a law the city of Cincinnati will give 5,000 Democratic majority at the next election. The Sunday closing legislation does not appear to be a Republican measure, but is urged by fully half of the Democratic members.

Efforts are being made to have locomotive engineers, like marine engineers, licensed and controlled by the government. It is said that a bill has been prepared on the subject, and will be submitted to Congress.

Claus Spreckels, the sugar king, advises farmers to cultivate beets, and says the manufacture of beet sugar will yet prove one of the great industries of the country.

The new office of the Evening Union, Springfield. Mass., was burned out about 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, and the blaze was attended with the most sickening horror ever witnessed in this city, six of the employes meeting a terrible death, most of them jumping from the fifth story and being crushed into a shapeless mass below. Six others were badly injured, one of whom has since died.

Miss Louisa M. Alcott, the famous author of "Little Women" and other stories, died at her home in Boston Highlands, Tuesday morning. Her father, A. Bronson Alcott, the Concord philosopher, expired on the Sabbath before, and as she was born on the anniversary of his birthday, it is deemed singular that she should have followed him so soon to the grave.

At Bradford, Pa., Tuesday morning, a masked man, named Kimball, jumped over the railing in the Bradford National Bank and seized the money on the desk of the cashier. He shot the latter through the hips, on his attempting to hold him, ran from the bank, and, after being pursued some distance by citizens, turned and shot a butcher, and then killed himself. The other men were both fatally hurt. Kimball had been drinking heavily.

A sharp shock of earthquake was felt at Los Angeles, Cal., March 7, being the severest for eighteen years. No damage was done, but houses were badly shaken and people ran into the streets in fright.

At Omaha, Friday, Judge Dundy, of the United States District Court, issued an order temporarily enjoining the Union Pacific Railroad Company and its engineers from refusing to perform their duties under the Inter State Commerce law, which requires them to receive freight and passengers from connecting lines, and enjoining the engineers of the Union Pacific from organizing or combining to direct any strike. The arguments on a motion to make the order of injunction permanent will be heard next Monday, on which day arguments on a similar motion will be heard by Judge Gresham at this city.

Louisiana is preparing to organize an immigration bureau. A committee just appointed will submit an act to the Legislature in May.

The two elections held in Massachusetts Monday resulted very satisfactorily to the Prohibitionists. Out of fifty five towns in the eastern part of the State only eight voted for license.

Fire broke out in the Methodist University, at Mitchell, Dak., at 3 o'clock Friday morning from the spontaneous combustion of oily rags in the art-rooms. There were forty inmates, including the faculty, students and servants. All but ten escaped without trouble. Four young men jumped from the second-story windows; four others and a professor jumped from the third story, and another professor descended from the roof by a clothesline. One died in two hours, three are believed to be fatally hurt, and six others were badly wounded. The financial loss is $50,000, and the insurance aggregates $7,500.

The last and twenty-seventh victim of the terrible Mount Vernon, Ill., cyclone to be relieved of his sufferings was Peter Hillicrop, the Louisville and Nashville Railroad engineer, who died Friday. He was on his engine at Mt. Vernon when the cyclone swept down upon that city.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

PROFESSOR WOODSMALL.

ANOTHER TRIBUTE TO THIS DEVOTED MAN.

BY REV. B. A. IMES.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Before your last issue you should have had word of the death of Rev. H. Woodsmall, which occurred here Monday evening, Feb. 27th. Your readers are familiar with his name and work; but it was not generally known, perhaps, that while laboring faithfully as the agent of the Baptist Missionary Society, Prof. Woodsmall suffered constantly from poor health. He was in pain much of the time during several years past.

The effect of wounds received while serving in the army, during the late war, clung to him; and, added to this, the malarial atmosphere, and an increasing tendency to pulmonary disease, were more than a match for him in spite of an iron will and a deeply consecrated purpose of heart.

During the past winter he had given up the general field work in order to aid in establishing the proposed Institute encouraged by Mr. Howe of Illinois with his generous gift. A Bible class of nearly forty young men already in the ministry was gathered for a much needed course of instruction, and it was in the fond hope of completing a course of lessons with this class that the dying teacher persevered, against the advice of friends, who could see that the "silver cord" was well-nigh broken.

It was his aim to go to his family in Indiana as soon as he could give up the class, which, as he remarked to the writer, was the most interesting class of the kind he had ever instructed. But at that time, a month before the end came, the least exertion in walking caused him to gasp for breath. He came in this very feeble condition to the LeMoyne Teachers' Home, and requested that he might get his meals there, having secured a room across the street, just opposite.

"Do not take me for my own sake, but for the work's and for the Lord's sake," said he.

It was his hope that with their boarding arrangements he might secure more favorable conditions than formerly, where his meals were brought to him and he ate alone as near to his class room as possible.

On Saturday, Feb. 25th, for the first time he did not go to meet the class, but as it was near by he attended our Sabbath morning worship, and the next evening, after having complained of increasing weakness and strange symptoms, a physician who was called told him that there was little hope. He said, "I am in my Father's hands."

He would have taken a boat for the North that day, but there was no strength for that, and at the close of the day his brave and faithful heart was still. Next day his body was carried from Prof. Steele's room to the Tabernacle Baptist church (Mr. Countee's), where appropriate funeral services were held, the teachers and many of the pupils of the two schools being present. The remains were taken by Prof. Vann to Richmond, Indiana, to be received by his wife and friends for burial. Altogether, a sad experience, mingled with much that is cause for thanksgiving to God.

What a lesson of heroic consecration in his life and work! For about fifteen years he labored, first a teacher at Selma; then general missionary in Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee and Louisiana, preaching, lecturing, holding institutes and training Bible classes. The importance and magnitude of the work grew upon his zealous hands and heart. He was genuinely Baptist in doctrinal views and denominational preferences, and yet in his presence you discovered the Christian rather than the sectarian. Probably no man holds more firmly and positively his personal convictions of truth than did this man of God, and this fact made it all the more admirable that apart from prescribed regulations of his church, he was genial, tolerant, and manifested the spirit of Christ-like love.

One prominent feature of his work gave him peculiar satisfaction, as he related to me only a few days before his departure, and that was the effectual manner in which he had awakened the minds of many ministers throughout this valley on the subject of secret societies as rivals of the church of Christ, and practically injurious to the church. It came in naturally with the study of Scripture, and discussion of the nature and work of the church as a divine institution. He always felt as one prepared with the armor of truth and with its polished shaft, to pierce right through the sophistries of these false religions. He was personally acquainted with nearly all the colored Baptist ministers in these five or six States, and knew of many who had given up the lodge, and also those who were deeply convicted as to their duty upon the subject.

Thus "not shunning to declare the whole counsel of God," he looked to the day of account with a deep and unfailing peace of mind. In his personal association with our people he was naturally commanding in tone, as one who expected to govern and direct, where he had the right so to do, yet with entire respect for every one. He betrayed no air of refined contempt for those whom he labored to lift up—a failing which sometimes greatly mars the good which a teacher or missionary in any position may seek to do. Thus maintaining his own dignity he drew out the love and respect of those whom he called brethren in Christ.

I would say more, but you will no doubt have letters from Mr. Countee or others ere this reaches you; but I have written so much because at best our highest tribute of honor and love falls short of justice to the memory of this worthy man. "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me write: Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord....yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

Memphis, March 13, 1888.

IS THE PROHIBITION PARTY A SAFE POLITICAL INVESTMENT?

BY A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

The people of God are expected to be deeply interested in the welfare of their country. They can never be indifferent, and sometimes they cannot innocently be neutral. The present is such a time.

Several vital moral questions have found their way into politics and have become political issues. Faithful Christians are reformers. Should they give their activities a political shape? Should they connect themselves with a political party? Should they vote?

If you say yes to these questions, another, not so easily answered, arises, namely, What party shall we join and how shall we vote? The answers to this last question are various and conflicting, because men do not see alike. I am speaking to reformers—to those who would rather lose all they have on earth than do wrong.

As to the end, all agree; the perplexing question is that relating to means. Politically speaking, there are two reform projects, mainly, the American or Anti-masonic party, and the Prohibition party. Which of these is preferable? It may be inferred that these two parties are respectively the same everywhere. Speaking of political incidents connected with the New Orleans Convention, editor Blanchard says, "I never saw so clearly the wisdom of keeping up a distinct American party." He says, too, "The Prohibition party already begins to toady for the vote of secretists." This is truly startling. I have for some time thought that if reform work was to take a political shape, the American party was the only one that could consistently be supported. Yet, it has seemed to me that reformers were giving their preference largely to the Prohibition party. This course is adopted by the masses of Prohibitionists in their honest zeal for the overthrow of the saloon system.

About 172,000 votes were cast in this State in favor of the Constitutional amendment—though many refused to vote for the amendment on account of its communion-wine feature; yet Prof. Dickie received about 25,000 votes in Michigan in the last Presidential campaign. Many of the amendment votes were cast by members of the old parties. Yet there is another fact, and it has not been mentioned in the reports, as the following statement will show:

The Prohibition party of Michigan has nominated many Freemasons for office, and has never objected to any candidate on account of his lodge connection: and no notice has been taken of the respectful and urgent protests that have been made. Consequently, many have been driven to withhold their votes, while many others have been induced to vote for Baal-worshipers, saying, "Let us unite and close up the saloons, then we will turn our attention to the lodges."

But cannot they see that they are doing for the lodge what it cannot do for itself? Is it not evident too that a bad habit or a bad traffic cannot be as objectionable as a false religion? And shall the disciples of Christ, under any pretext of doing good, become the abettors of the sworn enemies of the truth of the Gospel? If the leading saloon men and the Prohibition leaders are or shall become Masonic brothers or fellow conspirators, the Masonic-prohibition party will be doomed. Why has the Masonic order declared for temperance or prohibition all at once? To get a new lease of life, of course. The serpent has only changed its skin.

"Local Option" is the live and troublesome public question in this State, at present. Oakland county held its third party conference in this city a week ago. State organizer Taylor said that local option was not prohibition, in fact. It was a Republican dodge of the prohibition issue. Voting whisky out of a county was only driving it into another county. It was driving the rattlesnake out of your dooryard into your neighbor's yard to bite your neighbor's children. He insisted that nothing could be meaner than that.

Yet the conference passed a resolution pledging them to do that very thing—to vote the prohibition side of the local option question in the event of an opportunity, and Mr. Taylor dictated the action.

In the afternoon session it was shown that the reform was endangered by its connection with secret societies. R. B., a Methodist preacher, immediately took the floor and said, "I am sorry that Bro. Springstein has ventured to make war on a good society. I am a member of the Masonic fraternity, and have taken all the degrees up to 32nd. My Masonic obligations require me to be a good prohibitionist, and they do not require me to do anything wrong."

Elder Long called him to order, and the chairman stopped him. He then made an excited speech, in which he predicted the complete and early triumph of the third party.

Now, the people of this vicinity know what Masonry is, yet they applaud the speech of a 32-degree Masonic preacher in face of the fact that they had just listened to a statement of the Masonic oaths, by one who spoke from personal knowledge. Of course there was a sensation, but the Anti-masonic prohibitionists contented themselves with private remarks. Passing over the important questions suggested by Elder Bird's Masonic confession of faith, the reader must be informed that the Michigan prohibition organ, the Center, owned and edited by a preacher, advertises a "dancing academy" as well as secret temperance societies. Yet, those prohibitionists constantly exhort us to vote as we pray. Paul said, "I pray that ye do no evil."

I must ask the Anti-masonic prohibitionists to listen to the famous John B. Finch. He says, "I am a member of a party, and if it wriggles and twists on a public question, I'll get out of it and denounce it. This idea, of two evils choose the less, I think, is one of the most misleading of our times. Suppose you went into a place for a glass of lemonade with an egg in it, and the proprietor said, 'I have not any fresh eggs, but I have one bad one and one spoiled one,' which one would you choose? I think you would say, 'I'll wait until the hen lays.'" That is to say, he will not vote for or with a party partly good and partly bad. But, if a Christ-rejecting religion is not much more repulsive to your conscience than a spoiled egg is to your palate, you must be a moral monstrosity.

The Prohibition party has no Anti-masonic feature, but the American party has a prohibition plank. Therefore, Anti-masons must either keep out of politics or sustain the American party. Will you "go with a multitude to do evil?"

BRIBERY AND CORRUPTION IN NEW YORK POLITICS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The Baptist Quarterly Review has an editorial called out by the suggestion in Tourgee's book "that the caucus and the machine" in politics be legalized. New York city is taken as an illustration of the danger of such a move. "In the first place, let us begin at the beginning, the obtaining of a nomination. The prime requisite for this is a 'barrel.' Either the candidate or some of his friends must be willing and able to 'put up' a round sum of money in order to gain a nomination for any prominent office." The following schedule of prices shows the actual assessments that were made by one party machine at the last elections upon the candidates for the offices named: Two Supreme Court Judges, $20,000 each; Criminal Judge, $10,000; two City Court Judges, $5,000 each; seven District Court Judges, $3,000 each; Surrogate, $10,000; District Attorney, $10,000; Comptroller, $25,000; seven State Senators, $5,000 each; twenty-four Assemblymen, $1,500 each; twenty-four Aldermen, $1,000 each; President Board of Aldermen, $2,500. Total, $223,000. Higher prices were sometimes demanded; and if we compare these sums with the salaries per annum of each official it will be seen that in only one or two cases is the assessment less than an entire year's salary of the office for which nomination is sought. "In cases where the term of office is long, or where the opportunities for making money corruptly are very great, the assessment is correspondingly large. Thus, a Supreme Court Judge whose term is fourteen years, is assessed $20,000, it being calculated that out of a salary of $17,500 a year he can easily save the amount of the assessment during his term of office. A State Senator, whose salary is $1,500, is taxed $5,000."

These assessments are to meet "the legitimate expenses of an election." Here are some of them: "There are great political meetings to be held, at which noted speakers address the crowds, and are paid therefor liberal sums. There are processions and fireworks. There is the printing and distributing of the ballots. There is the advertising of polling places in the daily papers. There is printing and distribution of speeches and other documents intended to influence the opinions of voters. The pay of clerks at political headquarters, who attend to the large correspondence and who send out ballots to the voters through the mails, must also be provided for in this way."

In the last election about 1,200,000 ballots were cast in New York. "The city employed in the work of receiving and counting the ballots 5,684 persons. These are paid out of the public treasury, and the burden falls equally upon all tax payers. But besides these men there was probably an average of forty-five employed under pay in each election district, nominally to distribute the ballots, making 36,540 for the 812 election districts. In the city there are in round numbers 200,000 voters; therefore, one man in every five among the voters was in the pay of the party machine. The hiring of so many men was not at all necessary. It is, really, indirect bribery." Eighty million ballots were printed and distributed; only one million and two hundred thousand were used. This is waste.

What is the remedy? "It is for the State to assume the duty of printing and distributing ballots, as well as counting them. The best suggestion that has been made is that a separate ballot should be printed for each office to be filled, and that upon this ballot should be placed the names of all candidates nominated by a certain number of voters. One of these ballots would be furnished to each voter, who would erase from it the names of all but the candidate for whom he wished to vote, this operation being performed in a compartment where he is in absolute privacy, so that no one but himself knows what his vote is. The ballot is then deposited in the proper box in the usual manner. This would make it impossible to intimidate the voters, and it would be practically equivalent to requiring ability to read as a qualification to voting, which would not be a bad thing in itself."

This is the method that is pursued in Australia, and substantially in England, and similar methods of balloting have been tried with the best results in various countries of Europe. "A candidate in England is allowed but a single election agent, and within a given time after the election he is required to file a sworn statement of all expenditures, together with vouchers therefor, and any falsification in this return is punishable by very stringent penalties, which are very strictly enforced. The result has been to make bribery almost a lost art in the election of British members to Parliament, and that similar results would follow a law of that kind here cannot be reasonably doubted."

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN DANGER.

BY AN OLD LAWYER.

Ye Pilgrim Fathers, why did you flee from the thralldom and tyranny of the king of Great Britain? Was it to deliver yourselves and your children and your children's children over to the rule and domination of the "Scarlet Woman," "the Mother of Harlots and abominations of the earth," instead of bringing them into a land of civil and religious liberty and light? Is the Protestant world asleep? Will its people not take warning and rise in their might and protect their religious freedom and civil rights and uphold the glorious charter of their liberties? The tocsin is sounded. "Catholics should compel (if necessary) the temporal authorities to make the required concessions" to the Pope, not in Italy alone, but the world over, wherever he can get a foothold. It is said "the German Catholics in the United States recognize three obligations,—the natural one of nationality, that of Catholicism, and that of American citizenship." Any man of ordinary understanding may see at a glance that this cannot be true. The German Roman Catholic may recognize the first two obligations, but they are incompatible with the third—they are irreconcilable. The duties pertaining to Roman Catholicism and to American citizenship run counter to each other; they are opposite in principle and character; they necessarily pull in different directions and can never form a union, and, therefore, he who is a good and true Roman Catholic cannot be a true and good American citizen. He cannot serve the Pope and uphold the U. S. Constitution too. The duties required of him in each case are too antagonistic to each other. He will be forced to hold to the one and despise the other.

Here is the autocracy of the papal power unmistakably described by Kaiser of Detroit, Mich. He says, "Centralization was necessary for the government of the church;" and that "the popes employed force and severity or mildness and persuasion at will and according to the requirements of the circumstances;" and that "it was in this truly human accommodation to circumstances that the strength of the Catholic church lay." Just so; everybody that is not hand and glove with the Pope, "at his will," must be under his anathema. Is it not a shame to Protestants that the Bible has been thrown out of our public schools? It is clear that Roman Catholicism is itching all over to get control of our public schools. The papal magnates of Chicago dictated to and manipulated the Board of Education, and so excluded the Good Book from being a part of our public school education, intending thereby a severe blow to Protestantism in preventing its growth. This blow was intended to strike deep and at the very root of Protestantism and draw the young therefrom into the meshes of the Romish church, which course has added much to her prospects for the future over and above the hope she has of strengthening herself from her nursery of youths under her own tuition. The result of the course taken with our public schools, is, that a large proportion of our school children are already well advanced in infidelity, and others of them drift off into Roman Catholicism. Well did Mr. Tappert say in the third resolution endorsed by the German Catholic convention of Chicago: "To whom the school belongs, to him belongs the future." There is an old saying that carries with it a wonderful deal of meaning; it is this: The old parochial "Domini" used to boast that "in the school he ruled the children, and at home the children ruled the parents." Quite so. This is just what is wanted by the Roman priesthood. Its every aim is to this end. Just listen to what Father Koeberle of St. Paul, Minn., says in the Inter Ocean of the 8th of August last on this important question, speaking "with special reference to the development of Catholic youths, he said he wanted the children to be under the control of the priests so that the latter might have full control of the pupils. He exhorted his hearers to go home and exert their influence for good in the education of the young"—by the priests, of course.

Kaiser of Detroit "objected to monarchical professors with their diseased brains." He said, "the church called for discipline, for obedience and in this was the strength of the Catholic church." In this he is most assuredly correct, and no one will dispute him. Then he recites evidence of obedience of the Catholic bishops, ministers and all in office trusting wholly to the infallibility of the Pope.

Who cannot see in all this the cool and careful calculations of priestcraft to reduce the whole human family on this continent to that terrible thralldom that deprives a human being of the right to think, judge and act for himself without the let or hinderance of Pope, bishop, priest, cowled monk, or other functionaries of the "Scarlet Woman"—"the great whore of Babylon who has made the nations drunk with the wine of her fornications." Rev. 17.

A little reflection cannot but make it palpable to the most casual observer that popery is the sworn enemy to all civil and religious liberty, and at this moment is advancing with a rapidity that ought to be alarming to all Protestants. It needs to be understood distinctly that it is a mere pretext, a blind, on the part of the Pope that he claims territorial dominion over Italy only. Be aware that "he who ages ago had the whole earthly portion, is now unmistakably renewing his claim to all territorial and spiritual dominion the world over, and is taking the most active measures possible in all parts of Christendom to which he has access, to recover them," and to this end, at the late convention held here, the German Catholics and the Romish priests together, in the most adroit manner, forged, and hammered into shape on the anvil of popish infallibility, and tempered it off in the cunningly devised resolutions of the German Catholic Union—a great entering wedge, with which, in the near contemplated future, to uproot our noble and free institutions of learning and wrench from this people their most sacred and constitutional rights and force everything to become subservient to the will and work "of a domineering, whorish woman," Ezek. 16: 30. "God save America" when her hour of trial comes.

At Guatemala in Central America last September (1887) the Catholic Archbishop of that place with some of his friends who are opposed to that government, which is republican in form, left there for San Francisco for the purpose of procuring means to bring about a revolution against Barrilos, the President of Guatemala, because the Government had declined to "declare against the Protestant church" just established there by the Rev. Clark Hill of this country. (See Inter Ocean, Sept. 21, 1887.) Such doings of the church of Rome so close to our doors ought not to be lost sight of. They have more than ordinary significance.

Surely then it behooves every loyal American citizen, who desires to retain a republican form of government in these United States, to ponder the present attempt of Pope Leo XIII. through his minions in this country to insinuate himself into favor amongst an independent people already glorious in honor, power and achievements as a noble and aspiring nation, and come to the front at once and arrest the further driving of that damnable wedge of Romish iniquity into the bulwark of our freedom.

DUTY OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATORS IN REFERENCE TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

ADDRESS OF PRES. L. N. STRATTON BEFORE THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION.

Some men would say, "It is of course the duty of the Christian educator to join secret societies, and to induce his friends and students to do so. It will bring him popularity, multiply his friends among the outlying masses and worldly men whom he wants to influence. It will help him into positions of honor and trust, and be stirrups for his feet and a war-horse between them. If he gets into trouble it will help him out. He can rely upon the friends of his fraternity to be arms and armor to him, and over every man who would oppose him shall be dropped a big galvanized iron extinguisher, and 'ye ancient and honorable' religious teacher can sweep his wide swath onward without fear or favor. 'And when,' as the colored orator said, 'when he falls, he will fall all kivered wid vict'ry, an' rise to wear de long white robe in de great gittin' up mornin', when de general roll is called, and will walk de shinin' streets in silver slippers down to de tassalated pavements where de golden sunrise throws its glory ober de seat of de great, grand, pontifical,magnifical,puissant architect of de universe in de grand lodge above.' "

Now this sounds beautifully and to many it would seem cruel to break the fanciful vision. It rocks as gently as a gay gondola floating in a South Sea dream. But the sweep of Niagara's torrent, or the dreaded Maelstrom on the coast of Norway are as fascinating as fatal. So please follow me a little while and I will attempt to turn as much as a "dim religious light" upon this question.

The following conversation I heard as I stood in the washroom of our tourists' car. A competing line magnate said: "This Illinois Central Railroad has never had a particle of enterprise about it. Its equipments are the merest bagatelle in comparison to the rolling stock of the Rock Island, Burlington, Northwestern and Milwaukee systems. It is more than twenty years behind the present date. If it had kept step with its opportunities there wouldn't have been a parallel line built or a company dreamed of competing with it for a generation. See her road bed, tracks, depots and cars."

I quietly, and in rather a dramatic manner, remarked to a colored porter who overheard the conversation: "If a body don't like this line, he can take the competing line, I suppose."

The porter hung to the marble stand as he stooped and replied with the wise philosophy of Brudder Gardner, president of de Lime Kiln Club, "Well, Jedge, dat's de way changes is brought about—by kickin'."

SHAMS.

This world is full of shams. Our children in the North-land sing:

"When softly fall the feathery flakes,
To hide the withered grasses,
It is a time for buckwheat cakes,
And New Orleans molasses."

But coarse sorghum of the prairies is often worked off upon the credulous children, and butter made from a herd of Texas animals and pronounced oleomargarine slips into the place of the dairy product.

Shams began back yonder in Eden when the chattering serpent said to mother Eve, "The Lord doth know that in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt not surely die." He snatched away the truth and slipped a bogus coin into the place of the pure golden one. The teacher of theology soon discovers these wiles of the devil, and traces his trail down among the broken wrecks and ruins which mark his path through the ages. And in what especial particular do you suppose Satan would as soon deceive as in worship. It is true he might put covetous desires of the flesh, love of the world, or love of self into a human heart and ruin it; but that is a little narrow personal fact in comparison to the turning of a human soul in its adoration against the Father because against the Son, and seems like the fatal sin against the Holy Ghost.

THE CASE OF CAIN AND ABEL.

The religious teacher observes that away back up the rivers of time under the live-oaks or palm trees near the gates of Eden, Abel, the shepherd, who did mixed farming, and Cain, the great grain-growing farmer of the North, met upon a common level with equal advantages and erected their altars of worship. The altars were doubtless much alike,vine-wreathed, flower-decked and fruit-crowned; they were beautiful memorials of that early age. Cain's was no doubt as fitting as Abel's. But Abel had upon his altar a bleeding lamb. By this he seemed to say, "O righteous God, I am a sinner. Have mercy upon me! I am lost for two worlds! Save my stricken soul!" By this bleeding lamb innocence was suffering for guilt, and the Saviour, Jesus, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world was typified.

Cain, on the other hand, seemed to say, "There is my altar—the fruit of the ground. Take that and be satisfied. That is the way I pay my rent." Paul says, "Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts, and by it he, being dead, yet speaketh." Heb. 11:4. As no word Abel ever syllabled was written by a human pen, "he speaketh" in a pious example. He speaks to us from that far-off past to-night in favor of a true, pure and unmixed spiritual worship. It was upon the sacrificial substitution of this offering that his works were accepted as righteous, and his life accounted as pure as though he had never committed a sin, God "testifying" from the witness stand before the judgment seat in his behalf. It was upon this sacrificial passport that, when his body fell in the garden path,his spirit rose.

There is a law in Nature that places everything in strata according to its quality—rocks, earth, water, air, clouds, ether, light. According to this law, when Abel's body fell his spirit arose. Its gravitation turned the other way. His was the first human spirit that ever passed out of a human body. He was the first fruits of those who lost the earthly paradise who were to pass into the heavenly; the first human soul redeemed by the blood of Christ, a curiosity to angels and a wonder in heaven. See him as he ascends. Ranks of cherubim and seraphim and heavenly harpers divide their ranks to right and left, and archangels part the heavenly hosts as he passes up nearer the throne, singing as he goes, "Unto him that hath loved me and washed me in his own blood, and made us kings and priests unto God, to him be glory and dominion and power forever and ever." There was no sham or fraud about that. That was the true elevation and advancement of a soul to the realms of a higher sphere without the "shock of entrance," or the cable-tow of Blue Lodge or Royal Arch.

A DISPUTE—THE FALSE AND TRUE.

From the first step the false religion disputes every inch of ground with the true. When open opposition would not do, false teachers have started in to make a religion so similar to the original as to deceive the very elect. False religions have always been better adapted to natural tastes of the human heart than the self-denials of the true. It has always required less self-sacrifice and self-abnegation to worship Mammon or Moloch than Christ, the world's Redeemer; just as it costs less to feed, clothe and care for a wax baby with a whistle in its breast and a saw dust stuffing in its vitals than a real baby. If there is no self-denial in it there is no value in it. It is the trial that makes the endurance. There is never a sailor without a storm. An old mariner said, "I like a little head wind, it makes the furnaces draw." The true religion tests the faith and fervor of the soul. Good Thomas Guthrie said, "It requires no skill or courage to float down stream. A dead fish can do that; but let a man turn his back upon the world and head up stream and he has all hell to fight."

LODGE RELIGION.

Men sometimes say, "I do not need to go to church; we have worship in our lodge; it is better than the church; they are not so sober and sanctimonious like: they don't bother a man so much about his politics or his religion." I tell you this kind of a church man who don't want to be troubled about his religion is worth about as much as a lightning bug would be in furnishing a summer's sunlight to a cornfield or cotton plantation. You are all aware what that man's religion is worth. As the Spirit said to the Quaker, "He who religiously sets his heart upon the color of a button upon his coat, that man's religion is worth about the price of a button."

But when a man sees himself as the member of a body, the Bride of Christ, he adoringly exclaims, "My Divine Lover came all the long, lone journey from heaven to win his bride. He left the divine bosom of his Eternal Father to lie a feeble infant on a frail woman's breast. Son of God, he quit the throne of the universe, and assumed the guise of humanity to be cradled in a manger and murdered on a cross. In his people he found a bride who was deeply in debt, and paid it all; under sentence of death and he died for her; a lost creature clad in rags, and took for her robes from his own royal wardrobe and led her homeward. To win her he shed his tears, to wash her shed his blood: in her poverty endowed her with all things, and made her by adoption a full queen and heir to his Father's estate, as the will runs, 'heirs with God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ,' and 'if so be that [hereafter] we suffer with him that we may also be glorified together.' " And now our member of the neglected church and beloved lodge says, "I would give up my church before my lodge; I would throw up my engagement as a Christian and let the whole thing go, before I would give up my lodge." This proves the terrible grip of the lodge upon its membership; it shows the fascinations of its secretism; it proves that Christianity has a rival and foe in the worshipful lodge; it proves that the lodge eats the vital love and religious affection out of the hearts of those who give their time, interests and money to the secret lodge.

Various influences fascinate and fasten a man to a secret brotherhood. It matters not what has been the primal cause—so long as there is a cause, and he gives his affections to the wanton maid he meets, instead of to the true and lawful object of his affections—the home, the state and the church.

FASCINATION OF SECRETISM.

There is a fascination about the secrecy. It matters nothing about the blasphemy of the oaths, he is hoodwinked and does not see "how blue it looks," as he swears and swears, many times over and over, saying repeatedly, "Furthermore do I promise and swear," until the prophet might well again declare, "Because of much swearing the land mourneth." It may be the candidate is only anxious to secure the advantages of care when sick, aid when traveling and burial when dead. Hence he pays in a liberal sum, sometimes several hundred dollars, while he lives, dies after a brief illness perhaps, and his wife has presented to her the bill for the burial. Perhaps he attends the lodge to learn the curious secrets and learns the mysteries of the enchantments of the lodge. But he learns meanwhile the private doors to drug stores and saloons and other places less reputable, and learns at last that he is in the power of a giant appetite which gripes and grips and grinds him, hand-cuffs him and marches him into the prison of giant despair. It matters nothing if the original purpose which led up the winding stairs was paved with honest intentions and railed about and paled in with the most fascinating enchantments. For, mind you, he who goes up that winding stairs will not be likely, with equal simplicity and honor, to come down again.

FALSE KNOWLEDGE UNDESIRABLE.

When the devil beguiled Eve it was with the view of gathering for her the fruit of that tree of knowledge of good and evil which she had better been without. It was not that she suffered for something to eat, and could get nothing elsewhere. It was not that there was but little of that variety of fruit, and it would cut the crop short to eat of it, but it was rebellion—rebellion against the best and central government of the universe. There are certain classes of knowledge we had better be without. They lie in the pathway of evil and sin. Don't go around the block in the pathway of temptation. Keep as far as you can from it. Drive as far as you can from the edge of the precipice. Do not try to show that you can whirl your wheel within six inches of the abyss.

A stage toiled wearily up the Sierra Nevadas. When at length at the top the driver cracked his whip over the leaders and the horses sprang into activity, and the great rocking coach rumbled down the narrow dugways beneath shelving rocks and above yawning chasms, the value of the brake on which the driver, like an organist, varied the pressure of his foot, was discussed by the passengers. When halting at a watering trough. a nervous lady asked the driver the question, "What will become of us if that brake gives out?" The driver replied, "That depends altogether how you have lived in this world." Men will find that to sow to the wind will bring a whirlwind harvest, and that there is harvest grown from the seed of a clamoring imagination that they better be without.

A man says, "I'll go to the New York Central park and see the menagerie." As he approaches he hears the great Bengal tiger growl, and the Numidian lion roar, and the American panther scream. He passes the snarling hyenas, darts under the ropes, opens the great cage door and the uncivilized lion whirls a merciless paw over his head and snatches it off and the Bengal tiger tears his body into shreds through the bars of his cage, and the voracious beasts have not for a moment seemed to catch upon the idea that this innocent man, who used to be on earth, was simply in pursuit of knowledge, the knowledge of natural history. Such knowledge has been rebellion ever since the days of Eden. You better be without it. Don't go to the lodge to learn it. God requires of you perfect obedience. You give a portion of your devotions to a Christless God when he says, "Thou shalt have no other God before me." You say, "Daughter bring me an orange," and she runs away and brings you an apple, and you say, "No, an orange," and away she goes and brings you a lemon. Now it is not the value of the orange for which you care so much, but what makes that lump in your throat is, that your little girl has a constant tendency to do what you do not want her to do. So the human heart is constantly by nature clamoring for a substitute for the true and genuine religion of the Lord Jesus Christ.

CLAIMS OF THE BIBLE VERSUS FREEMASONRY.

The Bible claims to be the Book of God and a revelation of his will to man. But the Masonic lodge proposes to be as much. When Moses performed various miracles from God in the presence of Pharaoh, it is written that "the Egyptians did so with their enchantments."

The apostle said, "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved than the name of Jesus only;" and again, "Jesus Christ hath power on earth to forgive sin." But in Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, a Masonic text book of very high authority, on page 16, he says:

"Acacian, a term derived from [the Greek] akakia "innocence," and signifying a Mason, who, by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, is free from sin."

FREEMASONRY A RIVAL WORSHIP.

Now here is some rival institution which proposes to do the very thing for the souls of men—"free them from sin," which the Bible claims can alone be done by Jesus Christ. Is it not, therefore, a rival? Jesus says, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." Now is there any other way to the Father and to heaven? Mackey's Masonic Ritualist says, page 131: "Thus the lecture in the third degree closes with the cheering promise of a blessed immortality beyond the grave." Jesus says, "He that climeth up any other way the same is a thief and a robber." Sickels's Monitor, published by the Masonic Publishing Company, 432 Broome St., New York, says on page 97: "We now find man complete in morality and intelligence with the STAY OF RELIGION added, to insure him of the protection of Deity and to guard him from ever going astray." (Once in Masonic grace always in grace.) He proceeds, "These three degrees thus form a perfect and harmonious whole; nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man requires." Here you have attainments beyond which it is not possible or needful to pass, if the claims of secret societies are true. A thousand passages might be quoted from genuine secret society works to prove true the assertion that I make, that these secret societies, especially Freemasonry, professes to save men's souls without any Jesus Christ. Now you may search through these rituals, guides, hand-books and manuals of Freemasonry, but nowhere will you find the name of Jesus Christ, the world's Redeemer, in any prayer up to Blue Lodge Masonry. In the Scottish rite, neither up to the Royal Arch nor to the highest degrees, is there a prayer or passage of Scripture quoted which mentions the name of that Lord Jesus Christ on whom our hopes of heaven depend.

A casual observer would look through one of these Masonic manuals or guides and say, "It must be a good thing, there are so many passages and long quotations from the Bible." But go back and hunt there for a passage containing the name of Jesus. Either passages are quoted not containing that name, or if such are quoted they are printed with the name of Christ omitted. If a Freemason is here, who has a Masonic Monitor, and will bring it to me, I will show him in it passage after passage of Scripture which in the Bible contains the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in the Masonic monitor, guide, manual or hand-book is printed, pretending to be Bible, with the name of his Saviour left out. Now when you cut the name of my Saviour out of my Bible you may have the rest of it.

MASONIC ARROGANCE.

Masonic works state that Freemasonry is a region. See quotations already made and also observe its arrogance. It pretends to save its devotees. It has its temples, its altars, its prayers, its censers, its incense, its officiating priests, and claims to send its dying members to the grand lodge above, with Christ rejected. It climbs up some other way without a "By your leave, sir," to the King Eternal on the throne, and Christ says, such are "thieves and robbers." He also says, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." Christ is the door of the sheep and says, "Whosoever entereth by me shall go in and out and find pasture." Men are fond of finding false systems. But Paul said, "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid—Jesus Christ, the Righteous.

The secret pretender who offers salvation without Christ hath an arrogance like that Indian chief in British America who stalks out of his hovel every morning, bids the sun "hey-dey" and points out to him the course he may take that day in the heavens; or like that king in Calmuc Tartary, whose trumpeters, after he has dined, sound before his palace gate their trumpets to give notice to all the kings of the earth that the Great Cham has finished his dinner, and all the rest of the potentates and emperors of the earth are at liberty now to go to dinner.

ITS INNOCENT PRETENSE IS ITS DANGER.

Does it really give any man a standing to belong to a Christian church and at the same time hold a membership in such an institution as a secret lodge which claims to save men's souls and yet rejects from its worship, by its standard rules, the mention of the world's Redeemer, Jesus Christ? Can a beggar justly and safely reject a righteous king's request and remain secure? Can a hungry man obstinately and safely refuse his necessary food? Can a traveler walk off the abyss of the Merced at the Yosemite valley and fall three-quarters of a mile and hope to escape unhurt? Then a man can not belong to a Christian church and to a Christ-rejecting institution and hope to be saved. Does not such a religion stand out as a sham and a fraud? They may picture King Solomon in goose-yoke and paper horse-collar, may hang an Irish linen apron on his front, they may crown his head with cocked hat and ostrich plumes, put a soda fountain behind his door and a beer cellar under his palace, but that will not make it harmless to make an idol altar in the Temple of God in the holy city Jerusalem. It may look very harmless to have a secret society in the church, as it did an idol altar in the temple. But have you in mind, that at the most harmless and innocent moments of sin, there is the most danger? Mr. Spurgeon says, if the devil should appear at his door with hoofs and horns and pitchfork, he would get pitched from the balcony if he (Spurgeon) could do it. But the devil knows better than to make such an appearance. So he appears, perhaps, with one kid-glove removed, his neck-scarf laid across his arm, his silk hat in his right hand, and wearing all the demeanor of a gentleman I would be inclined to invite him right in.

You will remember that Troy in the Pelopenessus was for ten years besieged by the fleets and forces of the Hellenes. Worn and wearied by long continued application, they seemed heartily to wish that they had not begun the siege. Many bold dashes, made sometimes by Ulysses, sometimes by Achilles, again by the great Agamemnon himself, or finally was every Trojan made to tremble when Ajax drew the sword. But all was to no purpose. A happy thought finally struck the council of war and they sent for Philoctates. He killed Paris, the Trojan leader, and Æneas, another leader, made his escape. Minerva, the goddess, inspired Epeus to construct a huge wooden horse and place him on wheels, a high toy. This was done and a hundred of the bravest soldiers were quartered within him. Then the siege was raised, the ships reladen, the tents and barracks on the shore were burned by the departing army, and they sailed away to Tenedos. They acted as though they had given up the whole effort. But, Christian friend, remember your enemy is most dangerous just when he seems to be most harmless. The Trojans broke down their walls and drew the great toy, the wooden horse, within the city. A debate arose as to what to do with the captured trophy. Some said, burn it; others said, let us throw it down from the rocks of the precipice. Others urged, let us consecrate it to Minerva. This they did, and the festivities were opened. Sinon, upon a forged tale, was admitted as a fugitive Hellenist. He raised torches; the ships returned from Tenedos, and the shore again soon swarmed with advancing soldiers. The hundred men within heard the shouts of their fellows and came forth to keep the way open, and Troy fell amid the emblazonry of its glory, and at the hour of its triumph. So let the church and the soldiers of the cross beware, lest in the hour of their greatest fancied security, they may be secreting within her walls the secret conclave which shall swarm with belligerents and keep the way open for the entry of the world without. We must keep the church pure, her hands clean and her raiment white. Then shoulder to shoulder, hand to hand, and foot to foot, with swords drawn and shields lapped, we will as God's faithful army press onward in the battle, till from tower and battlement and dome shall the shouts of the sons of heaven proclaim the victory won.

REFORM NEWS.

THE SINGING MISSIONARY IN THE SOUTH.

New Orleans, La., Mar. 13, 1888.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Mr. George W. Clark is a wonderful man, both physically and psychically. Having reached the age of 75 years, his hand does not tremble yet and his knees do not shake. There he stands, with the elasticity of the youth, speaking with eloquent gesticulation and with the dignity, mildness and experience of age. In praising the heavenly gift of water, so pure and fresh and clear as heaven itself, he holds up a tumbler filled to the rim and not a single drop of this restless and fugitive element flies from the cup he holds. True, as he stands by cold water, so stands cold water by him. He may appreciate this gift of God, but water on its side does also appreciate this friend's song and speech, not by stimulating him a few moments only, as alcohol would do, but by giving him strength, health and power.

There he stands—this man, clean and free from the poison of nicotine and alcohol, and speaks and sings two hours and more in a voice that every one in the audience can hear, and in a way that you never get tired of listening to; and having done he goes to another place and sometimes to a third on the same day and does the same.

Mr. Clark lectured twice in my congregation, the First German M. E. church in New Orleans. His subject was "Liquor and Tobacco." In his first lecture he showed by means of scientific charts the effect of liquor and tobacco on the stomach, the heart, the liver, the kidneys, the eyes, the blood and the whole nervous system. He, moreover, illustrated his subject by facts taken from daily life showing how such and such a person suffered and died an early death by the terrible influence of alcohol and nicotine. These facts speak for themselves; but everybody knows they do not speak loud enough, for they are constantly suppressed by the tobacco and liquor dealers and by their customers, and therefore they need somebody who speaks them out, cries them out and sings them out to the world. Mr. Clark is the man called from God to do this work. In his second lecture Mr. Clark showed the influence of liquor and tobacco on the social and moral life. He gave about a dozen instances, which were each of them facts of history, showing the terrible influence of that evil on the whole human life.

I am convinced that these lectures made a deep and wholesome impression upon our young folks and I know that even some of our older brethren were very much profited by what they heard. One young man gave up smoking entirely. Another saved thirty-five cents in the week after the first lecture, and another is giving it up by degrees. My hope and desire was that after the second lecture old and young should have been willing to do the will of God and to leave alcohol and tobacco alone, no matter in what form or shape these poisons may present themselves.

I am much indebted to Mr. Stoddard for having recommended Mr. Clark to me, and if this valiant champion of temperance should need any recommendation for my German brethren in Texas, where he intends to go, I should be very much pleased to do it by these lines. But methinks there is no need of that. Only look in the face of this venerable gentleman; he speaks for himself.

God bless you, dear brother Clark, and give you many more years to live and to work for the benefit of your fellow men and for the glory of our blessed Saviour.

BRO. CLARK REPORTS FOR HIMSELF.

New Orleans, La., Mar. 8, 1888.

I am speaking and singing every day and night, sometimes twice a day. There were fine audiences at Leland University yesterday, and last night at the St. Mark's Baptist. I have spoken at the Freedman's Baptist conference, and to-night am to be at Shiloh Baptist church. Saturday, Sunday and Monday I go to New Iberia; and next week into Texas for a series of meetings.

I miss some whom I hoped to meet, but shall never see the dear face again until we greet each other on the fair banks of Deliverance. Dear brother Woodsmall, he ceased from his labors suddenly last week at the LeMoyne Institute at Memphis. He was one of the most indefatigable "laborers," indeed, that I ever knew,—sincere, earnest, devoted, ceaseless,—we cannot say "tireless," for he was tired all the time, but could not take time to rest. One lung gone, the other almost gone, he coughed and struggled for breath, and yet worked away with the harness on until he dropped in the furrow. Our labors together in the Southwestern States last winter were severely trying, yet feeble as he was he bore the ordeal bravely and uncomplainingly for Christ's sake, and the poor colored people. He has done a great work for them. I know of no one who can fill his measure on their behalf. He wrote me a short time before his death to come South and join him again this winter, still determined to work on. But the Master has "called him up higher."

GEO. W. CLARK.

THE TIDE STILL RISING IN NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, La.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Although the majority of the Baptist ministers in this State are anti-secretists, there seem to be a few that yet love darkness rather than light. The Odd-fellows had a thanksgiving sermon preached at the Old Baptist church of this city Sabbath evening, Mar. 4th, after sacrament. Although the pastor of this church, Rev. J. L. Burl, it is said has renounced the lodge, yet he tried, so I am told, to prove in his sermon that Odd-fellowship is founded on the Bible, and there is no harm in secrecy. Satan always tries to pervert the mind and deceive the thoughtless ones by the mock use of the Scriptures, and turning the truth of God into a lie.

The secretists are boasting of this as a triumph over us Anti-masons. Satan always makes a loud noise and boasts of victory, especially when he knows that his strongholds are gradually giving way. The secretists know very well they are losing their foothold, so they must make a loud noise to be heard.

I attended the Freedman's Baptist Association Mar. 6th and spoke to many of the ministers and distributed many tracts and Cynosures. One pastor, Rev. J. Miller, of Jeanerette, La., besought me to give him a Masonic book. It would be of great help to him in opposing secretism. He subscribed for the Cynosure and I gave him a book. Several sisters who were present belong to secret societies, but promised to read the tracts and give secretism a careful study.

The following has been carefully prepared to hand to Rev. A. S. Jackson:

The undersigned, believing that secret societies are injuring the church and cause of Christ, by separating brethren and encouraging practices and teaching doctrines not authorized by the Scriptures, desire to unite ourselves in an undenominational, non-partisan Christian organization for mutual council, encouragement and assistance in opposing and exposing the secret lodge system. We learn with satisfaction that Rev. A. S. Jackson, Rev. J. F. Marshall, Rev. B. Boezinger, and Rev. H. C. Green were appointed at the late meeting of the National Christian Association a committee to call a meeting and submit a plan for organization. We respectfully request said committee to call said meeting at as early a day as is in their judgment practicable. Signed:

Rev. Guy Beck, pastor First Free Mission Baptist church, seventh district.

Rev. George Butler, pastor Shiloh Baptist church, Gouldsborough.

Rev. J. T. Granderson, pastor Pilgrim Baptist church, Grand Prairie, La.

Rev. J. W. Womack, pastor Mount Moriah Baptist church, New Orleans.

Rev. Wm. W. Davis, pastor St. Mark's Fourth Baptist church.

Rev. C. H. Claiborne, pastor Spain St. Congregational church.

Rev. I. H. Hall, pastor Morris Brown A. M. E. church.

Rev. Martin L. Berger, D. D., pastor Straight University Congregational church.

Rev. H. C. Green, pastor Shiloh Baptist church, first district, N. C.

Rev. A. J. White, 453½ Jackson St.

Rev. John G. Nelson, 159 Clio St., pastor Scandinavian church.

Rev. W. P. Forest, pastor St. James M. E. church, St. Charles parish.

Rev. Wm. Hamilton, pastor Baptist church, St. Sophia, La.

Rev. H. P. Kelly, Algiers, La., pastor 4th St. Baptist church.

Rev. C. Pierson, pastor Baptist church, English Turn, La.

Rev. Bazile Dorsey, pastor St. John Baptist church, Dorseyville, La.

Rev. J. Miller, pastor Baptist church, Jeanerette, La.

I preached Sabbath evening at the colored Presbyterian church, Rev. L. W. Oldfield, pastor. Bro. Clark lectured on temperance in St. Mark's Fourth Baptist church Wednesday evening. The audience was fair and attention good, although the rumites, beerites, tobaccoites, etc., were largely represented. Bro. Clark and I attended the Freedman's Baptist Association on the 8th. There were about 250 persons present. Bro. Clark sang and lectured on temperance and secret societies for an hour. He was often interrupted while speaking with "Yes, yes!" "True, brother!" "That's a fact!" etc. I distributed about fifty Cynosures and a lot of tracts and took one subscriber.

Bro. Clark sung and lectured last night at Shiloh Baptist church. The house was well packed and the lecture well received. Bro. Clark leaves tomorrow for New Iberia. His songs and lectures will long be remembered here by our people. They will surely be as bread cast upon the water. May God bless him and crown his labors with abnndant success.

READY FOR SPRING WORK IN IOWA.

BRO. HAWLEY MUD-BOUND—AN INCIDENT OF ABOLITION DAYS—ODD-FELLOW SLAVE-CATCHING.

March 12, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE.—From Cuba I went to the Castle school house, Rev. Mr. Acheson accompanying me, and gave a lecture there. The following Sabbath was a rainy day. I attended the Covenanter church, Rev. Thompson, pastor, and after the sermon gave a short address on the relation of the secret orders to the church. On Monday I went to the place where I had lectured last, and there and in the adjoining neighborhood secured seven new subscribers to the Cynosure.

Owing to the fact that I was threatened with a blockade of mud, and that nearly three months had passed since I was at home to visit my family, I decided not to continue my labors in Monroe county longer at present, and turned eastward to Salem in Henry county, calling upon those staunch friends of reform, Isaac Gibson and Zackariah Foss. From Salem I went to Chestnut Hill, and preached in the Friends church Sabbath morning, and at a mission point in the evening. On Monday night I lectured in the Friends church of Chestnut Hill.

From there I was conveyed to Denmark, in Lee county, by Rev. Mr. Hull. But mud and rain seemed to stand in the way of successful work, and so with the aid of Bro. Hull I reached Burlington where I took the train for Wheaton, Ill., where I am enjoying a delightful reunion with the loved ones of my home circle.

Last Sabbath I preached twice for Dr. Stratton of

CORRESPONDENCE.

TEXAS SECRETISTS ANGRY AND THREATENING.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, March 9, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I came here shortly after returning from New Orleans. I never knew before the great power secrecy had on its subjects. While here Rev. S. Kurlock, the founder of the S. S. of C. (Seven Stars of Consolidation) and who gives his whole time to organizing lodges, came to the city. He was to lecture at the Methodist church on "The Stumbling-blocks of the Negro."

I went to hear him. He spoke of all the bad acts of his race and said they were worse now than before the war; adding that what was needed was societies. He said Masonry had preserved the Bible at one time. After his long talk he offered the S. S. of C. as a remover of the "stumbling-blocks." He never referred to the "blood of Christ," which alone cleanses from all sin.

In his remarks he said they intended to make it warm for all who opposed secret societies, and a general response came from leading members of the different churches. This was directly to me, as I had been distributing tracts.

Next day I met Rev. A. Grant, the pastor of the same church, who is one of our leading men, and an aspirant for the bishopriek at the General Conference of the A. M. E. church. He began a tirade on me. After I defined my position he said he would not read the paper and tracts published by the N. C. A. He added that he had always had a high opinion of me, but now he could not even respect me as a brother. I told him I would discuss the matter with him on Bible grounds, to which he replied he did not want to see me hung and therefore would not discuss it with me.

Here under the shadow of the Alamo where Crockett fell, where Bishop Turner was mobbed by a drunken crowd, I was threatened by a minister because I offered to assert my convictions. This same prominent minister said he had more faith in Col. Ingersoll than half the preachers.

I distributed what papers I could, and found several friends who are in sympathy with our work, but the people are so tied up in these lodges that they are afraid to speak against any of their ugly acts, as the following will show:

An Odd-fellow killed a man recently and the lodge is credited with robbing the law of its man. The secretary of one of the lodges at their Sunday meeting, cursed ministers, Christians and sinners as if they were dogs, because they asked an inspection of his books, and yet they go on in F. L. and T. On the 4th inst. they turned out, rented a hall, called them a pastor and held services as any other congregation.

Many with whom I talked are opposed to the lodge, but as I myself was once, they know not how to shake it off. Rev. A. A. Rivers of this place has never joined the lodge, and is against it, but not out-spoken. The two preachers with closed eyes and hearts refused to hear what God says against the lodge, and pronounced upon me a curse similar to that of Rome on Dr. McGlynn. Rev. Toliver is at work for the cause and God is giving him power with men.

I go to-day to attend our Foreign Mission Board meeting at his church, and hope to do something for our cause. The spirit worked up and exhibited by these ministers caused my wife and friends to fear some of the lodge folk would attempt to do me some bodily harm. The tracts were well read. Knots of men could be seen for several days on the streets, one reading to the others. I am sure good was done. I was pastor here some years ago, and many whom I baptized turned from me when they knew I had left the lodge.

Since our meeting at New Orleans I was told that the names of all who are in sympathy with us, are sent to the brotherhood (?), so says Bro. Grant. This is used to intimidate. When I asked my brothers for a "Thus saith the Lord" for their assertions, they said theirs was a matter of history. God will help the right. Pray for us. The Convention greatly strengthened me for the war. I truly hope Bro. Hinman will again visit Texas. I am yours in Jesus,

L. G. JORDAN.

THE FIRE SPREADS FROM NEW ORLEANS.

TWO LETTERS FROM MORGAN CITY, LA.

I am a reader of your paper and a worker in the reform army. I was converted from the Masonic lodge four years ago through the instructions of your most valuable paper. I have had great opposition from the lodgites; but never yield an inch. I live eighty miles from New Orleans in a little country town of about five hundred inhabitants, and in this small number of inhabitants we have thirteen different lodges including Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, and hosts of others. I belong to a Baptist church that declares against all secret societies. The pastor of my church attended the New Orleans Convention held by the N. C. A. He was delighted with its proceedings, especially with Bro. Countee's statements.

I would thank you very kindly for a few free tracts. I think I can use them to some advantage to the reform cause. The society people are put to their wits' end, studying how to offset the influence of the convention, because a goodly number are leaving the lodges. Among this number is to be found Rev. M. C. B. Mason, whom I assisted to initiate.

ALEX. OLIVER.

A DANIEL'S BAND.

I have been reading your valuable paper, the Cynosure, through the kindness of dear Brother A. Oliver, Jr., and through its God-sent columns I have been convinced that no man, woman or child can be a consistent Christian and be a member of secret societies. I can say from personal knowledge that they are detrimental to the cause of Christ. I was a member of the Odd-fellows for five years, but thanks to the Lord I have been delivered from the jaws of this monster. The order prevails in this community.

Though I am unable to compete with those who defend the cause of the lodge because I am unlearned (though I read and write), but thanks be to God I have his promise. "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not." I have no money to give to help the reform cause on, but you have my prayers.

I wanted to attend the convention at New Orleans, but was unable. My pastor attended and is enthused over the meeting. He is determined to be numbered with the reformers. You can judge how it is at this place with Bro. Oliver and myself being the only two young men in town who have declared against the secret societies; but after reading of the glorious work of the reformer brethren elsewhere, we cry out with the apostle Paul, "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." We take courage and go forward.

May the blessings of God crown the reform work with abundance of success. My earnest prayer to God is that all dark things that tend to cramp the Gospel, be brought to light and exposed as was the abduction of Captain Morgan.

EDWARD D. SIMMS.

LITTLE RIVER, Rice Co., Kans.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I have distributed every tract sent me, and have three more places to supply; the people have turned out en masse to hear the anti-christian character of secret societies discussed, and I'm only fairly started now. I announce two weeks in advance that I shall speak on this subject, and when the people turn out I distribute the tracts. The result is that the people are getting their eyes opened on the subject and are anxious for tracts.

Money is the scarcest article on these wind-swept plains. I have five large congregations and am among the people all the time, and to relate the straits that some of our people are in would seem an exaggeration. Think of taking three persons to keep up the only wretched fire in a houseful of children! One goes out and cuts corn-stalks out of the field; another hauls them in and cuts them in stove lengths, and a third stuffs the cook-stove, which is barely sufficient to warm the house. Coal is worth from $6.50 to $7.50 per ton, and I have bought just as good in Wheaton, Ill., for $3.50 per ton. Cattle and horses in a great many places have succumbed to starvation and cold. One thing yet remains to these poor people, and that is hope.

Small-pox is raging in all the towns around us, and there is a case in this town not more than one hundred and fifty yards from our home where I now write. Each of these towns have declared a quarantine against the rest. Business is flat, because communication is cut off from surrounding towns.

My regards to all friends, and tell them "I know in whom I have believed." One of these days this anti-lodge reform will open a crack in mother earth for its enemies, worse and wider than the one which opened in the days of Korah, Dathan and Abiram. And if these things die a natural death, "then the Lord hath not spoken by me." Let the wedge enter. Yours, thumping on the wedge,

G. T. DISSETTE.

FROM BISHOP KEPHART'S MASONIC NEIGHBORS.

Is it true that Bishop E. B. Kephart has changed his views in regard to Freemasonry and kindred orders? I am led to make this inquiry by a conversation recently had with a near neighbor of his. A gentleman and his wife and daughter occupied a birth near Mrs. Stoddard and myself on our return trip from New Orleans. I learned that they were from Toledo, Iowa, and much interested in the college there; that they knew several people with whom I had an acquaintance, and that they distinctly recollected the meetings in their court house, when several years ago Mr. Ronayne opened a lodge and publicly worked the first and third degrees of Masonry. The gentleman said Bishop Kephart's house was very near to his, and that their relations were intimate. When I spoke of the Bishop's record on the anti-secrecy line, and mentioned his speech in Farwell Hall, and that he had encouraged the discussion at Western, Iowa, and participated in several conventions, the man expressed great surprise. He had never heard any expression from the Bishop averse to the lodge; said he participated in some public meeting of the orders addressed by a distinguished M. E. minister at their town; and that he did not believe the Bishop was now opposed to the Masons.

I thought it strange that a near neighbor and intimate friend who took a deep interest in the college should be in such utter ignorance of the Bishop's record and views on so important and distinctive a feature of the U. B. faith, unless the Bishop had "put his light under a bushel," or "snuffed it out" altogether.

If the light that is in the Bishop be darkness, so that his "intimate friend" stumbles into grievous error, how is it with Bro. M. S. Drury and the college? Are they blind leaders of the blind in this great contest between Christ and his bride, the church, and Satan and his bride, the Christless lodge? Is it not a time to ask, "Who is on the Lord's side?" and for those implicated to answer when such suspicions are avowed?

J. P. STODDARD.

PITH AND POINT.

BRO. RAYNOR TO BEGIN WORK IN PENNSYLVANIA.

I trust, also, a good Providence will permit me to do some lecture work in this part of our State; I purpose to expose secret orders in our county seat. I have a list of 150 names of ministers, all opposed to the lodge, and over fifty of them seceders from Masonry. I would endeavor to have every known friend of the cause send a list of all other friends so that we may know our forces. Please send me tracts for distribution, if you can spare such as you advertise recently.—JAS. W. RAYNOR.

HOW THEY SWARM.

Secret societies are making some progress in our village. We have had the G. A. R. running for some years. Now the Sons of Veterans are trying to attract the attention of the public. A lodge of Good Templars was organized this winter after repeated failures. The Grand Worthy Chief Templar of the State favored us with the presence of his exalted person, delivered a series of lectures, ending with the organization of a lodge. The lodge I think is a small one and keeps very quiet. There is a Grange, too, but I don't know whether it is dead or alive. The lodge of Knights of Honor is dead.—W. W. T., Huntsville, Ohio.

THE CONVENTION REPORT IN GERMAN.

The success at the National Convention held in New Orleans as reported in the last number of your esteemed paper is quite encouraging. I sincerely believe that the Cynosure is doing a good and grand work for the good cause. By next mail I will send you a sample copy of our paper, Christlicher Bundesbote. I have thought of translating the report of the National Convention for the paper.—I. A. SOMMER.

We sincerely hope our brother editor will make this translation. There are secret lodges composed almost entirely of Germans, and there should be more printed in the German language against them.

ONE WITH GOD A MAJORITY.

Secrecy holds the ground here. The churches and papers are mouth-locked, and as we have no lectures, the work goes hard. I am comparatively alone here, but God is with me. I am seventy-three years old, but I hope to live to see the tide turned on secrecy as I have seen it on slavery.—L. B. LATHROP, Hollister, Cal.

FROM THE KNOXVILLE CONVENTION SECRETARY.

I am rejoiced to hear of the success of the New Orleans Convention, and only sorry that I was not present to enjoy it; yet, so it is, no soldier can be present at every "famous victory." The reports of the Convention cause many to look as though they had heard the knell of their final doom. God bless you and your labors and prosper the Cynosure and N. C. A.—(Rev.) LEWIS JOHNSTON.

FIFTEEN YEARS AND YET GROWS BETTER.

Inclosed please find three dollars for the Ministers' Fund for the South. Let those who sit in darkness, of every clime, have the light! I have read the Cynosure for over fifteen years, and it grows more interesting all the time; the two articles on the second page of February 23 are worth the subscription, and so true. I take a good paper for every day in the week (except Sunday), and I would rather give up any of them, or all of them, than the Cynosure. When I get hold of it these winter evenings, I can neither stop to eat or sleep until I have gone through it. May God bless and prosper the cause of righteousness, as I know he will.—S. SIMPSON, Garfield, Washington Territory.

A MASSACHUSETTS VETERAN.

DEAR BRO.—Enclosed are ten dollars for the Cynosure to be sent to the Southern ministers. The instant our faithful worker, Robert Mansfield, told me of the Cynosure I paid him for it. A few copies I think had been printed. There will be some copies paid for for some one to read after my work is done.—INCREASE LEADBETTER.

TRACT WORK IN CALIFORNIA.

I have distributed over 2,000 of your tracts in Iowa, and now I have the names of the different ministers that I wish to send to and some business men. Oh, how I wish I had ten thousand pages! I could make them do good. I could tell you of many incidents of the tracts I have already distributed. One highly educated young man in a good office said to me after reading the tract about Wm. H. Seward and our government, "Oh, I am so glad I read it, for I had intended to join the Masons; but now I never can."—S. L. W., Santa Maria, Cal.

A GOOD KANSAS TOWN.

We are doing all we can for the good cause you advocate in your paper. The Knights of Pythias organized here last week, and we are getting up a club for the exposition book, which will accompany this letter. This is the only secret order we have here in our town, and we want to overpower it. I am distributing all the papers I can, and we want a lot of tracts to distribute. Also we want a lot of anti-secret men to settle here, both farmers and business men. We have a fine town and a fine county. Any persons wishing to change their location please address me at Macksville, Stafford county, Kansas, and I will give all the information desired.—M. K. BECKTELL.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON I.—April 1.—The Marriage Feast.—Matt. 22: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb.—Rev. 19: 9.]

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

[From Words and Weapons.]

In our last lesson we saw the action of the Jewish nation in rejecting Jesus as their Messiah and King. In the parable before us to-day we see the grace of God, notwithstanding, making a marriage feast, bidding to it these same Jews, and making them the preferred guests. A carful reading of the Acts of the Apostles will give us these details in the actual events which followed the resurrection of our Lord.

I. THE MARRIAGE FEAST.—The kingdom of heaven is that reign of grace, so intimately connected with the earth, so vitally necessary to man, whose operations cover both heaven and earth and extend from time into eternity. The King who made this feast is, of course, God the Father; he in whose honor it was given, Christ the Son; and the servants sent forth to bid the guests, the Apostles. In substance and reality the marriage feast is the marriage supper of the Lamb (Rev. 19: 9), and the bride and the worthy guests are identical.

II. TO THE JEW FIRST.—The apostles, during our Lord's ministry, were not to go in the way of the Gentiles nor into any city of the Samaritans, and after the resurrection they were to begin at Jerusalem. It was not till after the final rejection of the Gospel by the Jews at the stoning of Stephen that it was preached to the Gentiles. Even after Paul was sent to carry the Gospel to the great outside world, he always first preached to the dispersed Jews. In the third verse we note a reference to the long and continuous work of the prophets. Now that the feast was actually prepared, these preferred guests are notified that the time is at hand; but that first invitation under the Gospel dispensation was rejected. "Again he sent forth other servants," with special, urgent message; and this second invitation is a display of patient grace on the one hand and authoratative command on the other. A king's invitation is both in the nature of a distinguished favor and an imperative command. God invites us to accept his grace, but also commands us, and all men everywhere, to repent. Refusal in the light of this double mandate of grace and authority is ungrateful and contumacious. "And they would not." This expression indicates simply the deliberate action of the will in rejecting Christ. In John 5: 40, and Matt. 23: 37, we find a commentary upon this clause of the parable. "But they made light of it." Think of making light of that grace of God which has occupied his eternal purpose, which was consummated in the appalling sacrifice of Christ on Calvary, which has occupied the Father, Son and Holy Ghost from all eternity, and upon the acceptance or rejection of which depends our eternal destiny! The motive for rejecting the invitation (verse 5). God offered to them the honor and everlasting blessedness of participating in the marriage supper of the Lamb, but they preferred the things of earth to the things of heaven. The secret of all sin is the substitution of the will and way of the intelligent moral creature for the will and way of God; the sign of conversion is the reversal of all this, and finds expression in the question, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" It is worthy of remark that the two instances in the parable may represent those who have already amassed a fortune—the one with the farm; and those who are engaged in getting a fortune—the one who went to his merchandise. And the remnant took his servants and entreated them spitefully and slew them. This represents the attitude and action of the baser sort. The spirit that led men to crucify the Lord of Glory will not hesitate to despitefully entreat his servants. The spirit is the same whether it manifest itself in contemptuous reviling or open violence.

III. AND ALSO TO THE GENTILES. The Acts of the Apostles closes the history of the offer of salvation to the Jews as such; henceforth they have no distinct or preferred privileges under the Gospel. (See also Acts 28: 23-31.) The universal invitation. The highways indicate the great world thoroughfares, the broad streams of population, down which the Gospel was sent during the early ages and down which it has been going ever since. Wherever people are, there the grace of God in Christ is freely proclaimed. The "good and bad" who were gathered to the feast does not refer alone to moral distinction, but to those outward distinctions observable among men. The man without the wedding garment. It was the custom of the host to provide every one of his guests with a wedding garment; to refuse it was to insult the host and unfit the person for participation in the ceremonies. The wedding garment provided for sinners is the "righteousness of saints" (Rev. 19: 3-9). We easily understand this to signify the work of the Holy Ghost in justification and regeneration. Some men repudiate this and seek to enter "in their own clothes," but they will be awakened from their delusion when He comes who judges the secrets of men's hearts. The phrase, "not having on a wedding garment," carries with it a charge of having rejected it and presumptuously entered without it. "Except we be born again" we cannot enter in. We may come among believers on earth, but in heaven every man will be revealed, of what sort he is—whether of grace or nature. The presumptuous professor cast out. At the challenge of the king he was speechless. So will all be who presumptuously set aside the plain teachings and requirements of the Gospel concerning repentance, conversion, and regeneration, and essay to enter heaven without the imputed and imparted righteousness of Jesus Christ. Whatever else the term "outer darkness" may mean, we know that it is separation from God, Christ, and the saints. It is that "without" in the moral universe spoken of in Rev. 22: 15.

We are taught by this parable that it is all one whether we reject Christ out and out as the Jews did, or pretend to accept him while refusing his work of grace for us on the cross. A formal professor of religion is no better off than an open unbeliever.

OBITUARY.

Linus Clark died at his home in Green Oak, Michigan, Jan. 18, 1888, aged nearly 75 years.

He came to Michigan from the State of New York in 1833 and settled on the farm where he died. He soon openly professed faith in Christ and was one of the founders of the Free Will Baptist church near his home, of which he remained a member and liberal supporter until his death. He identified himself with the reforms of the day. Was an out-spoken anti-slavery man, being frequently called a "BlackAbolitionist." He early joined the ranks of the anti secretists, and by his fearless denunciation of all secret societies, especially Masonry, called upon himself the dislike and opposition of many of that fraternity. Whatever he thought to be wrong he was decided in opposing. He has been a subscriber of the Cynosure from nearly if not quite the first issue, and loved it; choosing it before other papers to be read to him during the first of his illness, as long as he felt able to listen to reading. He sent for and voted the ticket of the American platform, standing alone that year in his town. The next year he was encouraged by a few votes from others. He was an earnest supporter of the temperance cause. Truly the reform movement has lost a warm supporter. C.

IN BRIEF.

Samuel Spencer, who has been made president of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad at a salary of $25,000 a year, was a rodman earning a scant salary only a few years ago. He is not yet forty years old.

When a settler in the Northwest Territory wants to go back to Ontario to be married, the Canadian Pacific railroad sells him a matrimonial ticket at the usual rate, and on presenting the return coupon and a marriage certificate he is entitled to free transportation for his bride.

The new Maine law forbidding children less than twelve years of age to work in the mills, and requiring that all between the ages of twelve and fifteen shall have at least sixteen weeks' schooling each year, has increased the attendance at the schools remarkably, as the mill superintendents find when they take the ages of operatives.

There were lynched during the year 1887 in the United States no fewer than 123 persons. Of the various States and Territories Texas leads the list, with fifteen lynchings, and Mississippi is entitled to second place with fourteen to her credit. All the victims were males, eighty of them being Negroes.

Miss H. Frances Parmalee, formerly teacher of the girls' school, Kioto, Japan, under care of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, has prepared an appeal to Japanese women who are adopting European dress, warning them against those things in connection with it which are detrimental. This has been signed by Mrs. Garfield, Mrs. Cleveland, Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, Miss Smith, Principal of Wells College; Dean Bodley, of Philadelphia Medical College, Miss Blanchard, of Mt. Holyoke Seminary; Ramabai, Miss Willard and Miss West, and sent to Japan for publication in newspapers there.

A poor washerwoman in St. Joseph, Mo., was seriously injured by stepping upon a charged wire belonging to the Electric Light Company, which the said company carelessly allowed upon the ground. The injured woman obtained judgment in the United States Court for $4,999 (it ought to have been $5,000), but the wealthy corporation came up with a blubbering motion for a new trial, which the judge promtly denied, and told the gentlemen flatly that "it was one of the most worthy cases for sustaining judgment which ever came to his notice." What a figure, for a rich syndicate to be driven from the judgment seat with the stinging rebuke that they were too dishonest to do justice in the plainest case!

After you get angry and stop your paper, just poke your finger in water, pull it out and look for the hole. Then you will know how sadly you are missed. A man who thinks a paper cannot survive without his support ought to go off and stay awhile. When he comes back half his friends will not know that he was gone, and the other half will not care a cent, while the world at large kept no account of his movement. You will find things you cannot endorse in every paper. Even the Bible is rather plain and hits some pretty hard licks. If you were to get mad and burn your Bible, the hundreds of presses would still go on printing it; and when you stop your paper and call the editor names, the paper will still be published, and what is more—you'll read it on the sly.—Exchange.

It is generally supposed that the Sphinx is hewn out of a large, isolated rock which overlooked the plain; but M. Maspero's researches suggest that it is a work still more stupendous. He has proved that the Sphinx occupies the center of an amphitheater, forming a kind of rocky basin, the upper rim of which is about on a level with the head of the animal. The walls of this amphitheater, wherever visible, are cut by the hand of man. It seems probable, therefore, that in the beginning there was a uniform surface of rock in which an artificial valley had been excavated, so as to leave in the middle a block out of which the Sphinx was finally hewn. The excavations now being carried on will doubtless verify the existence of the plinth shown on the old paintings, and also furnish evidence, by the ornamentation of the plinth, of the true age of the monument. M. Maspero is inclined to assign it to a very great antiquity, possibly higher than the early dynasties—that is, than the first period of Egyptian history. As the result of last winter's work the sand round the Sphinx has already been lowered by about thirty meters.

IT IS NOT UNLAWFUL.

Congress has enacted no law to restrain a person from going about in a badly constipated condition, or with a distressing sick headache, rush of blood to the head, bad taste in the mouth, bilious complaint, or any kindred difficulty; but the laws of health and comfort will suggest to any one so afflicted, the wisdom of hastening to the nearest druggist for a 25-cent vial of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets—the most potent of remedies for all disorders of the liver, stomach and bowels. Purely vegetable, pleasant to take, and perfectly harmless.

SPIKE THEIR GUNS.

A few dollars expended in purchasing tracts and scattering them about through the community will perhaps do more to spike the guns of noisy secretists than anything else that could be suggested. Men have heard the lodges praised so often and so boldly, that they have come to believe that they are what they profess to be. It is high time that the war is carried into Africa itself. This is the work which the N. C. A. has in view, and would be glad to push forward in every quarter of the land. Who will help to do it?

Low Rates to Pacific Coast.

The new agreement between the transcontinental lines authorizes a lower rate to Pacific coast points via the Manitoba-Pacific route than is made via any other line. Frequent excursions. Accommodations first-class. For rates, maps, and other particulars, apply to C. H. Warren, General Passenger Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

This deeply interesting narative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, by the National Christian Association.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.
College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1888.

IT PAYS.

The investment which the Cynosure has asked the friends of the reform to make in circulating 1,000 copies among colored pastors in the South continues to return heavy dividends. Please turn back a few pages, and note the number of letters from the South, showing how the truth goes on conquering and overturning since the New Orleans Convention. The need of following up this important meeting is most urgent. Brethren realize this, and the report this week of donations, on page 13, brings up the sum total to $834.76. This is a good advance, over one-half the amount needed. We give the report with good cheer. Many brethren in the South are noting these figures eagerly week by week. They mean an important factor in the redemption of their churches. The New Orleans pastors are going on to secure permanent results from the Convention. The same work must be done in other cities and States. But the Cynosure must go before and prepare the way. PRAY, brethren, for this effort, and as the Lord has prospered you, give with joy.

A WORD ON THE PROHIBITION PARTY.

The article by Rev. A. H. Springstein on our first page must not be passed by unread. We must add to his plea for earnest work a few words from Elder J. L. Barlow, which comes to the office via Louisiana. He says:

"I have read with some interest of late years hints as to calling the American party again into action. I have been surprised to see no response from our numerous friends. Allow me to say that I know of nothing along this line, which would suit me better than to see our party on its feet again. I have weighed all other existing parties in the balances, and to me they are found wanting. I am practically disfranchised at present. The Prohibition party as present managed does not command my confidence, though I have been an unfaltering prohibitionist for thirty-six years or more. I could wish that our party was once more in the field, with its 'war paint' on, never to lower its colors till victory shall crown our efforts.

"A few years since, my voice had a little potency with our friends; now it might be unheeded, if heard. You, at least, know me, and it may not displease you to know that one so insignificant as myself, gives you a cheering word for the blasts you have blown, as I have hinted above."

In the long interval since the American party, as an organization, has taken any part in public affairs, our discussion of means and measures must be very much a personal matter, and this writing does not assume any other character.

The questions raised by these brethren are practical and must have careful consideration.

1. We assume that a majority of those who endorsed the American movement in 1884 wish that party to maintain its organization.

2. There will be a difference of opinion, as then, respecting the wisdom of co-operating with the Prohibition party. But as time passes we believe the wisdom of the effort begun at Pittsburgh last campaign is being vindicated. The most serious word we have to say is like the criticism Dr. J. B. Walker used to make on the Friends. "The greatest fault I find with the Quakers," said he, "is that they do not bring their principles to bear upon outsiders as they should. They are so excellent and useful that there ought to be aggressive work for their promulgation."

We have not been duly aggressive for American principles, or we should not now hear complaints that the Prohibition party ignores the lodge question. There is positive evidence that it does not. Mr. Chaffin, head of the Good Templars of Wisconsin, and the "off-ox" of the Prohibition Conference last fall, lately published a letter in several Prohibition papers attacking our position, though exposing his great ignorance of what the opponents of the lodge propose. Mills, who boasted that he was a Knight of Labor in the same Conference, will soon be ashamed of his relation; as we hope Miss Willard already regrets her advice a year ago that Prohibitionists join that order, since it is fast sinking out of public respect. We are learning more and more of the pronounced opposition to the lodge of many leading Prohibitionists. It is wisdom to stand by them and make their influence more effective. In his Providence God removed Mr. Finch from the National chairmanship. He had already become so offensive in that position that there was a revolt against his management, for he was devoured by a personal ambition. St. John doubtless learned some facts of importance in Southern California, the Prohibition end of the State, concerning the management of the Good Templar order by Finch: and a man of his honesty of purpose must have been alarmed lest the same ruinous agency be operating among Prohibitionists.

Since God has brought Prohibition to the front it is wisdom to help on that movement, unless in some quarters the lodge gains a temporary supremacy. Then we must protest. But there is too much principle in that party to endure lodge rule, and we look upon any lapse from a virtuous position as but momentary. The party has a firmer footing on our platform than four years ago, and there will be no more Pittsburgh performances.

THE COLLEGE CHURCH, WHEATON, called on Tuesday last a council of ministers and churches to consult on the advisability of renewing toward it the fellowship of the Congregational churches. This step was taken after much prayer and the earnest advice of friends in those churches. Dr. Goodwin of the First Church, Chicago, was chairman of the council, which at the very outset met a motion to dissolve by Prof. Boardman of this city, because of the limitations of the call. Most of the brethren took a more liberal view of the case and voted to continue, but finally adjourned after advising that another letter missive be sent which should cover all questions of the past struggles of the church, with a view of settling them in a Christian way, and another meeting be held in about two weeks. This advice was very acceptable to the church, as efforts have been made for ten years to have these matters reviewed in an honorable way. This council is of interest to all our readers, because the difficulties which we hope may be reviewed grew out of a Masonic attack on the College in 1877, which resulted in a division of the church. That the lodge question is in the front now is very evident; as one of the delegates remarked last week, "I am neither a Mason or an Anti-mason, but it is plain enough that the lodge is at the bottom of this business." We urgently ask all our readers to remember the church and the council in prayer to our God, against whose truth men can do nothing.

THE LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS.—The decisions of Judge Gresham of Chicago and of Judge Dundy in Omaha have given little hope to the striking engineers of the Burlington road. They insist that law must be enforced. Men can leave their work if they choose, but conspiracies and combinations to interfere with legitimate business they have no right to form. Freight engineers on the Union Pacific at Council Bluffs left work Wednesday on pretense of sickness. They returned next day. The engineers and firemen on the vast system of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company went out on a strike at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon. The strike created intense excitement and surprise in Kansas City, but the strike was ordered by some one in authority. The men professed ignorance of the issuing of any such orders and said they had quit because they were "tired." P. M. Arthur, chief of the engineer's order, professed also profound ignorance, nor could any one find out the slightest reason for the strike. In fact the position of the men was so absurd and their action so infamously unjust, that Arthur sent word Sunday afternoon to the men to go back. This strike has had the good effect to still further enlighten the public on the danger of such secret, irresponsible and despotic organizations as the lodge provides for workingmen as a constant menace to public welfare. There will be no safety or assurance on our lines of railway travel until they are abolished; and the good sense of the men should do this before the people rise upon them in anger.

A REVOLUTION WE CAN ENDORSE.—The Christian Weekly, of Mobile, Alabama, in an enumeration of the difficulties under which the colored churches labor, puts the lodge question in for one. The writer only looks, however, upon their capacity to swindle their constituents: He says:

"Too much money has left the South and flowed into the pockets of colored men in the North and West. Our wives, daughters, sisters and mothers have toiled over the washtub, burned over the ironing table and cook stove to keep in ease and luxury the wives and daughters of Northern bishops and big Northern B. Y. High Cockalorums of societies until we are tired of it. And 'Aunt Hagar's children' have got 'curious' and won't drive any more 'worth a cent.' The Knights of Wise Men swindle scooped thousands out of our people, and they justly owe one thousand dollars to a widow of one of our foremost men and will not pay her a cent. These are some of the causes—and their name is legion—which led to the revolt of these leading churches. The people have been so fleeced by strangers and foreigners, and the Northern negro has put on so many swell airs and so contemptuously treated some of our best people while traveling in the North, after getting our money, until we have become indignant, and treating lightly the request and wishes of the people has raised their righteous indignation. The Northern colored people are all on the beat."

—Secretary Stoddard is announced in the daily papers as we go to press to speak in the N. C. A. building Monday evening on the New Orleans convention and its results among the colored churches.

—Rev. W. P. Ferries, pastor of the Free Methodist church on Mozart street near Armitage Ave., in the northwest part of Chicago, has arranged for an address by Secretary Stoddard in that church on Friday evening of this week.

—Bro. Hinman left Washington on Tuesday, the 13th, and proceeded directly to Atlanta, Georgia. On Thursday he addressed the students of Clarke University and Gammon Theological School, Methodist institutions. He expected to go on to Augusta and Savannah and then turn northward.

—Bro. Blachly, a student in the Chicago Congregational Seminary, made an application of a class topic to the irreligion of the lodge last Friday, and an arrangement was made to discuss next Friday the question, Should ministers preach on secret societies from the pulpit? Not a few of the students are favorably inclined to the lodge.

—Aunt Hannah Paddleford, of Monroe, N. H., who is in her ninetieth year, is spending a busy winter. Since the cold weather set in last fall she has knit nine pairs of stockings, seven pairs of mittens and one pair of logmen's leggings, besides spinning all the yarn she used. The good old lady is interested also in the N. C. A. work in the South. She lately sent a dollar for the Cynosure Southern fund.

—We have it on unquestionable authority that at a recent funeral (not in Illinois) a non-Mason minister was requested by Masons to read one of their prayers. He excused himself, and another was then asked and did read the Masonic prayer. He was, however, chagrined to be shown afterwards that it was a Christless prayer, and said that he would never again be so imposed upon. Let our friends circulate our tracts and papers and dispel the ignorance yet sadly prevailing respecting the paganism of lodgery.

—Rev. Byron Gunner left Chicago last Friday morning for his home in Louisiana by way of Wenona, where he will visit Mr. Howe, the generous patron of Howe Institute, New Iberia. His agency has been fairly successful, having, with Miss Farley, raised between $500 and $600 and secured other gifts of value to the Institute, as a piano from Mrs. Cheney, daughter of Mr. Carpenter, and a lathe and wind-mill from Rockford. Miss Farley is now in Detroit, hoping to secure the whole amount needed to fit up two dormitories.

—Dr. E. P. Goodwin, in the First Congregational church in this city, on the Sabbath, while announcing Secretary Stoddard's address of Monday evening, said, "I do not say much about the lodges, but I do not believe in them." He added that wives seldom desired their husbands to attend the secret orders, and their influence in the churches was injurious. Bro. Stoddard had spoken to him about the New Orleans Convention and its great influence for good among the colored churches, and he was very willing to make the announcement. One of the greatest hindrances to the progress of the Gospel among those churches was the prevalence of the lodges.

—A large union meeting of the several churches was held in Wheaton Sabbath evening, and was addressed by Miss Millie A. Hand, a teacher of the New West Commission among the Mormons. Miss Hand has been two years or more engaged in school work, and for several months has been raising money to build free school houses. The fund for one is raised, and that for another is well advanced. Miss Hand is one of the most captivating and instructive speakers on this question that we have. She has a peculiar faculty of making facts eloquent. The secret work of the Mormon leaders is most difficult to meet and overcome, not only in school work, but in the public measures taken by government to suppress the polygamous system. The collection amounted to $50. Churches or communities that wish to hear about Utah cannot do better than send for Miss Hand, in care of the New West Commission, 151 Washington St., Chicago.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Pres. C. H. Kiracofe of Hartsville University has been nominated for Superintendent of Public Instruction by the Prohibitionists of Indiana.

—On Sabbath morning Pres. C. A. Blanchard preached in the First Baptist church of Chicago, Rev. P. S. Henson, pastor. In the evening he spoke in the Moody church, and will continue to preach there during a temporary absence of pastor Goss. Mr. Moody is expected there next Sabbath.

—The Cynosure editor, now in New Iberia, Louisiana, writes of the possibility of a visit to Florida before returning North. On account of the debilitating effects of warm weather, he does not rapidly recover strength, but is enlarging his acquaintance and is more and more impressed with the value of the Cynosure among the colored pastors.

—A movement was begun lately in Boston to erect a memorial building in honor of Wendell Phillips. At one of the meetings where this plan was inaugurated General Butler spoke in high eulogy of Phillips, though until the war he was a political enemy. Butler said the war of the rebellion was mainly inspired by the voice and pen of the great Abolition orator.

—Rev. W. G. Waddle, pastor of the United Presbyterian church of New Athens, Ohio, understands getting at business when need be without minding line fences and square corners. Some weeks ago he announced from his pulpit that he would gladly receive new subscriptions or renewals for the Cynosure. God bless such pastors! Would there were hundreds where now there are one.

—Alexander V. Sill, an Anti-mason of the Morgan days, died at his home at St. Charles, Ill., last Thursday, at the age of 87. He was for many years postmaster and justice of the peace; and perhaps because of his official relations was quite reticent about the lodge. The Cynosure endeavored to get from him some account of his experiences, and especially his recollections of the Morgan abduction, but without success.

—Bro. D. P. Cawkins of Minnesota, who was interested in the discussion of the seventh-day Sabbath in these columns two years ago, has written a book in which he demonstrates that "the Sabbath was never made known to man, until given to Moses for Israel alone," and that "God never required mankind outside the Jewish church to keep a Sabbath or rest-day." He wishes some friend to publish the volume for him.

—Word has just come from a daughter in Ontario, Ohio, that Elder John Finney, who long lived at Mansfield, is dead. He passed on to his God and Saviour in January last. None who attended the Oberlin Convention in 1872 will forget the enthusiasm of this noble, whole-souled man for the cause. He was frequently at the Ohio meetings, and was a large contributor to the treasuries of State and National Associations.

—Rev. J. D. Gehring of Parkville, Mo., a Presbyterian brother whose contributions are well remembered in the past, has for more than a year been compelled to remit all literary efforts because of his health. He suffers continually and sometimes severely from the effect of a wound received during the war. His health being now somewhat improved he hopes to remove to a milder climate and, if possible, undertake work for prohibition.

—The Worcester Daily Spy not long since published an account of the New England Protective Union which opened a co-operative store on Front Street in that city forty years ago last January 25th. The Union fortunately secured for its business agent Mr. Samuel A. Pratt, then a young man of of 26, whose integrity, agreeable manners, and good management have carried on this enterprise with marked success and profit to the members of the Union, while every other oganization of the kind has failed, and it is the sole survivor of the New England Unions. This is such a tribute to Bro. Pratt as a business man as is seldom written, and we are happy to add that as a Christian reformer his record is equally good.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, March 16, 1888.

The National Capital has known next to nothing about the rest of the world for the past few days in consequence of the storm which visited it in company with the severest blizzard of the winter. Boreas gave it such a shaking up as it has not seen for years. Not only were telegraph poles and wires blown down, but wagons and horses were overturned and trees torn up by the roots all over the city. Of the latter some were large and had stood the storms of nearly half a century.

The storm, by the way, has given fresh life to the demand for underground wires as opposed to aerial telegraph lines. General Greely of the Signal Office said he hoped this storm would carry conviction to Congress that the overhead wires ought to be abolished, except, perhaps, for local work. A strong plea will be made for underground wires when the Government once decides to establish the contemplated postal telegraph system. The expenditure would be very great at first, of course, but in a few years the money saved from the cost of repairs would more than amount to the original outlay, so many think. The only wire in this city which withstood the storm was an underground postal telegraph line running to Baltimore.

The latest tariff bill introduced in the house was Mr. Randall's revenue bill, upon which he has been at work and has employed the efforts of tariff experts for many months. It strikes out the tobacco tax, reduces the whisky tax, and makes but small change in custom's duties. The Republican leaders do not admit that they like it. They will not say that they intend to adopt it. The majority of the Democrats ridicule it.

Again this week the Senate was treated to a batch of petitions praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia. Although no action has been taken on the local option question here, it is understood that several members of the Senate District Committee have that subject under consideration, and that a variety of plans have been suggested. There is a strong sentiment in favor of making every adult resident of Washington, both male and female, eligible to vote upon the question.

The Prohibitionists of the District of Columbia are in no wise discouraged by the rebuff with which the Platt bill for prohibition in the District met lately. They did not expect a very much better fate for the bill at present, but the question will not "down" any more than Banquo's ghost, but will continue to confront Congress and the Executive until victory be won. When Senator Platt presented in the Senate the other day several more petitions in favor of prohibition in the District, he referred to one signed by 374 citizens here, saying that it had been stated by some of the city papers that the petitions sent to the Senate for prohibition in the District had been signed by women and children. He mentioned that the one in his hand from local citizens was signed by many men of high business standing. He added that he was always proud, however, to present such petitions from women.

The last week of this month will be the "Woman's week" in Washington. Prominent women workers, who have in charge the arrangements for the International Council of Women to be held here, have for several weeks been immersed in the preliminary business of the conference. The busiest preparations are in progress, and they are careful to tell you that it is in no sense a woman suffrage convention. Women who never thought specially of woman suffrage are coming to take part, delegates from associations across the Atlantic, all sorts of associations in which women work. It will be one of the most important and influential gatherings of women the world has ever seen.

The evangelization of Washington has been begun in earnest, it would seem, by some of the Christian workers. On last Sunday afternoon the dirty windows of the dingy old Police Court room lighted an unwonted scene. A placard on the railing in front of the building announced that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union would hold a Gospel meeting there at 3 o'clock. When the ladies entered and began the services quite a crowd gathered.

Bishop Paret confirmed thirty-four people at Ascension church on last Sunday. When they walked up to the chancel among their number was a single Chinaman, the first of the race to unite with a Christian church in Washington. He was one of the pupils of the Chinese Sabbath-school which has been in operation at that church for over a year. He united with the other candidates in the solemn renewal of the baptismal vows and kneeled at the chancel rail between a manly looking young American and a young girl dressed in pure white. *

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Brooklyn, Mar. 14, 1888.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Sabbath night I preached in the Greene Ave. Baptist church, Rev. S. G. Nelson, pastor. It rained very hard and the audience was not as large as usual, something over 200. The interest was deep. I am persuaded that we need more preaching of the law.

I am reminded of the preaching of Rev. James Glendenning, at Oldstone, North of Ireland, shortly after the Ulster settlement. A historian says: "He was a man who would never have been chosen by a wise assembly of ministers, nor sent to begin a reformation in this land, for he was little better than distracted, yea, afterwards, did actually distract. Yet this was the Lord's choice to begin the admirable work of God, which I mention on purpose that all men may see how the glory is only the Lord's in making a holy nation in this profane land, and that it was not by might, nor by power, nor by man's wisdom, but by my Spirit, says the Lord. At Oldstone, God made use of him to awaken the consciences of a lewd and secure people thereabouts. Seeing the great lewdness and ungodly sinfulness of the people, he preached to them nothing but law, wrath, and the terrors of God for sin. And in very deed for this only was he fitted, for hardly could he preach any other thing. But, behold the success! For the hearers, finding themselves condemned by the mouth of God speaking in his Word, fell into such anxiety and terror of conscience that they looked on themselves as altogether lost and damned, as those of old who said, 'Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?' And this work appeared not in one single person or two, but multitudes were brought to understand their way, and to cry out, 'What shall we do?' I have seen them myself stricken and swoon with the Word; yea, a dozen in one day carried out of doors as dead, so marvelous was the power of God smiting their hearts for sin, condemning and killing. And this spread through the country to admiration, so that in a manner, as many as came to hear the Word of God went away slain with the words of his mouth. For a short time this work lasted as a sort of disease for which there was no cure, the poor people lying under the spirit of bondage, and the poor man who was the instrument of it, not being sent, it seems, to preach the Gospel so much as the law, they lay for a time in a most deplorable condition, slain for their sin, and knew no remedy." Blair, Livingstone and others came over and preached the Gospel, and a great harvest was gathered.

Dr. Edwards preached in Endfield, Conn., 1838. When he entered the church he found the audience given to levity. His text was "Their foot shall slide in due time." His theme was, Sinners in the hands of an angry God. As he proceeded his hearers were subdued, then alarmed. They caught hold of the backs of the pews and braces and pillars of the house, and many cried out in fear, so sensibly did they feel that they were sliding into ruin. The minister in the pulpit clutched the skirt of Dr. Edward's coat and said, "Mr. Edwards, is not God merciful as well as just?" Five hundred were converted, and the wave rolled on until 30,000 were brought to Christ. "The law is our schoolmaster to lead us to Christ."

Rev. Glendenning was first settled at Carrickfergus. He was advised to leave there because the place was so important and go to Oldstone, a very obscure place. The hand of God was in the change. Edwards was compelled to leave his congregation likewise. God takes care of his banished ones. The Emperor Adrian banished the Apostle John to Patmos, and God gave him the Revelation. Luther was a prisoner for a year in Wartburg castle, and he there translated the Bible into German, the best work of his life. John Knox was banished from Scotland by Queen Mary and God led him to Geneva where he found Calvin. These are important facts for these days, when it is so common for congregations to drive out their faithful pastors. The New York Evangelist has published several articles setting forth how alarmingly prevalent this is becoming. Let no persecuted minister be afraid. What they mean for evil God means for good. Joseph must be gotten into Egypt some way. The Lord has need of him there. "Fear not to go down into Egypt. I will surely go with thee down into Egypt."

Monday's blizzard in New York was unprecedented. All business was suspended, elevated and surface street cars stopped; trains could neither leave nor enter the city; telegraph and telephone wires were down. This is the Word of God: "I will blow upon them." "Is there evil in the city and the Lord hath not done it?" J. M. Foster.

ONE OF THESE DAYS.

One of these days it will all be over,
Sorrow and mirth, and our loss and gain,
Meetings and partings of friend and lover,
Sunshine of pleasure and cloud of pain;
One of these days will our hands be folded,
One of these days will our work be done,
Finished the pattern our thoughts have moulded,
Ended our labors beneath the sun.

One of these days will the heart-ache leave us,
One of these days will the burden drop;
Never again shall the hope deceive us,
Never the hindrance our progress stop.
Freed from the chill of the vain endeavor,
Winged with the power of endless life,
One of these days we'll forget forever
All the defeats of the earthly strife.

One of these days we shall know the reason
Haply of much that perplexes now;
One of these days, in the Lord's good season,
Seal of His peace shall adorn the brow.
Blessed when brought out of tribulation;
Lifted to dwell in the Lord's own light,
Happy to share in the great salvation,
Well may we watch through the passing night.

One of these days the darling faces
Vanished here from the household band,
Haunting yet our familiar places,
Wooing us yet to the better land,
Smiling then in the light of heaven,
Once again will be all our own.
One of these days 'twill to us be given
To stand with our darlings before the throne.

Patiently then our cross we'll carry,
Joyously onward daily fare;
What though the word of the King may tarry,
One of these days He will want us there.
One of these days! Some pearl-bright morning?
One of these days! Some golden noon?
Or the evening gray or the midnight warning?
Even so, Lord, come late or soon.

Come, Beloved, and find us serving,
Come, we cry with our longing soul,
Come to save from our faithless swerving,
Come to touch us and make us whole.
"Till He come!" 'tis our song and story;
One of these days its thrilling chord,
Echoing through the immortal glory,
We shall lift to our risen Lord.

AFRAID OF A SHADOW.

BY MARGARET J. PRESTON.

We were spending Sunday in Torquay, the pretty Devonshire port which stretches so gracefully along the curves of Tor Bay. The place has many associations which made it interesting, apart from all its beautiful scenery of land and shore. It was natural to call to mind that in one of the tall houses, about half-way up the wide street that fronts the quay, Elizabeth Barrett was living, a secluded invalid, when she witnessed from the windows on which we looked the sad catastrophe which left its impress upon her life—that of the drowning before her eyes of her favorite brother and a young friend, by the capsizing of their boat, just shortly after they had stepped from the quay. Those who know anything about the inner history of this beautiful life will remember that so great was the poignancy of the young poet's grief, that for fifteen months she was never able to be removed to her home in London. In this secluded chamber, which overlooked the lovely bay that had engulfed so much that was precious to her, many a tender poem was written which has since helped to build up her world-wide fame.

The readers of Augustus Hare's "Memorial of a Quiet Life,"—a book which has commended itself to such multitudes of American hearts—will not have forgotten the beautiful character of Lucy Stanley, (the youngest sister of Dean Stanley) who was married to the younger brother of Augustus and Julius Hare. Torquay is closely associated with her memory, for during the latter years of her life she lived on her estate near Torquay, and was so conversant with the whole neighborhood that she gives vivid glimpses of its beauties in her many letters scattered through the Memorials. "Abbot's Kerswell," she writes, "the two Tors, and all the high ground one sees from Rockend—wild expanses of moorland heath, distant hills and villages, Teignmouth water, and beautiful Bradley woods; how surpassingly lovely all is!"

It was here, too, that Charlotte Elliott, the author of one of the most popular hymns in the English language, "Just as I am," lived, and here did her noble work. Devonshire is also closely associated with the memory of Augustus Toplady; and not far from Torquay is said to be the spot where he wrote his immortal hymn, "Rock of Ages." We, therefore, had poetic and Christian associations filling our minds as we walked about the streets of this pretty Devonshire town. To me Torquay had a tender memory still; for in one of its quiet cemeteries lay buried a lovely young English friend, whose going hence had left the world less bright for those who stayed behind.

The air was palpitating, that fair Sunday morning, with the rich melody of the Sunday bells; we joined a great throng of people and were swept along in their current to one of the largest dissenting chapels of the place. We soon found ourselves in a comfortable and substantial house of worship, which the good Anglicans refuse to allow the name of church. The house was filled with a quiet and orderly congregation. The regular minister was absent, and in his place officiated a young Scotch clergyman, who gave us one of the most delightful sermons I ever heard preached in a foreign land. His manner was simplicity itself; but he had a vivid and dramatic way of putting things that made each listener feel as if he was singling him out and addressing himself specially to him. His text was the twenty-third Psalm, of which he gave a fine running commentary. When he came to the verse, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death," he abruptly paused and said, "I am a Scotchman; let me tell you a little incident that occurred not long ago in the Scottish parish where I was laboring." He leaned from the pulpit and, with the sweetest of Scotch accents began, in a low, tender voice:

"I was sitting in my study one Saturday evening, when a message came to me that one of the godliest among the shepherds who tended their flocks upon the slopes of our Highland hills was dying, and wanted to see the minister. Without loss of time I crossed the wide heath to his comfortable little cottage. When I entered the low room I found the old shepherd propped up with pillows and breathing with such difficulty that it was apparent he was near his end.

"'Jean,' he said to his wife, 'gie the minister a stool and leave us for a bit, for I wad see the minister alone.'

"As soon as the door had closed he turned the most pathetic pair of gray eyes upon me I had ever looked into and said, in a voice shaken with emotion, 'Minister, I'm dying, and—and—I'm afraid!'

"I began at once to repeat the strongest promises with which God's Word furnishes us; but in the midst of them he stopped me—

"'I ken them a',' he said mournfully, 'I ken them a'; but somehow they dinna gie me comfort.'

"'Do you not believe them?'

"'Wi' a' my heart!' he replied earnestly.

"'Where, then, is there any room for fear, with such a saving faith?'

"'For a' that, Minister, I'm afraid—I'm afraid!'

"I took up the well-worn Bible which lay on his bed and turned to the psalm which I have read to you to-day. 'You remember the twenty-third Psalm?' I began.

"'Remember it?' he said vehemently, 'I kenned it lang afore ye were born; ye need na' read it; I've conned it a thousand times on the hillside.'

"'But there is one verse which you have not taken in.'

"He turned upon me with a half reproachful and even stern look. 'Did I na' tell ye I kenned it every word lang afore ye were born?'

"I slowly repeated the verse, 'Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me."

"'You have been a shepherd all your life, and you have watched the heavy shadows pass over the valleys and over the hills, hiding for a little while all the light of the sun. Did these shadows ever frighten you?'

"'Frighten me?' he said quickly, 'Na, na! Davie Donaldson has Covenanter's bluid in his veins; neither shadow nor substance could weel frighten him.'

"'But did these shadows never make you believe that you would not see the sun again—that it was gone forever?'

"'Na, na, I couldna be sic a simpleton as that.'

"'Nevertheless, that is just what you are doing now.' He looked at me with incredulous eyes.

"'Yes,' I continued, 'the shadow of death is over you, and it hides for a little the Sun of Righteousness, who shines all the same behind it; but it's only a shadow; remember, that's what the Psalmist calls it; a shadow that will pass, and when it has passed, before you will be the everlasting hills in their unclouded glory.'

"The old shepherd covered his face with his trembling hands, and for a few minutes maintained an unbroken silence; then, letting them fall straight before him on the coverlet, he said, as if musing to himself, 'Aweel, aweel! I hae conned that verse a thousand times amang the heather, and I never understood it so afore—afraid of a shadow! afraid of a shadow!' Then, turning upon me a face now bright with an almost supernatural radiance, he exclaimed, lifting his hands reverently to heaven, 'Aye, aye, I see it a' now! Death is only a shadow—a shadow with Christ behind it—a shadow that will pass—na, na, I'm afraid nae mair!' "

It is not possible that any words of mine should have power to reproduce to the eye or mind of the reader the tone, the attitude and the vivid rendering of this little incident. But as the people wended their way home that Sunday through the streets of Torquay, not a few, I am sure, repeated to themseves the words of the old shepherd, and gathered comfort therefrom: "Na, na, I'm afraid nae mair!"—Christian Intelligencer.

Dr. Talmage says: "I have come to believe that anything is possible if God helps since what I saw at Beth-Shan faith cure in London, England, two summers ago. While the religious service was going on, Rev. Dr. Boardman—glorious man! since gone to his heavenly rest—was telling the scores of sick people present that Christ was there as of old to heal all diseases, and that, if they would only believe, their sickness would depart. I saw a woman near me, with hand and arm twisted by rheumatism, and her wrist was fiery with inflammation, and it looked like those cases of chronic rheumatism which we have all seen and sympathized with, cases beyond all human healing. At the preacher's reiteration of the words: 'Will you believe? Do you believe? Do you believe now?' I heard this poor sick woman say, with an emphasis which sounded through the building: 'I do believe.' And then she laid her twisted arm and hand out as straight as your arm and hand or mine. If I had seen one rise from the dead, I would not have been much more thrilled. Since then I believe that God will do anything in answer to our prayer and in answer to our faith, and he can heal our bodies, and if our soul is all twisted and misshapen of revenge and hate and inflamed with sinful proclivity, he can straighten that also and make it well and clean."—Ex.

THE STONE LAMB.

A German clergyman, Pastor O'Feuke, tells a story in a very interesting book of his about things which have really happened to him, or which he has met with in his travels. In 1865 he stood before the beautiful Roman Catholic Chapel of Werden an der Ruhr, in Germany, waiting for the key to be brought that the door might be unlocked for them to enter. While they waited they saw something on the ledge of the roof which they found to be a carved stone lamb, and began to wonder what it meant up there. So they asked an old woman who was hobbling along a little way off if she could tell them about it, and she replied, "Yes," and then related why it had been placed in that strange place.

"Many, many years ago," she said, "where that lamb now stands, a man was busy repairing the roof of the chapel who had to sit in a basket fastened by a rope as he worked. Well, he was working in this manner one day when suddenly the rope which held the basket gave way, and he fell down, down from the great height to the ground below! Of course every one who saw the dreadful accident expected that the man would be killed, especially as the ground just there was covered with sharp stones and rocks which the workmen were using for building. But to their great astonishment he rose from the ground and stood up quite uninjured! And that was how it happened; a poor lamb had wandered quite up to the side of the chapel, in search of the sweet young grass which sprung up among the stones, and the man had fallen on the soft body of the lamb—it had saved his life, for he had escaped with the mere fright, and with not so much as a finger broken. But the poor lamb was killed by his heavy fall upon it. So, out of pure gratitude, the man had the stone lamb carved and set up as a lasting memento of his escape from so fearful a death, and of what he owed to the poor lamb."

Do you not think this is a beautiful story? Does it not remind you of the story of the Lord Jesus, the Lamb of God, who was slain for us that we might live forever? Never forget that "he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities." And let us copy the poor man's example in being truly thankful, and showing we are so. He could not do anything more for the lamb which had so wonderfully saved his life than make a little monument or memento of what it had done. But there is much that we can do for the Lamb of God who was slain for us. We can love him for what he has done, and we can give him the one thing he wants from us. Do you ask what it is for which even the God of glory longs, he who has all the riches of the world, and to whom heaven and earth belong? He says: "My son, give me thine heart." —Reformed Church Missionary.

ELEPHANTS AT WORK.

Lazy and clumsy-looking as the elephant appears in our menageries, where it is merely an object of curiosity, in Asia it is as useful an animal as the horse, and is, indeed, employed in a greater variety of ways.

There are few, if any, tasks which a horse can be trusted to perform without careful and constant guidance; whereas the elephant is frequently given as much independence of action as a man would have for the same work. This is notably the case in the lumber-yards of Rangoon and Maulmein, where the entire operation of moving and piling the heavy timber is performed by male elephants without any special supervision by the keepers.

The logs to be moved are teakwood, which is very heavy. They are cut into lengths of twenty feet, with a diameter or perhaps a square, of about a foot. An elephant will go to a log, kneel known, thrust his tusks under the middle of it, curl his trunk over it, test it to see that it is evenly balanced, and then rise with it and easily carry it to the pile which is being made. Placing the log carefully on the pile in its proper place, the sagacious animal will step back a few paces and measure with his eye to determine whether or not the log needs pushing one way or another. It will then make any necessary alteration of position. In this way, without a word of command from its mahout, or driver, it will go on with its work.

To do any special task, it must, of course, be directed by the mahout; but it is marvelous to see how readily this great creature comprehends its instructions, and how ingeniously it makes use of its strength. If a log too heavy to be carried is to be moved a short distance, the elephant will bend low, place his great head against the end of the log and then with a sudden exertion of strength and weight throw his body forward and fairly push the log along; or, to move the log any great distance, he will encircle it with a chain and drag his load behind him.

As a rule, however, the work of dragging is done by the female elephants, since, having no tusks, they cannot carry logs as the male elephants do. A man could hardly display more judgment in the adjustment of the rope or chain around a log, nor could a man with his two hands tie and untie knots more skillfully than they do with their trunks.—St. Nicholas.

NEVER SWEAR.

1. It is mean. A boy of high moral standing would almost as soon steal a sheep as to swear.
2. It is vulgar—altogether too low for a decent boy.
3. It is cowardly—implying a fear of not being believed or obeyed.
4. It is ungentlemanly. A gentleman, according to Webster, is a genteel man—well-bred, refined. Such a man will no more swear than go into the street to throw mud with a chimney-sweep.
5. It is indecent—offensive to delicacy, and extremely unfit for human ears.
6. It is foolish. "Want of decency is want of sense."
7. It is abusive—to the mind which conceives the oath, to the tongue which utters it, and to the person at whom it is aimed.
8. It is venomous—showing a boy's heart to be a nest of vipers; and every time he swears one of them sticks out its head.
9. It is contemptible—forfeiting the respect of all the wise and the good.
10. It is wicked—violating the divine law, and provoking the displeasure of Him who will not hold him guiltless who takes his name in vain.—Baltimore Methodist.

Little Molly was indulging in the luxury of a copious crying spell, when the spectacle of a military procession in the street dammed the fountain of her grief. A sparkle came into her eyes, and her lips uttered exclamations of delight. But the relief was but momentary. No sooner had the procession vanished than she was heard remarking to herself: "What was I crying about—what was I crying about? O, now I know." [Goes on boo-hooing for half an hour.]—Harper's Bazar.

TEMPERANCE.

THE FAILURE OF HIGH LICENSE IN CHICAGO.

The high license law was enacted June 15, 1883, and went into effect July 1, 1883. The $52 per year licenses ran out June 16, 1883. Before the new $500 license law took effect, the saloon-keepers were allowed to take out licenses for the balance of the fiscal year ending May 1, 1884, for $103. From May 1, 1884, until May 1, 1886, a period of two years, a beer license for $150 was issued. These are included in the total number given for those years. Since May, 1, 1886, all licenses issued have been at the uniform rate of $500 per year.

Year.	Amt. of License Fee.	No. of Saloons.	Bbls. of Beer Consumed.	Drunks and Disorderlies.	Total Arrests.
1882	$ 52	3,349	872 228	18.045	32,8 0
1883	103	3.682	963.652	21,416	37,187
1884	500	3,336	1,055,732	23 080	39,134
1885	500	3,584	1,115,628	25,407	40,998
1886	500	*3,587	1,340,000	26,067	41,261
1887	500	†4,193	1,674,146	27,632	46,505

*For the last period of the fiscal year ending May 1, 1887.
†For the second period of the fiscal year ending Dec. 1, 1887. Those issued for the first period ending August 1, 1887, were 3,773.

This makes the showing for high license still worse than before, based upon these official figures, which I obtained myself from the Police Headquarters.

Increase of population from 1882 to 1887, 35 per cent; increase in number of arrests for drunkenness and disorder during the same period, 53 per cent; increase in total of arrests, 41 per cent.

The figures in reference to the consumption of beer for the year 1882, up to and including the year 1885, I obtained from the Chicago Inter-Ocean of July 30, 1886. They were carefully prepared by that paper, and have been republished many times since, and never questioned to my knowledge. The amount consumed in Chicago was arrived at by adding to the total product of the Chicago breweries to the amount manufactured in Milwaukee and sold in Chicago. Some of the beer manufactured in Chicago is shipped outside—perhaps about ten per cent of the total amount—but it is estimated that the amount consumed in Chicago, which is made at Waukegan, Joliet and other places outside of Milwaukee, is a fair offset to this amount.

The Assistant Secretary of the Chicago and Milwaukee Brewers' Association, who keeps an office in Chicago for the Association, and devotes his whole time to the business of the Association, is probably the best authority on this subject of any one. In order to get the most reliable information about the amount consumed in Chicago, I applied to him. Whilst he was very polite to me, he declined to give me the information I sought, because, he said, he feared that his employers would not like it. But he, however, admitted in the course of the conversation that if I could ascertain the amount of Milwaukee beer sold in Chicago, and then should add that to the total amount produced by the Chicago breweries, the sum total would be a substantially correct aggregate of the beer consumed here.

I found in the Chicago Tribune's annual trade review, published January 2, 1887, just the information I needed, to show me the amount consumed in 1886 and 1887. This trade review is prepared with great care by the Tribune, as I found by interviewing the commercial editor of that paper. The figures I give in the above table for the years 1886 and 1887 were taken from this trade review, which showed the total amount of Milwaukee beer sold here and the amount made here. I think the figures, therefore, can be depended upon.

In order that I might satisfy myself thoroughly of the correctness of these figures as to the consumption of beer in Chicago, I called upon the editor of The Western Brewer, a monthly publication devoted to the beer interests, published here. He showed me his published statistics of the beer made by the Chicago brewers in the last ten years, up to May 1, 1887. His tables are only brought down to May, 1887, and do not show for the calendar year, but for the fiscal year ending May 1, each year. Here are the figures for the number of barrels of beer made in Chicago from May 1, 1881, to May 1, 1887:

645,052	676,553	743,458	819,410	873,995	1,172,827

He estimated that of the total number of barrels shown by his table to have been manufactured in Chicago from May 1, 1886, to May 1, 1887, 1,000,000 of them were consumed in Chicago. He did not have the statistics of the amount sold in Chicago which was made outside. But he told me that he thought the amount consumed last year in Chicago would be between 1,300,000 and 1,400,000 barrels. But taking his figures of the amount made in Chicago in 1882 and the amount made in 1886–7 (to May 1, 1887) it shows an increase of 81 per cent. The greater part of this last year, as well as in previous years, was consumed in Chicago.

My estimate of 450 glasses of beer to the barrel is about 25 per cent less than the number of average glasses (foam and all) which a saloon-keeper expects to get out of a barrel. But I allowed this 25 per cent to offset the "bucket trade" of saloons where beer is sold for less than five cents. The brewers received for the 1,674,146 barrels consumed here last year, $6 per barrel, or $10,044,876. Three hundred per cent advance on the brewer's price by the saloon-keeper, who has to pay his high license tax, rent and bar-keeper's salary, and support himself out of his profits, is not an unreasonable estimate. They expect to get $24 out of every four kegs, or one barrel. This would make the total cost to the consumers of over $40,000,000. I think my estimate of the amount—$37,668—is inside the mark.

SAMUEL W. PACKARD.

PLAIN TALK FROM BISHOP IRELAND.

The Baltimore Catholic Mirror, in a report of a lecture by Rt. Rev. Bishop Ireland of St. Paul before 1,100 people in St. John's church, that city, gives his words as follows:—"It is my judgment that nothing is destined to elevate the Irish people and Catholic church more than this total abstinence movement. Make Irishmen teetotalers and you make the greatest people on earth. A new era is dawning for the Irish race, for Ireland sober is Ireland free. Out of the eighty Nationalists in Parliament, forty are teetotalers. Here the Irishman is peculiarly fortunate. There is no prejudice against his faith or nationality. The American people look to the Irish element for help and succor. Where socialistic and communistic attempts have been made the Irish have been on the right side of law and order. But while some Irishmen have succeeded here to lofty positions there have been too few for our numbers, and it's on account of drink. You won't find many Irish names over dry goods stores and banks, but placarded over the dens of hell—the saloons—you'll find many names of old Irish kings and chieftains. I tell you, Irishmen are made for something better than to sell poison over a counter. Yet these men get rich and strong, and run politics, and become pillars of the church. I was asked once to preach on St. Patrick's Day, and I felt proud of the invitation. Oh! I gave it to whisky and I horrified the pastor. He said: 'You'll ruin me; the pillars of my church are liquor-sellers.' After the sermon I went to see the parade, and I found every marshal a saloon-keeper. To-day, in that town, out of 300 or 400 saloon-keepers but three or four are Irish. You talk of the power of the President or the Mayor. Nonsense, the power is the saloon-keeper. How can the people hold us in high esteem when this is the case? Talk about Irish landlords' tyranny. He will at least leave a few potatoes, but the saloon-keeper takes every cent. Look how many Irishmen are brought up every day in the police court. Look at the almshouses. Whisky does it. 'Oh,' you say, 'these are not Irish. They assume Irish names.' You must go and talk to them; you'll find them the genuine stuff. We want the help of the women. I believe in a wife being dutiful, but when a man comes home smelling of whisky she ought to make things as lively as possible."—Irish World.

The European countries spend their millions on armies and navies, but spend more on intoxicating drinks. A German statistician, in speaking of the liquor traffic, says: Germany spends between 500,000,000 and 600,000,000 francs annually for her armies, but 2,200,000,000 francs for drinks—i. e., more than four times as much. The French spend three times as much for liquors as for their soldiers, and the English four times as much, and the Belgians over ten times as much. Truly such figures furnish a good temperance argument.

In round numbers the consumption of distilled spirits, domestic and imported, in this country, is shown to have increased from 43,000,000 gallons in 1840 to 72,000,000 in 1886; of wine, from 4,800,000 gallons to 22,000,000; and of malt liquors, from 23,000,000 to 642,000,000. The consumption per capita during the same period decreased as regards distilled spirits from about 2¼ gallons to about 1¼ gallons; while it increased, as regards wines, from .29 to .38 gallons, and of malt liquors, from less than 1½ to more than 11 gallons.

A poisonous distillation from potatoes, known among the negroes as "Death," is exported from the Christian ports of Bremen and Hamburg for sale among the barbarians of Africa.

Wheaton Theological Seminary. But soon, as a soldier for Jesus, I must return to my labor in Iowa.

Friends of reform in Iowa, I appeal to you as patriots, philanthropists and Christians to come up to the help of the Lord, and aid in the liberation of your fellow citizens from the despotism of the lodge. Why should intelligent freemen, who have a constitutional right to equality before the law, submit to to be ruled by secret rings and clans?

While at Chestnut Hill, Henry county, I stopped with a God-fearing man, who, in other days, was ensnared into the lodge, and became an Odd-fellow. He spoke of a time when he had a suit in the circuit court. He sought a private interview with the judge, who was an Odd-fellow, and asked for legal counsel. The judge, ignoring his oath of office, espoused the cause of his brother Odd-fellow, who, following the advice, gained his suit.

Believing that his cause was just, my friend was not shocked at the time (as he afterwards was when his eyes were opened) at seeing the judge, under the mystic power of his clannish obligations and associations, converted into an advocate. But the following circumstance was blessed of God to break the spell of the lodge demon, and to stimulate him to assert his liberty as a freeman and a Christian. He was an Abolitionist,and was wont to shelter and aid the panting fugitive who was fleeing from his master to the protection of the British flag.

One night there came to his door a dusky son of toil,who, with his eye fixed upon the North Star,fled from his oppressor. He fed and sheltered him; gave him directions ,and sent him on his way. Following his trail came the slave's master and a fellow planter with him. They inquired for the fugitive, but elicited no information. The master then made himself known as an Odd-fellow; and constrained by his obligation to his fellow clansman, my informant betrayed the confidence of the fleeing slave, and gave such information to his pursuers as led to his capture and return to bondage. From this circumstance his moral nature received a shock that awoke his slumbering conscience and caused him to throw off the yoke of Odd-fellowship and assert his liberty as a man and a Christian to walk in all good conscience before God, unbiased by the obligations of a secret clan.

Men and brethren of Iowa, you will not see justice perverted, moral obligations nullified and Christ supplanted, and not come to the rescue. Do not wait to be called upon by the agent, but send in your donations to the treasurer of the Iowa Association to aid in carrying forward the reform work in the State.

Be as prompt as you can in paying your subscriptions to the Cynosure and to the State work. Send the money as soon as possible to James Harvey, Pleasant Plain, Jefferson county, Iowa, the treasurer of the Iowa Association, that we may not be hindered by lack of funds from vigorously prosecuting the reform work.

Let those who wish lectures or who will aid in the distribution of literature, or in getting subscribers to the Cynosure, write me to Wheaton, Dupage county, Ill. By personal effort, by liberal contributions, and by united and believing prayer we shall, with the weapon of truth made mighty by the Holy Ghost, pull down these strongholds of Satan, whose name is "legion." Your agent and fellow-worker,

C. F. HAWLEY.

A HEARTY RESPONSE FROM PITTSBURGH.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., March 15, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I mail herewith thirty-five new yearly subscriptions, thirty of which have been taken in this city and Allegheny. I have but commenced on the work that is much needed, and might be done here. While visiting friends I have not been idle, but have endeavored to use opportunities afforded, as .results will show. The old saying "work before pleasure," often conveys a wrong idea. To the Christian reformer work is pleasure. The humblest work if done to the glory of God will not fail of its reward.

Owing somewhat to the storm which commenced on Sabbath and continued until last evening my lecture on Monday was not largely attended, some 150 perhaps were present. A few sympathizers with the lodge present became angry, so it was not without results.

Mr. J. H. Hanna, a gentleman who has done much for our cause in other days, made himself known to me, and is now endeavoring to arrange other lectures for next week in United Presbyterian churches. There seem to be a large number of lecturers here at this time. The interest of reformers is chiefly centered in temperance work. Licenses are granted the saloons every May. It is hoped under the present State law to close a large number this year.

Mrs. S. and I start for New Alexandria, Westmoreland Co., in the morning where we spend Sabbath. I think a lecture has been arranged for Monday evening. Returning early next week I will fill any appointments that may be made here before returning to Ohio. W. B. STODDARD.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Moody and Sankey revival meetings began in Sioux City, Iowa, Wednesday, Feb. 22, in the old skating rink, which was packed at all the meetings, and hundreds were unable to gain admission. Over two hundred clergymen from neighboring towns were in attendance.

—There are now in Germany 3 000 Sunday-schools, with 30,000 teachers and 300,000 scholars, where twenty-five years ago there was not one. This important statement was made at a recent meeting of the Foreign Sunday-school Association in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church of New York. Here is a grand field for work on the continent of Europe.

—Under the direction of Dr. L. W. Munhall, a series of union revival meetings has just been held in Buffalo. The first services were on Sunday, February 5, and the last Tuesday evening March 6. Four churches united in the work—the Central Presbyterian, the Hudson Street Baptist, the Asbury Methodist and the First Congregational. The meetings were in the first-named church, the largest Protestant church edifice in the city. Dr. Munhall was assisted for the first ten days by Professor and Mrs. Turner, and during the last two weeks by the Wilson family, all most attractive and helpful singers. This form of union revival meetings is something new in Buffalo city and there was evident, for a few days, a feeling of unfamiliarity and curiosity. This soon gave place to an earnest spirit, and the common judgment of pastors and people is that the work has been helpful. Over six hundred "dedicative cards" have been received expressing preference for seventy-one different churches. The afternoon Bible Readings were a marked feature of the movement. The attendance at all the services was large, and on Sundays the ushers were obliged more than once to close the doors.

—To the great regret af his congregation, the Rev. Moses Smith, D.D., of the Woodward Avenue Congregational church of Detroit, Mich., has resigned his pastorate. Since Dr. Smith has had charge of the church 325 persons have been welcomed into its fellowship, and it is now the largest church of the denomination in Detroit.

—The colored Baptists of Tennessee do not propose to allow anti-Prohibitionists to occupy any of their pulpits. Their State Convention has adopted the following resolution: "Resolved, That no minister be allowed to preach the Gospel who fought Prohibition during the late canvass. They will not be recognized hereafter by this Convention."

—A native merchant in Foo Chow, who has in his employment one thousand Chinamen, was converted. A total cessation from Sunday trade being insisted upon the missionaries as a test of church fellowship, Mr. Ahok gladly complied. Although his non-Christian partners in business naturally objected, he went so far as to offer on his own account full seven days wages, to all who would abstain from Sabbath toil, and who would give attention to the religion that he had learned to prize so much.
